The next meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist South-Western Association will be held with the North Hampton Church, Clark Co., Ohio, commencing on the fifth-day before the second Sabbath in October, 1846. A full delegation from all the churches is desired. And we would say to the brethren of our sister Associations, that we greatly need and earnestly solicit their attendance, counsel, and prayers.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

ELIHU BURRITT, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in ADVANCE.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Miscellaneous.

CHEER YE EACH OTHER.

Cheer ye each other with words
Of mild and pleasing intent,
To strengthen the loosening chords
Of life with delight and content;
The smile of thy sister recall—
Believe thou thy brother's alloy;
Be loving, and throw over all
Thy sweetest emotions of joy.

Yes, cheer one another along
In paths ye delight to pursue—
A word to dishearten is wrong,
To those who are striving to do.
A breath is the pinion of thought,
And thought is the breath of the soul,
And spirit by spirit is taught
With good or with evil control.

Speak cheeringly unto the sad.
The wounded in heart and the poor—
A word of affection makes glad,
And helps the wronged to endure.
Disturb not the hope of thy friend,
If sorrow it maketh to flee,
But keep up the dream to the end—
In joy let his spirit go free.

Deal gently with others that err—
'Tis mercy that saveth the lost,
And all that thy love may confer
Can never God's bounty exhaust.
O cheer one another along,
And joy and affection impart—
Unkindness of spirit is wrong,
But blessed the cheerful in heart.

Each life is a link in the chain
Of kindred humanity's race,
And sympathy softens the pain,
And helps to bear it with grace.
Then cheer one another in gloom,
Since cheerfulness brighteneth care;
'Tis a short, narrow road to the tomb—
O cheer one another till there.

ANXIETIES OF THE SAILOR'S LIFE.

BY REV. MR. ABBOTT, OF NANTUCKET.

A man was speaking a few days ago of the emotions with which he was overwhelmed, when he bade adieu to his family on his last voyage. The ship in which he was to sail was at Edgartown on Martha's Vineyard. The packet was at the wharf which was to convey him from Nantucket to the ship. He went down in the morning and saw all his private sea stores stowed away in the sloop and then returned to his home to take leave of his wife and children. His wife was sitting at the fireside, struggling in vain to restrain her tears. She had an infant a few months old in her arms, and with her foot was rocking the cradle in which lay another little daughter about three years of age, with her cheeks flushed with a burning fever. No pen can describe the anguish of such a parting. It is almost like the bitterness of death. The departing father imprinted a kiss upon the cheek of his child. Four years will pass away ere he will again take that child in his arms. Leaving his wife sobbing in anguish, he closes the door of his house behind him. Four years must elapse ere he can cross that threshold again. One sea captain upon this island has passed but seven years out of forty-one upon the land.

A lady said to me a few evenings ago, I have been married eleven years, and counting all the days my husband has been at home since our marriage, it amounts to but three hundred and sixty days. He is now absent, having been gone fifteen months; and two years must undoubtedly elapse before his wife can see his face, and when he shall return, it will be merely a visit to his family for a few months, when he will again bid them adieu for another four years' absence.

I asked the lady the other day how many letters she wrote to her husband during his last voyage. "One hundred," was the answer. "And how many did he receive?" "Six." The invariable rule is to write by every ship that leaves this port or New Bedford, or any other port that may be heard of for the Pacific Ocean. And yet the chances are very small that any two ships will meet on this boundless expanse. It sometimes happens that a ship returns, when those on board have not heard one word from their families during the whole period of their absence. Imagine, then, the feelings of a husband and father, who returns to the harbor of Nantucket, after the separation of forty-eight months, during which time he has heard no tidings whatever from his home. He sees the boat pushing off from the wharves which is to bring him the tidings of weal or woe. He stands pale and trembling pacing the deck with emotions which he in vain endeavors to conceal. A friend on the boad greets him with a smile, and says, "Captain, your family are all well." Or perhaps he says, "Captain I have heavy news for you, your wife died two years and a half ago."

A young man left this Island last summer leaving in his quiet home a young and beautiful wife, and an infant child. The wife and child are both in the grave. But the husband knows not, and probably will not know of it for some months to come. He perhaps falls asleep every night thinking of the loved ones left at his fireside, little imagining that they are both cold in death.

On a bright summer afternoon, the telegraph announces that a Cape Horn ship had appeared in the horizon, and immediately the stars and stripes of our national banner are unfurled from our flag staff sending a wave of emotion through the town. Many families are hoping that this is the ship in which their friends are to return, and all are hoping for tidings from the absent. Soon the name of the ship is announced. And then their is an eager contention with the boys to be the first bearer of the joyful tidings to the wife of the captain. For which service a silver dollar is the established and invariable fee. And who can describe the feelings which must then agitate the bosom of the wife? Perhaps she has heard no tidings from the ship for more than a year. Trembling with excitement, she dresses herself to meet her husband. "Is he alive," she says to herself, "or am I a widow, and the poor children orphans?" She walks about the room unable to compose herself sufficiently to sit down; eagerly is she looking out of the window and down the street. She sees a man with hurried steps turn the corner, and a little boy hold of his hand. Yes, it is he. And her little son has gone down to the boat and found his father. Or, perhaps, instead of this, she sees two other neighbors returning slowly and sadly, and directing their steps to her door. It is the knell of her husband's death. And she falls senseless to the floor, as they tell her that her husband has long since been entombed in the fathomless ocean.

This is not fiction. These are not extreme cases which the imagination creates. They are facts of continued occurrence—facts which awaken emotions to which no pen can do justice.

A few weeks ago a ship returned to this island, bringing the news of another ship that was nearly filled with oil, that all on board were well, and that she might be expected in a neighboring port in such a month. The wife of the captain resides in Nantucket, and early in the month, with a heart throbbing with affection and hope, she went to greet her husband on his return. At length the ship appeared, dropped her anchor in the harbor, and the friends of the lady went to the ship to escort the husband to the wife from whom he had so long been separated. Soon they sadly returned with the tidings that her husband had been seized with the coast fever, upon the island of Madagascar, and when about a week out, on his return home, he died and was committed to his ocean burial. A few days after I called on the widow and little daughter in their destined home of bereavement and anguish.

THE HOME OF COWPER.

All who are familiar with Cowper's life and poetry will be pleased with a picture of his favorite residence at Olney, which we suppose to be taken from Howitt's 'Visits to remarkable places in England.'

Cowper's house at Olney is still standing in the same ruinous state so humorously described by the poet; his parlor is occupied as a girl's school. The summer house in the garden—the 'boudoir,' in which the gentle bard used to sit coining his verses, also remains, its walls covered with the names of visitors. Cowper's residence in the neighboring village of Weston has been much altered, but is still beautiful, with a profusion of roses in front. There is, however, an ale house on each side of the poetic mansion, and the village stocks are opposite the windows! It was 'Royal Oak Day,' 29th of May, when we visited Weston; and a graceless rogue of a rustic was at the time undergoing punishment in the stocks. The young men parading the village with oak-apples in their hats, were nearly all intoxicated. Happily, thought we, Cowper no longer exists to witness this desecration of his beloved Weston! We met with an old family servant of the poet, named Sally Brown, who talked with affectionate interest of the 'poor dear gentleman,' and the unhappy malady under which he labored. Cowper and Mrs. Unwin are spoke of by the villagers, as 'Squire Cowper and Madam Unwin!' 'Such is fame!' The mansion house of the Throgmortons, celebrated by Cowper, has been razed to the ground. The proprietor resides in another country; and to 'save expenses,' the old seat of the family was pulled down. The 'wilderness' is overgrown with weeds; and the 'alchove,' carved with many a name, has fallen into equal neglect. The bells of Olney were sounding sweetly in the distance, when we paced this deserted spot, by the colonnade of elm described by the poet. The noisy, industrious rooks were cawing among the woods; and the silent Ouse, 'pursuing its sinuous course' among the rich meadows, was just visible below Clifton Tower. Compared with the scenery around Huntingdon, the neighborhood of Olney might well appear a sort of poetical paradise. The whole country sseems consecrated to the memory of Cowper; and there, 'if we may unbodied choose a sanctuary,' his gentle spirit is undoubtedly still a visitant.

HOW TO GET ALONG WITH NEIGHBORS.

"I once had a neighbor, who, though a clever man, came to me one day and said, 'Esquire White, I want you to come and get your geese away.' 'Why,' said I, 'what are my geese a doing?' 'They pick my pigs ears when they are eating, and drive them away, and I will not have it.' 'What can I do?' said I. 'You must yoke them.' 'That I have not time to do now,' said I; 'I do not see but they must run.' 'If you do not take care of them, I shall,' said the clever shoemaker in anger. 'What do you say, Esq. White?' 'I cannot take care of them now, but I will pay you for all damages.' 'Well,' said he, 'you will find that a hard thing, I guess.'

So off he went, and I heard a terrible squalling among the geese. The next news of the geese was, that three of them were missing. My children went and found them terribly mangled and dead, and thrown into the bushes.

'Now,' said I, 'all keep still, and let me punish him.' In a few days, the shoemaker's hogs broke into my corn. I saw them, but let them remain a long while. At last I drove them out, and picked up the corn which they had torn down, and fed them with it in the road. By this time the shoemaker came in great haste after them.

'Have you seen any thing of my hogs?' said he. 'Yes, sir, you will find them yonder, eating some corn which they tore down in my field.' 'In your field?' 'Yes, sir,' said I, 'hogs love corn, you know—they were made to eat.' 'How much mischief have they done?' 'O, not much,' said I.

Well, off he went to look, and estimated the damage to be equal to a bushel and a half of corn.

'Oh, no,' said I, 'it can't be.' 'Yes,' said the shoemaker, 'and I will pay you every cent of damage.' 'No,' replied I, 'you shall pay me nothing. My geese have been a great trouble to you.'

The shoemaker blushed, and went home. The next winter, when we came to settle, the shoemaker determined to pay for my corn. 'No,' said I, 'I shall take nothing.'

After some talk, we parted; but in a day or two, I met him on the road, and fell into conversation in the most friendly manner. But when I started on, he seemed loth to move, and I paused. For a moment both of us were silent. At last, he said, 'I have something laboring on my mind.' 'Well, what is it?' 'Those geese; I killed three of your geese, and shall never rest until you know how I feel. I am sorry.' And the tears came into his eyes.

'Oh, well,' said I, 'never mind, I suppose my geese were provoking.'

I never took any thing of him for it; but whenever my cattle broke into his field after this, he seemed glad—because he could show how patient he could be.

'Now,' said the narrator, 'conquer yourself, and you can conquer with kindness where you can conquer in no other way.'

GERMAN BURIAL CUSTOMS.

The German ceremonial of interment is complicated and minute, and all persons of high birth are expected to conform to it in every particular. Among the rites which precede burial, is one which, trying as it cannot fail to prove to the principal actor, must, nevertheless, greatly tend to tranquilize the minds of the survivors. It is necessary that we should describe this.

For four-and-twenty hours the corpse remains under the roof where the death has taken place, and while there, all the affecting offices necessary to its final burial are performed. This time elapsed, it is carried to the cemetery, and laid in its winding sheet, upon a bed in an inner apartment of the low stone building to which, in our description of the death-valley of Nienberg, we have already made allusion. This solitary erection consists only of two rooms. That in which the body is deposited is called the Hall of Resurrection, and contains no other furniture than the bed itself, and a bell-rope, the end of which is placed in the hand of the corpse. This cord is attached to a bell which rings in the next room, and which is thence called the Chamber of the Bell. Thus, should it occur that the friends of an individual may have been deceived, and have mistaken lethargy for death, and that the patient should wake during rhe night, (for the body must remain all night in this gloomy refuge!) the slightest movement he may make necessarily rings the bell, and he obtains instant help. It is customary for the nearest relative to keep this dreary watch; and from a beautiful sentiment, which must almost tend to reconcile the watcher to his ghostly task, he is fated to watch there alone, that it may be he who calls back the ebbing life, and that none may share in a joy so holy and so deep—a joy, moreover, so rare and so unhoped for.

THE INDIAN AND THE WOLF.—The Cincinnati Evening Welcome, in opposing the license law, relates the following anecdote:—We remember reading an anecdote some years since, of an old Indian, who, in his hunting excursions, came across a she wolf, prowling along the edge of a dismal swamp. Although within rifle shot, he reserved his fire, and chose rather to track her den, where he captured three cubs. The government was then paying a bounty on wolf-scalps; and accordingly scalping the cubs, he presented himself before the proper authorities, and pocketed the bounty money. For many years he followed up this system, selling the scalps of the cubs, when presenting himself one morning at the office of the supervisors, the astonished clerk asked—

"Is it possible there are so many wolves in your country?"

"Yes," was the laconic reply.

"In the same swamp?"

"Yes."

"Do you ever see the old she wolf?"

"Yes."

"Well, it is her that does the mischief—why don't you shoot her?"

"Because, me no get any more cubs, then."

Just so it is with our City Council. Year after year they saddle upon us, under the license law, a host of destructive agents, in the shape of groggeries, for the purpose of raising revenue to pay off city officers, &c.

A ROYAL QUANDARY.—On the first consignment of Seidlitz powders to the capital of Delhi, the monarch was deeply interested in the accounts of the refreshing bevarage. A box was brought the King in full court and the interpreter explained to his Majesty how it was to be used. Into a goblet he put the contents of the twelve blue papers; and having added water, the King drank it off. This was the alkali, and the royal countenance exhibited no sign of satisfaction. It was then explained that in the combination of the two powders lay the luxury; and the twelve white powders were quickly dissolved in water, and as eagerly swallowed by his Majesty. With a shriek, that will be remembered while Delhi is numbered with the kingdoms, the monarch rose, staggered, exploded, and in his agonies, screamed, "Hold me down!" Then rushing from the throne, fell prostrate on the floor. There he lay during the long-continued effervescence of the compound, spurting like ten thousand pennyworths of imperial pop, and believing himself in the agonies of death—a melancholy and humiliating proof that kings are mortal.

SYMPTOMS OF DISEASE IN ANIMALS.—A full and frequent pulse, loss of appetite, dejected head, and a languid or watery eye, with a disposition to lie down in a dark or shady place, are certain marks, in all brute animals, of one of the most frequent diseases with which they are affected—that is, the fever. The watery eye, an inability to bark or barking with a stentorous hoarseness, indicate the approach of madness in the dog. The elevation of the hair on the back of a cat, and its not falling upon its feet, when thrown from a moderate height, are premonitory signs of that disease, which has long proved fatal to that species of animal both in Europe and America. The tail of a horse losing its regularity of motion from side to side, indicates that he is indisposed, and the part in which his disease is seated is pointed out by one of his ears inclining backwards to the side affected. The seat of disease in the abdomen, where the signs are concealed, may be known by pressing the hand upon his whole belly. When the diseased part is pressed, he will manifest marks of pain.

COLD-BLOODED SACRIFICE OF LIFE.—Seruzier, one of Napoleon's ablest officers, gives in his Military Memoirs, the following sketch of a scene after the battle of Austerlitz:—

"At the moment in which the Russian army was making its retreat painfully but in good order, on the ice of the lake, the Emperor Napoleon came riding at full speed towards the artillery; 'You are losing time!' he cried, 'fire upon those masses, they must be engulphed! fire upon the ice!' The order given remained unexecuted for ten minutes. In vain several officers and myself were placed on the slope of a hill to produce the effect; their balls and mine rolled upon the ice without breaking it up. Seeing that I tried a simple method of elevating light howitzers, the almost perpendicular fall of the heavy projectiles produced the desired effect, my method was followed immediately by the adjoining batteries, and in less than no time we buried 35,000 Russians and Austrians under the waters of the lake."

TO FIND A DROWNED BODY.—An inquest was held lately in England, before G. Hutchings, Esq., Coroner, at the house of Mr. T. Sower, Sun Inn, Broocemoor, on the body of Jane Webb, aged six years, who was found drowned in the Canal near Mr. Firmstone's works at the Ley Colliery. It appears that she was sent with her sister's breakfast about half-past eight in the morning, and on her return slipped into the water. Nothing more was heard of her until the afternoon, when they began to drag the Canal for the body, and were about giving it up when a young woman, who was standing by stated that if they would get a loaf of bread, and put some quicksilver into it, it would float to the body, if it was in the water. The young woman insisted that she had seen it tried and proved before; the loaf and quicksilver were thrown into the water, and much to the astonishment of all, the loaf floted to a certain spot, turning round several times and remained. What is more extraordinary, beneath the spot occupied by the loaf, the body of the child was found.

This would appear as singular to me as to other persons, who have not seen it tried, if I had not witnessed the application, and successfully too. [Cin. (O.) Adv.

PEA-NUTS.—By the following extract of a letter in the Providence Journal, from North Carolina, we learn the origin of this common article in our shops:—

"From a narrow strip of land, extending about forty miles northerly from Wilmington, and lying east of the old Newbern road, comes nearly the entire quantity of ground peas (Yankee pea-nuts) grown in the United States for market. From that tract and immediate vicinity, eighty thousand bushels have been carried to Wilmington market in one year. The ground pea (pea-nut) grows beneath the surface of the ground, as its name imports. The plant has somewhat the appearance of the dwarf garden pea, though more bushy. It is cultivated in hills. The pea grows on tendrils whieh put out from the plant, and takes root in the earth. The fruit is picked from the root by the hand, and the vines are a favorite for horses, mules, and cattle. From thirty to eighty bushels are produced on an acre. There are some planters who raise from one thousand to fifteen hundred bushels a year.

TO MAKE BACON.—To each ham or piece of pork, weighing from 15 to 18 lbs., take one table-spoonful of saltpetre, pounded fine, one do. Cayenne pepper, and with a sufficient quantity of Liverpool salt to be well rubbed. After this, each ham is to be well laid on a plank, skin downwards, and covered well with a layer of salt. In that situation it is to be left for eight weeks; after which, hang them up with hock end downwards, in the smoke-house, for two months. Every morning fresh smoke, and in cold or damp weather smoke them continually. When the hams come from the smoke houses, they are to be packed down in hickory ashes.

VARIETY.

In one of our late English papers we find mention of an extraordinary rhubarb plant which grew near Manchester, England, being a curiosity in the vegetable world, one leaf of which, from the extremity of the stalk to the opposite edge of the leaf, measured no less than five feet. The circumference of the stem was eight inches; the length of the stem two feet and a half; the diameter of one of the ribs of the leaf an inch and three-quarters; the length of the central rib one yard and eight inches; and the circumference of the leaf itself upwards of eleven yards and a half. From these calculations some conception may be formed of the solidity and weight of this very wonderful piece of Nature's handicraft.

There may be calumny in an expression of the countenance; in a hint or inuendo; in an altered course of conduct; in not doing what you have been wont to do, staying away from a neighbor's house, or withholding some accustomed civility. You may both give pain to the heart of your brother and awaken strong prejudice against him, by a lofty air, a nod of the head, a turning out of the way, a glance of the eye, a shrug, a smile, or a frown.

A paper of Professor Morse shows that the American Magnetic Telegraph is far superior to that in use in England, or that in France. The American gives sixty signs or characters per minute; the English fifteen; the French six, or at most fourteen—with the advantages in favor of the American, that the characters are made permanent and the operation of the instrument surer, the simplicity of the machinery rendering it less liable to be deranged by atmospheric changes or incidents.

Andrew Howard, who was recently hung at Dover for the murder of Phebe Hanson, said just before his death, that he thought the punishment for murder was imprisonment for life. Had he known that he should have been hung, if detected, he should never have committed the deed. This is an expressive comment on the proposed abolition of capital punishment.

Many of the Chinese dwell in floating houses, and some of them keep large flocks of ducks, which swim about the harbors in the day time, but are called home by a whistle at night. An English officer was surprised to see how readily and rapidly the ducks obeyed the call, and on making inquiry on the subject, was informed that the owner always beat the duck that arrived latest.

When a crack is discovered in a stove, through which the fire or smoke penetrates, the aperture may be readily closed in a moment, with a composition consisting of wood ashes and common salt, made into paste with a little water, plastered over the crack. The good effect is equally certain, whether the stove be cold or hot.

A simple servant boy one evening went up to the drawing room on the bell's being rung. When he returned to the kitchen he laughed immoderately. Some of the servants, asking the cause of his mirth, he cried, "What do you think? there were sixteen of them who could not snuff the candles, and were obliged to send for me to do it."

From statistical documents presented before Congress, it appears that the capital employed in the manufacture of paper in the United States is $18,000,000. The number of mills, 700; the annual product $17,000,000, and the number of operatives employed, 100,000.

IRA SAYLES, } Principals.

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classses will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

THE SACRED MOUNTAINS—MT. ARARAT.

BY REV. J. T. HEADLY.

There are some mountains standing on this sphere of ours, that seem almost conscious beings, and if they would but speak, and tell what they have seen and felt, the traveler who pauses at their base, would tremble with awe and alarm.

For some good reason, the Deity has usually chosen mountain summits, and those which are isolated, as the theatre where he made the grandest exhibitions of himself. It may be because those grand and striking features in nature, fix the locality of events so that they never can fade from the memory of man. The giving of the law needs no lofty column of stone to commemorate it. Mount Ararat lifts its awful form towards the clouds, a perpetual, unwasting monument. God's exhibition of himself to the awe-struck prophet, as he passed by him heralded by the storm, the earthquake and the flame, needs no pyramid to fix the locality in history. Mount Horeb tells where the Almighty dimmed his glory and covered the human face with his fearful hand, so that his brightness might not destroy the being that would gaze on him. The transfiguration of the God-man requires no pillar of brass to arrest the eye and aid the senses as man contemplates the spot where the wondrous scene transpired; Mount Tabor is its everlasting memorial. Thus do mountain summits stand the silent yet most eloquent historians of heaven and earth.

Another reason why mountains have been chosen by the Deity for his most solemn revelations, may be that their solitude and far removal from human interruption and the sounds of busy life, render them better fitted for such communications than the plain and the city.

The first in the list of Sacred Mountains is Mount Ararat. The first named summit in human history, it emerges from the flood and lifts its head over the water to look down on all coming generations to the end of time. Whether it was changed in that mighty convulsion which drowned the world, or whether its lofty peak which saw the swelling waters and marked their steady rises remained the same, we know not. At all events, the mountain looked down on the swaying world at its feet, as cities floated from their foundations and came dashing against its sides, and beheld a wilder scene than ever covered a battle-field, as it heard and saw six generations shriek and sink together. But whatever may have been its former history, it now stands as the only memorial of the flood. Rising like a sugar loaf from the plain, its top is covered with perpetual snow, and has seldom been profaned by human feet. But there was a time when the sea rolled over it, and mightier waves than ever swept the sea, thundered high above its crown.

Though the immediate appearance of a flood that should submerge the world was an event that staggered human belief, yet Noah, obedient to the voice of heaven, began his ark of safety. There is no one who does not lament that there is not a fuller antedeluvian history. We merely catch the summits of events, and are told of some half a dozen of things that happened, while all the rest is wrapped in impenetrable mystery. We are told that the world was drowned, but the particulars of that terrific scene are left wholly to the imagination. It is only by the declaration of the apostle, that men were busy at their usual occupations, "eating and drinking and marrying and giving in marriage, till the flood came and swept them all away," that we get any data by which we can form any true conception of the catastrophe. Yet that short statement is worth every thing, and with it before me, I have sometimes thought I could almost paint the scene. Noah, whose head was whitened by the frosts of six centuries, laid the foundation of his huge vessel on a pleasant day, when all was serene and tranquil. The fields were smiling in verdure before his eyes; the perfumed breezes floated by, and the music of birds and sounds of busy life were about him, when he, by faith alone, laid the first beam of that structure that was to sail over a buried planet. When men, on inquiring the design of that huge edifice, were told its purpose, they could hardly credit their senses, and Noah, though accounted by all a very upright and respectable man, became a jest for children. As the farmer returned at eve from the fields, and the gay citizen of the town drove past, they christened it "Noah's folly." Those more aged and sober shook their heads wisely, saying, "The old man is mad." Even the workmen, engaged upon it, laughed as they drove the nails and hewed the plank, yet declared they cared not as long as the foolish old man was able to pay. Still the ark went up, and the day's wonder ceased to be talked about. When it was finished and curiosity satisfied, it was dismissed from the mind as a passing folly.

Yet I have sometimes wondered what people thought when they saw the beasts of the field and the forest, and fowls of the air, even the venomous serpent and strong-limbed lion, coming in pairs to the ark. This must have staggered them amazingly, and made the ark for a while a fresh topic of conversation. At length, the patriarch with his family entered—the door was shut upon the face of the world, and he sat down on the faith of a single promise to await the issue. That night the sun went down over the green hills beautiful as ever, and the stars came out in the blue sky, and nature breathed long and peacefully. In the morning the sun rose in undimmed splendor and mounted the heavens. Deep within the huge structure Noah could hear the muffled sound of life without. The lowing of herds came on his ear, and the song of the husbandman going to his toil, and the roll of carriage wheels as they hurried past, and perhaps the ribald shout and laugh of those without, as they expended their wit on him and his ark together. To say nothing of the improbability of the event, the idea was preposterous that such a helmless, helpless affair, could outride a wrecked world. Thus day after day passed on until a week had gone by, but still the faith of that old man never shook. At length the sky became overcast, and the gentle rain descended—to Noah the beginning of the flood, to the world a welcome shower. The farmer as he housed his cattle, rejoiced in the refreshing moisture, while the city never checked its gaiety, or the man of wealth his plans. But as the rain continued day after day, and fell faster and fiercer on the drenched earth, and the swollen streams went surging by, men cursed the storm that seemed determined never to break up. The lowlands were deluged; the streams broke over their banks, bearing houses and cattle away on their maddened bosoms. Wealth was destroyed and lives lost, till men talked of ruined fortunes, famine and general desolation; but still it rained on. Week after week it came pouring from the clouds, till it was like one falling sheet of water, and the inhabitants could no longer stir from their doors. The rich valleys that lay along the rivers were flooded, and the peasants sought the eminence around for safety. Yet still the waters rose around them, till all through the valley nothing but little black islands of human beings were seen on the surface. O, then what fierce struggles there were for life among them. The mother lifted her infant above her head, while she strove to maintain her uncertain footing in the sweeping waters; the strong crowded off the weak as each sought the highest point; while the living mass slowly crumbled away till the water swept smooth and noiselessly above them all. Men were heard talking of the number of lives lost, and the amount of wealth destroyed, and that such a flood had not happened in the remembrance of the oldest man. No one yet dreamed of the high grounds being covered, least of all the mountains. To drown the world it must rain till the ocean itself was filled above its level for miles, and so men feared it not and sought for amusement within doors till the storm should abate. O, what scenes of vice and shame and brutality and revelry did that storm witness in the thronged city, and what unhallowed songs mingled in the blast that swept by.

But at length another sound was heard, that sent paleness to every cheek, and chained every tongue in mute terror. It was a far distant roar, faint but fearful, yet sounding more distinct and ominous every moment, till it filled the air. The earth trembled and groaned under it as if an earthquake was on its march, and ever and anon came a crash as if the "ribs of nature" were breaking. Nearer and louder and more terrible it grew, till men forgetting alike their pleasure and their anger, rushed out in the storm whispering "The flood! The flood!"—and lo, a new sea, the like of which no man had ever seen before, came rolling over the crouching earth. Stretching from horizon to horizon, as far as the eye could reach, losing itself like a limitless wall in the clouds above, it came pouring its green massive waters onward, while the continual and rapid crash of falling forests and crushed cities and uptorn mountains, that fell one after another in its passage, and the successive shrieks that pierced the heavens, rising even above the deafening roar of the on-rushing ocean, as city after city and kingdom after kingdom disappeared, made a scene of horror and terror inconceivable. "The fountains of the great deep were broken up."

But the last cry of human agony was at length hushed—ocean met ocean in its flow, and the waves swept on without a shore. O what a wreck was there! the wreck of two thousand years, with its cities, its cultivated fields and mighty population. Not shivered masts and broken timbers, the wreck of some gallant vessel, were seen on that turbulent surface, but the fragments of a crushed and broken world. It was a noble wreck—splendid cities and towers, gorgeous palaces, gay apparel, the accumulated wealth and luxury of twenty centuries, strewing the bosom of the deluge, like antumn leaves the surface of some forest stream.

But amid the sudden midnight that had wrapped the earth, and the frenzy of the elements and utter overthrow and chaos of all things, there was one heart that beat as calmly as in sleep; one brow over which no breath of passion or of fear passed; for in the solitary ark that lifted to the heaving billows, the aged patriarch knelt in prayer. Amid the surging of that fierce ocean, his voice may not have been heard by mortal ear, but the light of faith shone around his aged form, and the moving lip spoke a repose as tranquil as childhood's on the bosom of maternal love. The patriarch's God ruled the wild scene, and Noah felt his frail vessel quiver in every timber, without one tremor himself. Upborne on the flood, the heaven-protected ark rose over the buried cities and mountains, and floated away on a shoreless deep. Like a single drop of dew, this round sphere of ours hung and trembled—a globe of water in mid heaven.

I have wondered what the conversations were during the long days and nights that lonely ark was riding on the deep. As it rose and fell on the long-protracted swell, massive ruins would go thundering by, whole forests sink and rise with the billows, while ever and anon an uptorn hill, as borne along by the resistless tide it struck a buried mountain, would loom for a moment like some black monster over the waves, then plunge again to the fathomless bottom. Amid this wreck and these sights the ark sailed on in safety. How often in imagination have I pictured it in the deluge at midnight. To a spectator what an object of interest it would have been. Round the wide earth the light from its solitary window was the only indication of life that remained. One moment it would be seen far upon the crest of the billow, a mere speck of flame amid the limitless darkness that environed it, and then disappear in the gulfs below as if extinguished forever. Thus that gentle light would sink and rise on the breast of the deluge, the last, the only hope of the human race. Helmless, and apparently guideless, its wreck seemed inevitable, but the sea never rolled that could extinguish that star-like beam that told where the ark still floated. Not even the strong wind that the Almighty sent over the water to dry it up, driving it into billows that stormed the heavens, could sink it. Though it shook like a reed in their strong grasp, and floundered through the deep gulfs, it passed unerringly on to the summit of that mountain on which it was to rest; and at length struck ground and ceased its turbulent motion. Noah waited a week, and then sent forth a raven to explore the deep. Though the waters still swept from mountain to mountain, the myriad carcases that floated on the surface furnished both food and resting place, and he returned no more. He then sent forth a dove. It darted away from the place of its long confinement, and sped on rapid wing over the flood, now turning this way, and now that, looking in vain with its gentle eye for the green earth, and at last turned back towards the ark of rest. The tap of his snowy wing was heard on the window, and the patriarch reached forth his hand and took it in. The fierce panting of its mottled breast, and its drooping pinions, told too well that the earth gave no place of repose. But the second time it was sent abroad it returned with an olive leaf in its mouth, showing that the earth had arisen from its burden, and was sprouting again in verdure. Then the patriarch went forth with his family and stood on Mount Ararat, and lo, she earth was at his feet, but how changed. Cut into gorges which showed where strong currents swept, and piled into ridges, it bore in every part marks of the power that had ravaged it. Noah and his family were alone in the world, and he built an altar there on the top of the solitary mountain, and lifted up his voice in prayer, and the Almighty talked with him as "friend talketh with friend," bidding him go forth and occupy the earth. And as the flame of sacrifice rose from the mountain top, bearing the patriarch's prayer heavenward, the promise was given that the earth should never again be swept by a deluge, and lo, God's signet ring appeared in the clouds, arching the man of God, and shown us as a warrant that the covenant shall never be broken.

Baptized by the flood—consecrated by the altar—illuminated by the first fresh rainbow, Mount Ararat stood a sacred mountain on the earth. [N. Y. Observer.

BENEVOLENCE.

Do you believe it?

"It is a little thing to give
A cup of water to the poor—
Or spare a morsel to relieve
A famished stranger at the door."

If so, give and make happy. The cold begins to pinch, but you are snug and warm. How fares your neighbor?

"Who is my neighbor?"

"It is he
Who shivers at thy door;
Who pines in abject poverty—
Whose days of strength are o'er."

Will you assist him? Hug not your riches with the miser's grasp—that wretch, who, as Blair says, is first starved in this world, then damned in that to come. But open your hearts—drop your arms, and speak out—"Here, friend, is something to assist you."

Are there no orphans who are ill provided against the cold? To whom does that little boy belong, who has just passed down the street, with his toes out of his shoes and his elbows protruding? He is a ——"tender orphan child,

With scant and meagre face;
On whom no friend e'er kindly smiled—
Who has no mother's care."

Run and speak to him. Invite him to your house and look up some old clothes and shoes. They will be of incalculable service to him.

Poor widows and destitute old men—have you none in your neighborhood? Have they plenty of food and clothing? Are their dwellings comfortable? Will they keep themselves warm the coming winter? Look at your "wood piles." Can't you spare a few armfulls? Don't give to make yourself popular; don't spread abroad your liberality in the public prints; but give heartily and cheerfully. He who remembers the poor, will not be forgotten in that day when the Almighty makes up his jewels. [Portland Tribune.

DEATH'S DIADEM.

Death sat on his solitary throne, and gazed sadly through his dim and silent halls. Many thousands were congregated there; thousands still pressed on, but all was still. There was no noisy foot-fall, no rustling of garments, no embrace, no recognition. Parent and child, bridegroom and bride, lover and beloved, tyrant and victim, rivals and foes, came one by one, forgetful alike of enmity and friendship.

It was dark and cloudy, and death gathered closer his sable mantle. Alas! he said, musingly, 'Mine is a fearful sovereignty. My realms are peopled by unwilling subjects, my approach is heralded with terror and tears. Perchance my abode is too cheerless, my own person too repelling and stern. It may be, it must be so. At once will I adorn myself and my kingdom. The diadem I will make, shall not only throw a halo around me, but illumine, the farthest point of my empire.'

Then he gathered his messengers—hunger, cold, disease, dire passions and ambitions, lightnings and storms, the whirlwind and sirocco—and renewed his commands. But from wrecked armadas, from shattered arguses laden with red gold, from wide-spread battle fields, from the whelmed caravan, from lordly castles and rich palaces, he gathered but few jewels for his crown. He snatched Wickliffe from weeping friends, bore Huss and Latimer and Cranmer from the curling flames, embraced Zwingle in the fierce mountain charge, called Xavier from his island home and Calvin from his many labors, and made up the number from among the forgotten martyrs.

The work of years was done. The diadem was finished. But as death grasped it joyfully, the archangel, Michael, descended on rapid wings, seized it with firm hand, and bound it, bathed in living and immortal glory, on the Saviour's brow.

A FATHER'S LOVE.

A traveler, accompanied by his son, a youth of sixteen, arrived at a ford which it was necessary to cross, but which was rendered difficult by the swelling of the stream. The horse of the father was unwilling to pluge into the water; the son offered to go first, and he followed. When the son gained the shore, he looked back, and saw his father dismounted, struggling in the water, and carried down by the current. He could not swim; the son could, and plunged into the stream to save his father. He reached him before he sank, held him above the water, and told him to take hold of his collar, and he would swim to the shore with him. The father did so; the anxious son exerted all his strength to stem the current and reach the shore; but, encumbered by his own clothing, and the weight of his father, he made no progress. When the father perceived this, he gave up his hold of his son, and motioning to him to save himself, resigned himself to death. The son reached the shore, and was found by some travelers, many hours after, seated on the margin of the stream, with his head resting on his hands, stupified with grief. The body was found; on the countenance was a smile; and the son said, "Just so he smiled on me when he let me go, and pushed me from him."

This affecting narrative should remind us how tenderly Jesus taught that our heavenly Father loves us much more than an earthly father loves his child; and that from the strength of his love, he is ever disposed to confer blessings upon his children.

THE MOTHER'S LOVE.

The needle is not more true to the pole, than is the heart of the mother to the interest and happiness of her children. "Can a woman forget her sucking child," is the strong interrogatory of Him who formed the mother's heart, and who knows perfectly all its emotions. Its justice and force are attested by observation and experience. Than maternal affection, there is not a stronger principle wrought into the framework of humanity. It is an element, ever living, ever expanding, ever strengthening, and never expiring, till death has triumphed, and the spirit found its way to other worlds. How early are its developments, in the anxieties and labors which it prompts for the present safety and future comfort of the yet unconscious and unborn babe! And when the hour is past that opens the eyes of the tender immortal on the light of life, who that has not felt, can describe the mingling solicitude and joyfulness that crowd the maternal bosom! How fondly does she press it to her heart by day, and how tenderly watch over it by night! How patiently does she bear it in her arms, unconscious of the fatigue which exhausts her strength; and how heroically does she throw herself between it and every impending danger, thoughtless of life and of all she loves beside! Not a complaint does it utter which she does not hear, not a want does it have that she does not anticipate, not a tear does it shed that her tenderness wipes not away, not a smile dimples its cheek that infuses not joy into her heart!

"How manifold and how tender," says one, "are the ties which unite a mother and her son! She brought him into the world at the hazard of her life. She sustained his infant days with the blood of her own veins, and sleep was a stranger to her eyes, that he might sleep in tranquility. The first object he distinguished was the smiling face of his guardian angel; the first sound which struck his ear was the murmur of maternal affection. The first idea he formed was that of seeking refuge from want, pain and danger, in the fond bosom of a parent. The very anguish and trouble which she endured on his account but endear him the more to her; a sense of early and assured protection grows with his growth and strengthens with his strength, and forms a bond of mutual attachment, which on one side is hardly to be dissolved, and on the other is one of the most powerful securities against the inroads of vice, and is the last convulsive grasp of expiring nature."

Not more certainly does a mother's love follow her offspring amid the perils of infancy and childhood, than into the diversified scenes of advancing and ripened manhood. Are their purposes defeated, or their hopes disappointed? Yet, while the mother lives, they are sure of the sympathies of one undeviating friend. Are they overwhelmed by the scorn and contumely of the world, either for their virtues or their vices! Still, while the mother lives, there is one whose yearnings never cease, and whose tongue never withholds words of consolation. Even if they drag out their days in prison, or meet the just reward of their deeds in the ignominy of a public execution—still, if the mother lives, there is one who will find her way to them in the darksomeness of their confinement, and brave the terrors of death, that she may pour into their bosoms the cordials of love. All other friends may forsake them—injustice may hurl its bolts into their bosoms, and even the mercy of Heaven may stand aloof in the day of their calamity; but her heart, however pained by their misfortunes, or tortured by their crimes, knows nothing of alienation. A mother still, like Rizpah, she spreads her sackcloth on the rock and frays away the birds of the air and the beasts of the field from the lifeless remains of her children, or wraps them in the winding sheet, and, amid her gushing tears, exclaims, "O that my life had gone for yours!"

A PSALM OF LIFE.

WHAT THE HEART OF THE YOUNG MAN SAID TO THE PSALMIST.

Tell me not, in mournful numbers,
Life is but an empty dream!
For the soul is dead that slumbers,
And things are not what they seem.

Life is real! Life is earnest!
And the grave is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way;
But to act, that each to-morrow
Finds us farther than to-day,

Art is long, and Time is fleeting,
And our hearts, though stout and brave,
Still, like muffled drums, are beating
Funeral marches to the grave.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of Life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a hero in the strife!

Trust no Future, howe'er pleasant!
Let the dead Past bury its dead!
Act—act in the living Present!
Heart within, and God o'erhead!

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time;

Footsteps, that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait. [Longfellow.

ILLUSTRATION.—The Rev. John Hartley, who has traveled as a missionary in Greece, records in his journal the following interesting scriptural illustration:—"Having had may attention directed last night to the words—(John 10: 3,)—'The sheep hear his voice, and he calleth his own sheep by name,' &c., I asked my man if it was usual in Greece to give names to sheep. He informed me that it was, and that the sheep obeyed the shepherd when he called them by their names. This morning I had an opportunity of verifying the truth of this remark. Passing by a flock of sheep, I asked the shepherd the same question which I had put to my servant, and he gave me the same answer. I then bade him to call one of his sheep. He did so, and it instantly left its pasturage and its companions, and ran up to the hand of the shepherd, with signs of pleasure, and with a prompt obedience which I have never before observed in any other animal. It is also true of the sheep in this country, 'that a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him; for they know not the voice of the stranger.' The shepherd told me that many of his sheep were still wild; that they had not yet learned their names; but that by teaching they would all learn them. The others which knew their names, he called tame."

DEATH AT SEA.—Where does the sailor die? In a cheerful room? On a couch of feathers and a pillow of down? Waited on by an attentive nurse? Watched over by anxious friends? Surrounded by sobbing and weeping relatives? Far different. In that wretched hole where a suspended lantern just gives light enough to show the seamen's chests by which it is incumbered. In that rude hammock swinging from the beam. There is no minister of Christ there to listen to his wailings over an ill-spent life, or to awaken him to a sense of his sin and danger. There is no messenger of love there, to speak of Jesus, and point him to that anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast. No herald of that salvation which, "like the ocean itself, rises above high water mark, overtops the mountains of sin, and washes away the guilt of every penitent transgressor." He dies without comfort in this world, and too often without hope in another. [Phil. Repository.

CONSCIENCE.—There be five kinds of consciences on foot in the world:—First, an ignorant conscience, which neither sees nor saith any thing, neither beholds the sins in a soul, nor reproves them. Secondly, the flattering conscience, whose speech is worse than silence itself, which, though seeing sin soothes men in the committing thereof. Thirdly, the seared conscience, which hath neither sight, speech nor sense, in men that are past feeling. Fourthly, a wounded conscience, frighted with sin. The last and best, is a quiet and clear conscience, pacified in Christ Jesus. Of these, the fourth is incomparably better than the three former, so that a wise man would not take a world to change with them. Yea, a wounded conscience is rather painful, than sinful; an affliction, no offence; and is the ready way, at the next remove, to be turned into a quiet conscience. [Rev. Thos. Fuller.

THE RIGHT SIDE OF FIFTY.—The elder Mr. Venn, a faithful minister of the Church of England, who rejoiced in the hope of the glory of God, one day, while riding on the road, fell into company with a person of respectable appearance. After riding together for some time, conversing on different subjects, the stranger, looking in his face, said, "Sir, I think you are on the wrong side of fifty." "On the wrong side of fifty!" answered Mr. Venn, "No, sir, I am on the right side of fifty." "Surely," the person replied, "you must be turned of fifty, for you appear to be older than I am, and I am turned of fifty." "Yes, sir," added Mr. Venn, "but I am on the right side of fifty, for I am nearer my crown of glory."

TRUTH.—Who knows not that truth is strong next to the Almighty? She needs no policies, no stratagems, no licensings, to make her victorious. Though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so truth be in the field, we injure her to misdoubt her strength! Let truth and falsehood grapple; who ever knew truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter! [Milton.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

We have already given a hasty sketch of the proceedings of this great Conference of Evangelical Protestants. It assembled in London on the 19th of August, and adjourned on the 2d of September, having held nineteen long sessions within the period of fifteen days. The number of delegates is stated to have been considerably over one thousand, of whom about one hundred and fifty were from foreign lands. Nearly every branch of the Christian Church was represented, and a spirit of sincere friendship and brotherly-love is said to have pervaded the body to an unprecedented degree. Perhaps, taken all in all, a more remarkable council has not been held for fifteen centuries. It assembled for an object which most Christians acknowledge to be desirable, and its deliberations were characterized by great ability and candor. But whether such an assembly was called for at the present time, and also whether the results of it will prove advantageous to the cause of Christ—these are questions which are now receiving considerable attention, and concerning which good men widely differ.

At an early stage in the proceedings of the Alliance, two important practical questions presented themselves for decision. The first was, Who should be admitted as members of the body? The second was, What subjects should the Alliance consider and express its opinions upon?

In respect to membership, it was decided to exclude the Friends, because it was thought impossible to do otherwise without abandoning one or two points deemed very essential to the evangelical system of truth and order. But the knottiest question in relation to membership was connected with the subject of slavery. Resolutions had been adopted by the principal committees, previous to the meeting of the Alliance, to exclude from it all slaveholders. These resolutions were laid before every American delegate when he signed the usual application for admission—although he was not required to subscribe to them as a condition of entering the Alliance. The consequence was great dissatisfaction among the delegates from this country, who prepared and presented a statement of their objections to this course. When the subject of the permanent organization of the Alliance came up, it was moved to insert in the article prescribing its future members the words "except slaveholders." This proposition threatened the destruction of the tenderly-cherished union, which had already gone so far as to agree upon a doctrinal basis, and presented to the world the singular spectacle of twenty belligerent sects uniting upon the substantial points of Christianity. However, after a lengthy and animated discussion, the subject was finally disposed of by adopting the following minute: "And in respect especially to the system of slavery, and every other form of oppression in any country, the Alliance are unanimous in deploring them, as in many ways obstructing the progress of the gospel, and express their confidence that no branch will admit to membership slaveholders, who, by their own fault, continue in that position, retaining their fellow-men in slavery from a regard to their own interests."

Respecting the subjects for consideration, there were two about which considerable difference of opinion existed. One was the subject of the Sabbath, and the other of eternal punishment. The documents of the Committees, previous to the general meeting, had proposed as one of the objects of the Alliance, to collect the facts relating to the public observance of the 'Lord's day.' But when the subject was formally brought up before the whole body, it was found that some of the prominent members were doubtful as to the present grounds of obligation to keep what is called the Christian Sabbath. There was a clashing between the English and Scotch members upon this subject—the Scotch holding very nearly the Puritanical notions which prevail in some parts of this country, and the English being altogether more latitudinarian in their views. One distinguished Independent clergyman from London, went so far as to disavow all belief in the obligation of the fourth commandment. The debate on this point did not proceed so far as was anticipated, because the article respecting 'objects' was referred to a sub-committee for alteration and revisal. From the fact that the officially-published doctrinal basis of the Alliance contains no allusion whatever to the Sabbath, it is probable, that the sub-committee thought advisable to erase this from the list of objects; thus giving a most mournful proof how much difference of opinion exists upon this subject—how much need there is of its thorough discussion—how fearful religious men are of such discussion—and how ready they are to sacrifice truth for the sake of nominal union.——The eternal punishment question figured quite largely in the discussions of the Alliance. It was introduced by an American clergyman, who proposed to add, as the ninth article of the doctrinal basis, "the immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, the judgment of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ, with the eternal happiness of the righteous, and the eternal punishment of the wicked." This led to a protracted debate, from which it seems evident that among the English there is a growing belief in the annihilation of the wicked. Although no member of the Alliance avowed such belief, many of them had friends and acquaintances who favored that view, and whom they were not willing to exclude from the body. After a lengthy discussion, the ninth article was passed with great unanimity, although many regarded it as an American question, and seemed to regret its introduction. Having said thus much in respect to the subjects about which the members of the Alliance differed, we refer the reader to their "doctrinal basis," which we published last week, for the subjects upon which they were agreed.

—As to the results of this great Convention of Evangelical Christians, we have but a few words to say. Several months ago, we expressed our doubts whether it would do much to strengthen Protestants or terrify Romanists. The reports of its proceedings have only served to increase those doubts. Indeed, we believe it is now pretty generally conceded, that it cannot lead to an organization which will unite Protestants in any aggressive movements. It will undoubtedly promote a better acquaintance between the different parts of the Christian world—break down many prejudices which have existed—and remove some of the scandals to which unbrotherly strife have given rise. Farther than this it cannot go; and, if we mistake not, its wisest friends now regard this as its grand and almost exclusive use. For our part, we have never had a very high opinion of those unions which are formed principally for the sake of appearing to be united. They do not encourage that frank and open discussion of points of difference, which is indispensable to harmonious action. They only cap the volcano for the present, and prepare for a more destructive eruption at some future day. The best way which we know of to promote union among Christians, is to purge out the leaven of error—not to conceal it, and deny its existence. The best way to promote the sanctification of men, is to apply the truth to their hearts—not to abandon it ourselves, or profess that we deem it non-essential. This is a work to be done at home, where real charity always begins. When we see men going thousands of miles from home to begin the work, we fear that they will never complete it. We are disposed, however, to regard them in the most charitable manner, and shall therefore wait and look with no little interest for the evidence that those who have attended the Christian Alliance have been made thereby more loving and less censorious than heretofore in their intercourse with their fellow-believers at home.

RELIGION AND POLITICS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I noticed in your paper of Oct. 8th, a resolution passed by citizens of Cumberland County, N. J., relative to Sabbath Legislation, &c. The principles embodied in that resolution are worthy of noble and high-minded men, citizens of a country governed by the voice of the people. The truth of the sentiment is so obvious to all unprejudiced minds, that nothing need be said in its defence; and yet, obvious as it may seem, it is a truth which has been long rejected, and its advocates have been and are branded as heretics, fanatics, and troublers of society. The right to self-government has its origin in the constitution of man. To obey laws which he had no voice in enacting, is opposed to every prompting of his nature. Hence, when attempts are made to enforce oppression, he feels an irresistible impulse to oppose such attempts, and to exercise what he feels to be his undoubted prerogative. In our government, the ballot-box is made the palladium of our liberties. Through it the humblest citizen may speak as audibly as the proudest aristocrat. If oppressive laws have been enacted, the only remedy for a law-abiding people is a repeal of those laws. If present incumbents of offices will not repeal, the last resort is the election of such as will. To this necessity the citizens of Cumberland County, N. J., find themselves driven by the enactment of laws enforcing the observance of Sunday. Believing, as they do, that "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," they can but feel, that resistance to laws which forbid them to work six days and rest the seventh, is a duty. They have nobly repudiated that wicked sentiment, that "religion has nothing to do with politics." When bitter experience teaches the ills of oppression—when political action cleaves down our own rights, civil, and religious—then religion calls aloud to vindicate those rights. If political action is necessary, religion demands it as imperatively as if it might be accomplished by other means. The sun of that nation approaches the western horizon, whose citizens deposit their votes for law-makers without a sense of obligation. If ever in the routine of man's duties he should feel his responsibility to God and his fellows, it is when, by his vote, he decides the destinies of the nation. If he be actuated by religion, then will his actions correspond, whether it be in the capacity of a voter or otherwise. As God judges the motive, the individual is answerable for all the evil that may accrue from improvident action. If he votes for an oppressor, then he is answerable for all that oppression, as much as if he alone acted. All creation uniting in any wrong act, cannot make it right, or lessen the weight of individual responsibility. The citizens of New Jersey who passed the resolution may justly hold every individual who shall vote for the continuance of the wrongs they suffer, accountable for the same.

Now will my New Jersey brethren pardon me if I ask, in the name of God and suffering humanity, an application of these principles in every department of action. A deprivation of one sixth of your own rights has roused you to action. Three millions of your countrymen, your brothers and neighbors, are robbed of every right under heaven, and by virtue of the same power which takes one sixth of yours, and if they are restored it must be done by the same mode of operations. "As ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." My brother's rights are as dear as my own; I am bound to defend his as tenaciously as my own. I do not charge my brethren with a want of philanthropy. Perhaps they all recognize the obligation I would enforce. Were I a citizen of New Jersey, I should advocate the measure, but should require an additional pledge of the candidate, that so far as his actions could have influence, they should be for universal emancipation from all thraldom. Consistency demands it. Humanity demands it. Have I asked too much? Will some one of the brethren who passed the resolution correct me? D. E. M.

THE AMENDED CONSTITUTION.

The Amended Constitution for the State of New York, prepared by a Convention which has been in session for several weeks past, has just been published. The document is so long that we have thought best not to copy it—especially as many of our readers reside in other States, and those who reside in the State of New York will have access to it through their local papers. The New Constitution provides more effectually than the Old for absolute liberty of conscience. Under it "no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinion on matters of religious belief." It does away with the old restriction to prevent clergymen from holding office, and places that class of persons upon the same footing with other men. It refers the question of free suffrage for colored persons to the people, who are to vote upon it at the same time that they vote upon the question of adopting the New Constitution. It guards against lengthy legislative sessions, by providing for the payment of legislators only during a session of one hundred days. It does away with the present Court of Chancery, transferring its powers to the Courts of Law. It provides for the appointment of three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to revise and abridge the rules of practice in the Courts of Law. It forbids the contraction of a debt exceeding $1,000,000, unless to meet the expenses of war, or for a specific object approved by a vote of the people. It provides for no special charter for banking purposes, but leaves banking institutions to be established under general laws—stockholders to be individually liable to the amount of their several shares, and in case of insolvency billholders to have the preference of other creditors. All the present State officers will hold until the 1st of Jan. 1848, although the New Constitution generally will take effect on the first of January next. From this it will be seen, that there are two very important questions to be decided at the coming election in the State of New York. The first is, whether the Amended Constitution shall be adopted; the second is, whether equal suffrage shall be extended to colored persons.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES.

The London Jewish Chronicle, publishes the contents of an interesting letter from Jerusalem. The brethren of the ten tribes, it seems, are to be hunted out, and for this purpose the Jews in England intend to co-operate with those settled in other lands. On the 16th of May, a letter arrived in London from the synagogue authorities of Sapheth, saying that in consequence of important information having reached them as to the country where the brethren of the ten tribes are to be found, a resolution was immediately passed to elect from their congregation a man ready and capable for a mission to that country. They appeal to the Jerusalem Jews for co-operation, and also to select in Jerusalem one from the Sephardim (Portuguese) Jews, and one from the Ashkenasim (German and Polish) Jews, and to send the three messengers together, who will have to travel for several months through enormous deserts. These ten tribes constitute an empire of their own, have their own king, and possess great quantities of ammunition. They are of a high stature, and have altogether an athletic appearance. They are generally occupied with the Kabala, are strictly religious, and very wealthy, being in possession of many gold mines. They do not permit a foreigner to settle among them; even the sojourn of a few days can be obtained only by the payment of an enormous tax, with the exception of Israelites, who are received as friends, permitted to reside among them, and are altogether recognized as their own brethren. The synagogue authorities of Jerusalem have consented to the mission, though they will have to incur a heavy expense which so long a journey requires.

North and South.—The Anti-Slavery Standard relates the following anecdote of a clergyman from South Carolina, who has recently been in Boston soliciting subscriptions to a Bethel for seamen in Charleston:—He called upon one of the wealthiest and most respectable merchants, never suspected of any taint of abolitionism, who, in reply to the demand for money, asked if they continued to throw colored seamen into jail on their arrival at Charleston? The reply was, "Yes, we still think it best to do so." "Well," answered the Bostonian, "when you can tell me that such laws are abolished, I may help you to a Bethel, and not till then."

SUNDAY DESECRATION.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

As the sticklers for the sanctification of the first day of the week attach so much importance to the most trifling accidents which may happen on that day, to impress upon the community the heinousness of desecrating it, and continually heralding them in the public prints, as evidence, positive and direct, of the indignant resentment of the Almighty, to vindicate holy time,—I should like one of their sapent editors, or correspondents, to give a satisfactory explanation of the following circumstance:—

In the accounts of the recent battle at Monterey, it is stated, that, "on the 19th of September, (Sabbath,) General Taylor arrived before Monterey, with about 6000 men. His force then encamped at Walnut Springs, three miles short of the city. This was the nearest position that the army could obtain a supply of water and bread, and at the same time be beyond the reach of the enemy's batteries. On the 20th, (Sunday,) Gen. Worth was ordered, with his division, to move by a circuitous route to the right, to gain the Saltillo road, beyond the west of the town, and to storm the heights above the Bishop's Palace."

Now will the advocates for the sanctification of Sunday explain, Whether the Lord of the Sabbath—the God of Peace—gave the victory to the American Army for resting on seventh day, or for commencing hostile movements on first day?—that's all! W. M. F.

Sad State of Things.—Mr. O. S. Powell, one of the agents of a "Sabbath Association" in Pennsylvania, has written to the editor of a Philadelphia paper some account of his labors and prospects. He says that since the 13th of August last, he has visited nearly all of the important towns on the canal between Harrisburg and Pittsburg, delivering addresses, distributing tracts, &c. The result of his observations is the conclusion, that "on account of the increase of business on the canal, the death of one of the missionaries, and various Providential hindrances, there has been more running of boats on the Sabbath than was expected at the opening of navigation." Near the close of his letter he speaks as follows:—

"Allow me, before I close, to advert to a topic which I sincerely hope may secure the attention of abler pens—the extent to which the Sabbath is desecrated by Sunday excursions. The New York correspondent of the North American, in a letter published in that paper on the 24th of August, remarks, in substance, that New York is becoming very much like Paris in regard to Sabbath recreations. This remark applies with too much truth to this city, and it is to be feared the evil is on the increase."

"Sunday Pleasuring."—One Sunday, not long ago, a steamboat went from New York on a pleasure excursion, during which a slight accident occurred. A city journal made the affair an occasion for a long homily upon Sunday excursions. In reply the editor of the News remarks as follows:—

"The accident would have been as likely to have occurred on any other day as the Sabbath. If a poor man who works six days in the week attempts to get a mouthful of fresh air upon the seventh, by a sail down the bay, with his wife and little ones, and any accident happen, a certain straight-laced portion of the city press seize upon the incident as the text for a long homily upon the iniquity of Sunday amusements. But if a millionaire, while taking an airing upon the avenues, of a Sabbath evening, in his costly carriage, with liveried lickspittles in waiting, should chance to be upset, nobody would see a paragraph headed 'Sunday Pleasuring.'"

Efficiency of the Catholics.—Rev. Mr. Davis, of Westfield, who has recently returned from a tour of the West, in a letter to the N. E. Puritan, giving some of his impressions in reference to that vast section, says:—

"I consider the Catholics much less enterprising and efficient than I formerly supposed they were. This is true of the emissaries of the Pope; perhaps not as true of the Jesuits. The Catholic priests are not men who think and act for themselves. They have been taught what to believe and what to do; they have been laid upon a procrustean bed, and forbidden to stretch themselves, or push their inquiries beyond certain limits. Their opinions are not their own, and of course they do not consult them with the zeal of a Puritan. In the University of St. Louis, about fifty Catholic priests are occupied in doing what six professors will do in a New England college. It is my opinion that five New England men, educated under our Puritan institutions, will outwork five times the number trained in Catholic institutions. Here we have an advantage of which it is well to be apprized, that we may profit by it."

The Editor.—The Scientific American says: Write—keep writing—it is the motto of an editor. If he has no ideas, he must dig for them; if he has but little time to arrange them, no matter, the work must be done. Sickness may come upon him; want may stare him in the face, but he must cogitate some thing for the dear public. Perhaps in his darkest moments, he indtes a paragraph that cheers thousands. When almost desponding, his words may put courage into the hearts of millions. Who would be an editor? Yet he has much to encourage him. If he can call no time his own, he is not rusting out, or in unprofitable society. A faithful contributor to the public press, is a man of great influence. No person has more power than himself. He instructs tens of thousands, and leads them to virtue, to honor, to happiness. No man will have more to answer for than the conductor of a corrupt and vascillating press.

Fair of the American Institute.—The Fair of the American Institute has been unusually attractive and popular the present year. The room at Castle Garden is well adapted to the exhibition; and it is difficult to conceive of a richer treat to any friend of American skill and industry, than is furnished by a visit to it. Such a display of the inventions and manufactures of the country may justly excite an honest pride in the bosom of every citizen. It is stated that the number of persons who visited the fair during the first week exceeded seventy thousand. During the second week it continued nearly as crowded as ever. On several evenings, more visitors presented themselves than could find even standing room in the vast area of Castle Garden. No better evidence can be given that the exhibition is appreciated by the inhabitants of New York.

Daguerreotypes.—The display of Daguerreotypes at the Fair of the American Institute, is very extensive and rich, showing that a great amount of talent is expended in improving this art. Among them all, however, none please us so well as those exhibited by Gurney, of 189 Broadway, N. Y. There is a perfection of finish and life-like expression about his pictures, which renders them as pleasant to look upon as the finest miniatures, while they are as truthful as the rays of light can make them.

Sabbath Accident.—A sad accident happened at Staten Island on Sabbath day, October 10th. It seems that the Tompkins Cadets had been parading, and were firing a salute in compliment to General Storms, who was visiting them, when a cannon burst, blowing off the right arm of one man, and the left arm of another. The names of the sufferers are Philip J. Bender and Abram Seguine, the former only eighteen, and the latter a little more than nineteen years of age.

The Steamship Great Britain.—Much anxiety is now felt concerning the fate of this vessel. She was to have left Liverpool on the 22d of September, nearly a month ago. No tidings have yet been received from her, and there are fears that the heavy storms may have proved too much for her. In such circumstances, the arrival of the Boston steamer, which is fully due, is anxiously looked for. She may bring intelligence of some delay in the time of the Great Britain's departure. If not, the fears for her safety will be greatly increased. Rev. Dr. Cox, of Brooklyn, and several other distinguished clergymen returning from the World's Convention, were expected by the Great Britain.

The Marriage Question.—At the recent session of the Presbytery of Fayetteville, N. C., the long-pending case of the Rev. Mr. McQueen, who was suspended in 1841 from the functions of the ministry and from the communion of the Presbyterian Church, for marrying the sister of his deceased wife, again came up, and by a majority of four votes the reverend gentleman was restored to his former position in the church. A protest and complaint, however, were entered by a portion of the minority, under which the case was carried up to the synod of North Carolina, at its session at Greensborough.

Rumselling brings Sorrow and Trouble.—A tavern keeper in Rensselaer Co. N. Y., had abandoned the traffic in Alcohol after having been several years engaged in it. Whenever the subject of his selling liquor was referred to, he was observed to manifest feelings of deep regret and sorrow. A friend one day inquired the cause. "I will tell you," said he, and opening his account book he said, "here are forty-four names of men who have all been my customers, most of them for years—thirty-two of these men to my certain knowledge now lie in the drunkard's grave! ten of the remaining twelve are now living, confirmed sots! These are the fruits of this dreadful and degrading business." Who woule be willing to engage engage in it for the paltry wages of a few pence! Can a man follow this traffic and be a Christian!

The Turnip Rot.—It is announced that the farmers of England are afflicted with another calamity, besides the destruction of their potato crop. A somewhat similar disease to that which has been raging among the potatoes, has manifested itself in many forms among the turnips. They are attacked in the same way as the potatoes. The leaves first become affected, and the disease spreads into the heart of the turnip, which in a short time becomes rotten, and a very offensive smell arises. As the sheep and cattle are fed in the fall and winter chiefly on the turnip, this disease will prove a serious calamity. The same disease has attacked the turnips in Ireland, and it is remarked that if, with potatoes, the farmers should lose their turnips to any great extent, it is a matter for serious consideration how they are to obtain a substitute as food for their sheep and cattle. Extensive importations of Indian corn from the United States are looked upon as the only resource.

Love Something.—That man alone is happy, who has something to love, truly and sincerely. If he has no wife nor children, like Cowper he may be attached to a dumb creature—a bird or a dog. James Montgomery, the poet, has lived for years, with no other companion than a cat. Our attachments are strong—and, we are so constituted, that our affections are drawn out upon something. A favorite tree or flower—or devotion to some particular service, may yield us exquisite pleasure. Few men who have some object to love, turn out to be depraved and wretched. They who have nothing to love are often outcasts from society and die miserably at last.

General Intelligence.

FROM MEXICO.

The latest accounts from Mexico state that Santa Anna is at last firmly re-settled. He declines the Presidency, but accepts the command of the army. His entry into the Capitol was a perfect triumph. The Mexican authorities seem determined to press the war with all vigor.

The Government has issued requisitions upon the States for their contingents of troops, requiring them to appear at the City of Mexico, or at San Luis Potosi, within 70 days after the publication of the order.

All persons between the ages of 16 and 50 are obliged, by a recent decree, to take arms when required to do so, as members of the National Guard, &c.

A free pardon is tendered to all deserters from the regular line, who may return to their respective corps, within three months.

All duties are remitted upon the introduction and sale of cannon, muskets, swords, and all kinds of arms and munitions of war, except, perhaps, powder, for one year.

The Government promises to purchase such arms, etc., as may be needed, of persons taking advantage of this permission. Measures are simultaneously taken to establish a national foundry, and the manufacture of gunpowder is thrown open to competition. States, associations, and individuals engage to raise and maintain bodies of troops in proportion to their means, and entirely independent of Government requisitions. Pueble sends to the frontier, armed and supported at her sole cost, 1000 men. One citizen of Mexico raises an equal number, calling upon the Government for means of arming them only. The members of the Supreme Court of Justice, in session recently, came to a similar determination.

Owen Brennan, Esq., Deputy Sheriff, has politely furnished the following State Prison Statistics, viz: Number of males in Prison Oct. 1, 1845, 797; received into prison during the year 223; total 1020. Discharged by expiration of term 191; pardoned 37; died in prison 26; sent to Asylum 5; suicide in their cells 2; drowned 1; total 262. Number of males in prison Sept. 30th, 1846, 758; number of females in prison Oct. 1, 1846, 61; received into prison during the year 31; total 92. Discharged by expiration of term 21; pardon 2; sent to Asylum 1; died in prison 1; total 24. Total number in prison Oct. 1, 1846, 826.

About 400 horses have perished in Queens county alone, from [the cholera. There seems to be no remedy for the disease. One thing is certain, that it is not in the feed;—for horses have died who have been kept up and fed on grain, and upon hay two years old. We are informed that a similar disease prevailed about thirty years since in this country. The first horse died at Foster's meadow, and what is a singular coincidence, the first horse attacked by the distemper this year, was at the same place, and on the identical farm where the other animal was attacked and died thirty years since.

The N. Y. Journal of Commerce, says: The degree conferred on Prof. Morse, by Yale College, was not that of L. L. D. exactly, but a degree suited to his peculiar discoveries, and more honorable than the other. The phraseology was, "Naturæ Artisque Legum Doctor;" and it will be indicated, we suppose, by these initials. We like this new plan of conferring titles suited to the particular services which distinguished individuals have rendered to science and mankind.

Mr. N. Longworth, the opulent horticulturist of Cincinnati, has about one hundred acres under culture for grapes, strawberries, raspberries, peaches, &c. Fifty acres are devoted exclusively to grapes and strawberries, the remainder to peaches and other fruits. Of peaches he has 9,000 trees that will come into bearing in 1847—48, besides 20,000 young trees that are now being budded, and will be used to replace decaying trees, and to extend the business with the increase of the city.

The present has been one of the most sickly seasons ever known in North Carolina. It has progressed in defiance of all local causes, from the seaboard to the mountains. It is remarkable that Wilmington should have been much less affected than other parts of the State. The pine country in the lower part of the State is said to have been exempted in a considerable degree. The diseases prevailing are the fever and ague, the old-fashioned "billious," and in some cases congestive fever, and what is called by some "the cold plague."

Major Dunn, a teacher of broad-sword exercise, made, on Friday, at Pittsburg, a violent assault on Rev. Dr. Uphold, rector of Trinity Church, with a cane, inflicting a severe contusion on his head. It appears that the Major was charged with intemperance, and as he was a communicant of Dr. Uphold's church, he requested him not to present himself at the communion table again, whereupon he knocked the reverend gentleman down with his cane.

A man by the name of Hamlin, of Vevay, Ia., who was in the habit of abusing his wife, was warned by somebody to leave the place in due time. This he did not heed. Mr. Somebody and somebody's friends went to the house of said Hamlin and rode him on a rail to the river, where they put him in a skiff and transported him to the Kentucky side, gave him a dollar, and ordered him to leave. His wife the next day followed him, notwithstanding his ill treatment of her was so outrageous as to awaken the indignation of the community.

The organ of Trinity Church has been exhibited two days in succession, to a crowded audience. On the first day there were 6,732 persons admitted, and on the second day 11,257, by tickets. It is the largest organ in the United States, and there are but few larger on the Continent of Europe. Its powers, combined with its sweetness of tone, astonished the professional gentlemen who were present, as well as the audience.

Samuel S. Randall, Esq., who has for nine years held the post of Deputy Superintendent of common schools of this State, has resigned on account of ill health, and proposes to retire to a small farm in the milder climate of Virginia, there to recruit his strength, and train his sons to habits of independent, manly industry.

The Montpelier (Vt.) Journal says: We have a melancholy duty to perform, in announcing the very sudden death, on Sunday morning, at his room at the Pavilion, of Dr. William Cullen Warner, representative of the town of Bristol, aged 42 years. By a grievous mistake, Dr. Warner took a large dose of strychnine, which, in spite of the immediate services of a physician, resulted in death in the space of ten minutes.

There was a great fire at Columbus, Ga., a few days ago, by which four blocks of buildings, and great quantities of dry goods, were destroyed. Over fifty houses were blown up to check the progress of the fire.

The storm last week was very destructive in the Western part of the State, in consequence of the serious freshets it has produced in the rivers. There has followed from this a great break in the Erie Canal at Eagle Harbor, which will require ten days' industry to repair, which at this business season must produce great distress and embarrassment in the produce market. The Genesee Valley Canal is so much injured that it will not be used above Mt. Morris again this fall.

We find in our exchanges sad accounts of the storm of Tuesday, Oct. 13th. It was felt east, west, north, and south. Many buildings were thrown down, and some lives lost.

The New York Sun says that a story is going the rounds, of a slave ship chased a year or two ago, by two British cruisers. She passed her 300 slaves up from the hold, tied shot to their feet, and slipped them overboard—then started all the extra water, provisions, lumber, &c., and when overhauled by the cruiser, exhibited regular papers, and was released.

The Hartford Courant of Oct. 15th says: About 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, our citizens were shocked to hear that Mr. Daniel F, Olcott, of the firm of J. B. Olcott & Co., proprietors of a livery stable in this city, and Mr. Lewis M. Holcomb of St. Louis, but formerly of Granby, were lying dead in a room in the 4th story of the U. S. Hotel—one having shot the other and then killed himself. A jury of inquest was summoned. They were unanimous in their verdict that Daniel F. Olcott came to his death by means of a pistol shot fired by the hand of Lewis M. Holcomb; and that Lewis M. Holcomh came to his death by means of a pistol shot fired by his own hand.

The Evening Post says:—"The quantity of Indian corn exported from this port previous to the first of September of this year is estimated at 562,000 bushels. From Philadelphia, during the same period, it amounted to 105,707 bushels, and from New Orleans 941,589 sacks. The export of this article from Boston and Baltimore each, was probably larger than from Philadelphia. The product of this country this year is estimated by some at five hundred millions of bushels. The census of 1840 states the product of that year to have been 377,531,875 bushels."

The value of the western produce received in New Orleans during the year ending the first instant, is estimated at seventy-seven millions, one hundred and ninety-three thousand, four hundred and sixty-four dollars. The value of cotton alone being a little less than thirty-five millions. Corn one and a half millions. Tobacco four and a half millions. Sugar one and a quarter millions. Lard near two millions. Pork and Bacon, near five millions.

A letter dated Porto Rico, Sept. 16th, says, a tremendous gale passed over this Island on the 12 inst. doing great damage in life and property. The French frigate Mithridate, the Spanish schooners Gran Remedio, Isabel, 2d, and Teresa, and the sloops Three Brethren and Little Margaret dragged their anchors and went ashore—some were totally lost and others sustained great injury. The Teresa suffered most, that of the loss of the Captain, four colored passengers, and Capt. Jose Baregeo of the 1st battallion of Ponce militia.

The Montreal Times translates the following from the Revue Canadienue: An old man died at Wexford, Upper Canada, a short time since, named Daniel Atkin, but rejoiced in the soubriquet of Black Dan. At the time of his decease, he was 120 years of age, and during his life had contracted seven marriages, by which he had an incredible number of children, grand-children, and great-grand-children, in all about 570—370 of whom are boys, and 200 girls."

The Springfield Gazette says:—"We have received a specimen of Pears about half ripened, of the second growth of this season, from a tree of James Cooley, Esq., of Granville. The first growth came to maturity early in July, after which the tree blossomed again, and bore another small crop, now nearly ripe. A similar thing occurred on the same tree last year."

Mr. Edward Hallock, of Milton, Ulster county, N. Y., has sent us samples of the fleeces of four yearling ewes. The samples are from eight to ten inches in length, without stretching, and the fleeces from which they were taken are stated to have weighed, respectively, 8, 8 9-4, 8 3-4, and 9 3-4 pounds.

The Customs receipts at Liverpool have increased to such an extent as to astonish the officers in the Long-room. The daily receipts at the Customs, until lately, reached from 7 to £8,000; whereas the receipts on several days recently have been 13 to £14,000.

As the freight train from Boston to Norwich was three miles this side of Oxford, it came in contact with some cattle, which got on the road in consequence of a fence having been blown down by the gale. This happened near a curve in the road, and so heavy was the concussion that the locomotive, together with the whole train of cars, 14 in number, was thrown from the track, and nearly all destroyed, but two or three of the cars being undamaged.

The amouut of tolls received on all the New York Canals, from the commencement of navigation to the 20th of September inclusive, is $1,891,165—an increase over last year of $138,065.

The recent rise of a penny a pound on cotton in Europe, is sufficient to increase the value of one whole crop upwards of five millions of dollars.

A bibliomaniac, of Vienna, has a work printed at Nuremburgh in 1588, with plates illustrative of the Polka; demonstrating that this dance has afflicted mankind for nearly three centuries.

Five thousand barrels American Beef have been purchased in Liverpool to be shipped to Dublin, Newry, and Belfast. The want of Ireland now occupies the constant attention of the British Government.

Mr. Hawkins, the Temperance Lecturer, stated at a meeting in Faneuil Hall, Boston, on Thursday evening, that he had visited a house in that city which contained forty-four families—as much misery as he had seen, he never beheld any thing before so revolting to humanity. In one room were six children—one infant—whose mother had been for six or seven days drunk in a cellar in Broad-street.

Newfoundland was visited on the 19th, 20th, and 21st ult., with a most terrible gale, which resulted in a fearful destruction of life and property. The Star has a Telegraphic dispatch, which says: "The hall at St. Johns was blown down, killing three persons, and injuring several others. Bridges were carried off. A boat with six or seven on board was upset and all perished. Wrecks cover the waters, and dead bodies are continually washed ashore."

The following days of the week are set apart for public worship in different nations:—Sunday, by the Christians; Monday, by the Grecians; Tuesday, by the Persians; Wednesday, by the Assyrians; Thursday, by the Egyptians; Friday, by the Turks; Saturday, by the Jews.

We have recently been informed of the death of Mr. Thomas Gilmore, at Watertown, Jeff. Co., Wisconsin, who removed from Onondaga Hollow, one year ago last June, with a family of six children. Since their arrival in the Territory, sickness and death have been the almost constant visitation of the family, until in the death of Mr. G. all but a daughter aged about 12 years and a younger son have been removed.

The Baptist Missionary Convention of the State of New York, is to hold its twenty-fifth anniversary with the Baptist church in Elbridge, Onondaga County, on Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 21 and 22.

At Frankfort, Ky., a few days since, a carpenter, whilst engaged in repairing a house, found concealed in the roof about $6,000 in Commonwealth Bank paper, of which, with other money, that Bank was robbed as long as 16 years ago.

A temperance society has been formed of the officers and students of Brown University. At its first meeting, President Wayland, Dr. Caswell, and about one hundred students, came forward and joined.

The monument to the mother of Washington, the corner stone of which was laid by Gen. Jackson at Fredericksburg, has never been completed, but now remains in a shameful condition, unfinished and mutilated, and covered with coarse inscriptions written by idlers.

The Governor of South Carolina has set apart the 5th of November next, as a day of humiliation, thanksgiving and prayer in that State.

The Governor of Georgia has issued a proclamation, recommending the citizens of that Commonwealth to observe the same day in a similar manner.

Among the curiosities of the late State Fair, were three fine calves by one cow, a native, who are each marked with the same spots in every particular, even to a minute white spot on the head, behind the ears.

The citizens of Yazoo, Miss., have determined to make a charcoal road over the valley swamp of that place. Sixty hands cutting timber will burn and spread the coal over two miles in thirty days—the embankments being already thrown up.

It is reported that some of the rum advocates in the towns in which no licenses are granted, are giving away liquors for the purpose of showing that more drunkenness prevails under the "no license' system, than formerly.

By a recent telegraphic arrangement, the papers in Albany, Troy, Utica, Syracuse, Auburn, Rochester and Buffalo, are furnished with reports from New York twice a day—at 2 and 8 P. M.

The Baltimore Sun says:—"A communication was made from Buffalo to Baltimore last week, and an answer was received at the telegraph office in the former city in about two hours!"

At a meeting of the Horticultural Exhibition in Philadelphia, a few days ago, Mr. Cowperthwaite presented a bunch of Syrian Grapes; such, remarks the U. S. Gazette, as were never grown before in this country. The berries were as large, almost, as grape shot.

Rev. E. Burgess and Rev. A. Hazen, with their wives, missionaries of the American Board, sailed from Boston for Bombay a few days since. They are destined for the Ahmednugger mission.

A powerful revival is now in progress in the city of Baltimore, and it is said as the fruits of it, that upwards of 2,000 members have been added to the Methodist Episcopal Church in that city within the past two weeks.

The town of Worcester. Mass., at their last meeting, appropriated $11,400 for schools, and $15,900 more for the erection of school-houses.

Rev. C. Van Rensselaer intends building a church on the ground of Niblo's late Saloon, at his own expense.

The Boston papers make a comparison between the receipts of the different routes between New York and Boston in the month of July 1845 and the corresponding month in 1846. In July '45 the rates were only two dollars, and the receipts on the different routes were $45,208. In July of the present year the fare was four dollars, and the receipts were only $35,963, being $9,245 less for a single month than at the ruinous prices of the preceding year.

Among the improvements of the times, we find in England mercer shops in which articles of mourning are exclusively sold; and to be consistent, the storekeeper and his clerks are all clad in the habiliments of woe. A gentleman who called in to inquire if he could have a pair of dark grey gloves, was requested to step into 'the mitigated affliction department,' an inner room, where second mourning was kept.

He that cannot forgive others, breaks the bridge over which he must himself pass, for every man hath need of forgiveness.

Mr. Philip Pietch of this City has invented a new file for newspapers, which is a great improvement on those now in use. Journals filed on it may be folded up so as to be read with ease, while the old file renders the reading of the paper upon it a difficult operation, especially near the heads of the columns. The improved file has a flexible joint in the middle, which is made ripid at pleasure, and the journals are made fast without piercing or tearing them.

The Barnstable Patriot says that two men belonging to Nantucket, discovered on the shores of that Island a few days since, after an unusually low ebb tide, a cask, the head showing itself a little above the surface of the water, and which they found, on extricating it from its bed, to contain 5,000 Spanish dollars. It is thought to be a part of the cargo of a brig wrecked at that place more than fifteen years ago.

By the Tenth Annual Report of the Vermont Asylum for the Insane, Brattleboro, which has just been published, the Institution appears to be in a flourishing condition. The new buildings have been completed and are nearly filled. 460 have enjoyed its advantages the past year, 197 have been admitted, 162 have been discharged, and 291 now remain. Of those discharged, 94 have recovered. The terms are fixed at two dollars and fifty cents per week. Patients from other States are received on the same terms as those from Vermont.

The importation of Indian corn into England is increasing with a rapidity almost incredible. During the month of August, 1845, the quantity imported into Liverpool amounted to only 9,360 bushels, while in August of this year the importations reached 160,440 bushels.

Mr. Alger, of Bridgewater, gathered from two acres of meadow, 296 bushels and 17 quarts of cranberries, which, at $2 per bushel, would amount to the handsome sum of $593.

Washington was sometimes given to pleasantry. Journeying east on one occasion, attended by two of his aids, he asked some young ladies at a hotel where he breakfasted, how they liked the appearance of his young men? One of them promptly replied, 'We cannot judge of the STARS in the presence of the SUN!'

Under all circumstances there is but one honest course; and that is, to do right and trust the consequences to Divine Providence. 'Duties are ours—events are God's.' Policy, with all her cunning, can devise no rule so safe, salutary and effective, as this simple maxim.

The value of three things are justly appreciated by three classes of persons. The value of youth by the old, the value of health by the diseased, the value of riches by the needy.

The man who will live above his present circumstances, is in danger of living in a little time much beneath them, or, as the Italian Proverb runs, 'The man who lives by hope, will die by hunger.'

The County of Oneida has lost one of its oldest and most distinguished citizens, in the death of Hon. Henry Huntington, of Rome. Mr. Huntington, in the former part of his life, occupied several prominent public positions. He was a State Senator, a member of the Convention of 1821, and candidate for Lieut. Governor on the ticket with De Witt Clinton, in 1826. He was, until last spring, when his declining health obliged him to leave the post, President of the Bank of Utica, and was probably, the wealthiest man in the County.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

ELIHU BURRITT, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in ADVANCE.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

Miscellaneous.

HOME.

"Then the disciples went away unto their own home."
John 15: 10.

Where burns the fire-side brightest,
  Cheering the social breast?
Where beats the fond heart lightest,
  Its humble hopes possessed?
Where is the hour of sadness
  With meek-eyed patience borne—
Worth more than that of gladness,
  Which mirth's gay cheek adorn?
Pleasure is marked by fleetness,
  To those who ever roam;
While grief itself has sweetness,
          At home—sweet home!

There blend the ties that strengthen
  Our hearts in hours of grief—
The silver links that lengthen
  Joy's visit, when most brief;
There, eyes, in all their splendor,
  Are vocal to the heart;
And glances, bright and tender,
  Fresh eloquence impart;
Then, dost thou sigh for pleasure?
  O! do not wildly roam;
But seek that hidden treasure
          At home—sweet home!

Does pure religion charm thee,
  Far more than aught below?
Would'st thou that she should arm thee,
  Againt the hour of woe?
Her dwelling is not only
  In temples built for prayer,
For home itself is lonely,
  Unless her smiles be there;
Wherever we may wander,
  'Tis all in vain we roam,
If worshipless her altar,
          At home—sweet home!

THE POOR IN IRELAND.

The Editor of the Lowell Journal, who is now traveling in Europe, writes the following in relation to his trip through Ireland, dated June 21, 1846:—

The great mass of the people in Ireland are poor, and live poorly, yet there is not that terrible suffering in Ireland that we hear of in America. Indeed, were we to judge of the condition of the people of Ireland by the beauty of their fields, and the luxuriant richness which nature everywhere displays, we would say that Ireland was the most happy country in the world—"a land flowing with milk and honey." But we see a great many very poor people and poor cottages in the South of Ireland, and everywhere in Ireland, yet one cannot help being amused with what he sees in Ireland, notwithstanding the poverty of the people. The natural wit and humor of the nation leaks out continually. We had many amusing instances of it as we journeyed on. It is the universal custom, I find in Cork, Tipperary, and Kilkenny, for the drivers to make remarks to the passers-by on the road, and the passengers do the same.

At a place called Watergrass Hill, ten miles from Cork, we changed horses. While there, as usual, we had half-a-dozen beggars around us, asking for alms. To a poor-looking being one of the passengers gave a penny. "There," said he, "take that and see that you put it in the savings bank." A half a mile further on, one of the horses cast a shoe; a man working on the road near by for ten pence a day, ran and picked it up and gave it to the driver. At the bottom of the hill was a blacksmith, who came out of his smythey with nothing on but his trowsers, and scant at that. He put the shoe on, but while he was at work the driver and many of the passengers were joking him. We had not got a mile before it came off again. Then if you could have heard the imprecations showered upon "the blackguard," you would have been amused. We came to another smith soon, and he tried his hand to put the shoe on. When he had finished, "now," said the driver, "will that not come off?" "Devil fear of it," said he. "If it does, just stop when you come back to-morrow and shoot me." While we were having the shoe put on, a ragged, red-headed boy went by on a poor, miserable donkey cart. One of the passengers beckoned to him to stop. He did not at first, but when about three rods past. "What do you want, please sir?" "Why," said the passenger, "come back here and pick up that half crown you've dropped, you piece of extravagance." I never saw a more ludicrous scene. The boy had probably never possessed a silver coin in his life. At one of the towns where we stopped, were a couple of dirty looking, ragged fellows standing near the door of a small whisky cabin. The driver, who was fond of his joke, looked at them a moment, and then said to the keeper of the shop who was at the door, "Jamie, just give those two gentlemen a bottle of champagne, if you please."

While passing through Tipperary county, amid its wild hills, the children would run out of the cabins by the road side, after the coach for pennies. I have often been surprised at the length of time some of the little girls would keep up with us. When three or more would be chasing us at a time, it was sport to see the whole of them dive into the dust and scrabble after a penny. Sometimes it would be a minute before it could be ascertained who had got it. When it was settled, up they would get again and after the coach. Of course these youngsters were not burthened very heavily with clothes. One little chap followed us a mile with nothing on but his shirt.

DYING FROM HOME.

The following is an extract from the Memoirs of the Rev. Mr. Thatcher, a distinguished clergyman of Boston, who died some years ago on the continent of Europe, whither he had repaired for the benefit of his health.

"It is a sad thing to think that we must die away from our home. Tell not the invalid who is yearning after a distant country, that the atmosphere around him is soft and the gales are filled with balm, and the flowers are springing from the green earth; he knows that the softest air to his heart would be the air which hangs over his native land, that more gratefully than all the gales of the South, would breathe the low whisper of anxious affection, that the icicles clinging to his own eaves, and the snow beating against his own windows, would be far more pleasing to his eye, than the bloom and verdure which only more forciqly remind him how far he is from that spot which is dearer to him than all the world beside. He may indeed find estimable friends, who will do all in their power to promote his comfort and assuage his pains; but they cannot supply the place of the long known and mute language of his face, they have not learned to communicate without hesitation, his wishes, impressions and thoughts to them. He feels that he is a stranger, and a more desolate feeling than that could not visit his soul. How much is expressed by that form of oriental benediction—may you die among your kindred."

SMOKING.

I do not dispute the right to smoke; but I do dispute any man's right to smoke in my face in the places of promiscuous resort. I do not say that it is degrading or ungentlemanly to smoke good segars, or bad ones, or a pipe. But I do say, that the man who comes upon the promenade of a steamer, "abaft the shaft," where ladies and gentlemen are assembled, and there sits himself down at the windward of them, to smoke and spit, is a violater of their individual rights, is uncivil, and for the time-being a blackguard, however much of a gentleman he may be elsewhere and on other occasions. If any thing could make me believe that tobacco smoking was in its very nature uncivilizing and degrading, it would be the exhibitions of incivility, such as I have described, which it induces men to be guilty of who in every other respect seem to be courteous and gentlemanly. When I went into the bar-rooms or the "smoking rooms" of the West, I should have thought myself quite uncivil to complain of those who were smoking. But I thought there was reason for complaint, when almost on no occasion could I get a seat in the fresh air, but some smoker would contrive to get further to the windward than myself and make me breathe out of his mouth. Ladies, though their sweet presence protects the gentlemen who accompany them from some inconveniences, and even introduces them to some choicer accommodations—even ladies, are no protection against the smokers. No decorum, no beauty, no necessity can propitiate the smoker.

CHINESE ADVERTISEMENT.

The following, says Cist, is an advertisement extracted from a periodical paper published in Canton:—"I Achen Teu Chinchen—a lineal descendant of Coap Boi Roche Chinchen, the celebrated sculptor and carver in wood, who, through his unremitted studies to promote rational religious worship, by the classical touches of his knife and chisel, has been honored by the emperors, kings, and rajahs of the east, and supplied them with superior idols for public and domestic worship, now humbly offer my services in the same theological line, having traveled from hence at a considerable expense to perfect myself in anatomy, and in copying the most graceful attitudes of the human figure, under those able masters, Nollekins and Bacon. Achen Teu Chinchyn is now in possession of casts of the most approved models and Elgin marbles. He is ready to execute to order, idols from 12 feet high, well proportioned, down to the size of a marmoset monkey, or the most hideous monster that can be conceived, to inspire awe or reverence for religion. My charges are moderate; for an ourang outang, three feet high, seven hundred dollars, ditto rampant, eight hundred; a sphinx, four hundred; a bull with hump and horns, six hundred and fifty; a buffalo, eight hundred; a dog, two hundred; ditto couchant, one hundred and fifty, and an ass, in a braying attitude, eight hundred and fifty;—the most durable materials will be used. Of stationary, granite, brass, and copper, I have provided sufficient to complete orders to any extent."

The Power of The Press.—Douglas Jerrold says, the power of the press is as boundless as that of society. It reaches the throne—it is enclosed in the cottage. It can pull down injustice, however lofty, and raise up lowliness, however deep. It castigates crimes which the law can only punish without repressing them. Wherever an eye can see, or a hand write, there is the press. Persons in tribulation rely on it for redress, and they feel sure that wrong will not go unpunished if it be known to the journals. Like light, it penetrates into every nook and cranny of society, and carries help and healing on its beams. It nips rising abuse in the bud. It stops the tide of tyranny when setting in full flood. It derives its vast power from the principles of its being. Speaking out truth and representing reason, it concentrates on one point the whole moral power of society, and persuades and governs without violence, by the mere knowledge that the physical power of society is always ready to vindicate the right. As it comes into operation, the course of society becomes uniform and equal, and its ends are obtained without those convulsions and rebellions by which a rude, unlettered people, make their will known.

The Wife.—It needs no guilt to break a husband's heart; the absence of content, the mutterings of spleen, the untidy dress, and cheerless home; the forbidding scowl and deserted hearth; these, and other nameless neglects, without a crime among them, have harrowed to the quick the heart's core of many a man, and planted there, beyond the reach of cure, the germ of dark despair. O may woman, before that sad sight arrives, dwell on the recollections of her youth, and cherishing the dear idea of that tuneful time, awake and keep alive the promise she then so kindly gave. And, though she may be the injured, not the injuring one—the forgotten, not the forgetful wife—a happy allusion to that hour of peace and love—a kindly welcome to a comfortable home—a smile of love to banish hostile words—a kiss of peace to pardon all the past—and the hardest heart that ever locked itself within the breast of selfish man will soften to her charms, and bid her live, as she had hoped, her years in matchless bliss—loving, and content—the soother of the sorrowing hour—the source of comfort, and the spring of joy.
[Chambers' London Journal.

Manlike and Godlike.—A gentleman who had filled many high stations in public life, with the greatest honor to himself, and advantage to the nation, once went to Sir Eardly Wilmot, in great anger, at a real injury he had received from a person high in the political world, which he was considering how to resent in the most effectual manner. After relating the particulars to Sir Eardly, he asked if he did not think it would be manly to resent it? "Yes," said Sir Eardly, "it would doubtless be manly to resent it; but it would be Godlike to forget it." This, the gentleman declared, had such an instantaneous effect upon him, that he came away quite another man, and in a temper quite altered from that in which he went.

Short Waists.—In 1794 short waists became fashionable; and that portion of the body which fifteen years previously had been preposterously long, reaching nearly to the hips, was now carried up to the armpits. This absurdity occasioned a waggish parody on the popular song, 'The Banks of Banna,' which begins with—

'Shepherds, I have lost my love;
Have you seen my Anna?'

The parody began with—

'Shepherds, I have lost my waist;
Have you seen my body?'

The gown was worn still open in front, but without hoops, and fell in straight loose folds, to the feet, which were decorated with shoes of scarlet leather. Immense ear rings were worn; the hair was frequently unpowdered, and from 1794 to 1797 large ostrich or other feathers were worn, single, or two and three together, of various bright colors, blue, green, pink, &c., standing half a yard high.

Going to Saratoga.—Somebody recommends to those who want to go to Saratoga to drink the water but cannot afford it, just to take at home the exercise that they would there, and prepare their own "Congress water" as follows—at a cost of six cents a gallon:

1 oz. super carbonate of soda.
1-2 oz. epsom salts.
1-4 oz. common salt.

Dissolved in one gallon of water. When bottled, add one dram tartaric acid to each bottle, and cork immediately.

A more simple mode may be adopted after a little practice, thus:

Put into a dry bottle two teaspoonfulls of soda—one of salts—one of acid—and one-third of salt—fill the bottle with pure water and cork it. It will be ready for use in two hours.

Things to be Remembered.—The English bushel of wheat weighs 70 pounds; 8 bushels, equal to 560 pounds, being a quarter of a ton weight.

9 2-3 bushels of American wheat, of 60 pounds to the bushel, equal the English quarter.

The English sack of flour weighs 280 pounds, and seven sacks, 1,960 pounds, equal to 10 American barrels.

The bushel of fine Liverpool salt weighs 56 pounds: the sack contains 4 bushels, 564 pounds.

Ten sacks make a ton weight, 2,240 pounds; the bushel of Ground Alum salt weighs 64 pounds, the sack contains 3 1-2 bushels, equal to 224 pounds—ten sacks make a ton.

To bring English sterling money to dollars and cents, double the pence, the answer is cents.

Preventative against Cold.—We take the following from the Tribune's account of the voyage of the Pilot Boat Romer across the Atlantic. We cheerfully commend the noble Irishman's "preventative."

"At nine o'clock the next morning, a Pilot Boat came alongside, and a Pilot was bargained to take the Romer into Cork. A line was thrown from the Irish boat to the Romer, in the center of which, in a tight noose, was securely fastened the Pilot, who was thrown into the sea, by his friends keeping fast hold of the other end of the line. He was now hauled on board the Romer, and jumping on deck, with the water dripping from him in streams, he made a single dash for the helm, singing out in the most indifferent manner imaginable, "Port your helm!" On being asked by the Captain if he would take some thing to prevent his catching cold, he pulled out a Father Mathew Temperance Medal which he said with a smile, was a sure preventative against taking cold."

VARIETY.

At Berlin and London the longest day has sixteen and a half hours. At Stockholm and Upsal, the longest has eighteen and a half hours, and the shortest five and a half. At Hamburg, Dantzic, and Stettin, the longest day has seventeen hours, and the shortest seven. At St. Petersburg and Tobolsk, the longest has nineteen, and the shortest five hours. At Toreno, in Finland, the longest day has twenty-one hours and a half, and the shortest two and a half. At Wandorbus, in Norway, the day lasts from the 21st of May to the 22d of July, without interruption; and in Spitzbergen, the longest day lasts three months and a half.

An improved yoke for oxen is constructed with sliding blocks attached to the under side of the beam of the yoke, near each end, and each sliding block is attached to the beam by bolts which pass through mortises so that the blocks may be made to slide occasionally to the right or left. To these blocks are attached the bows, the position of which are adjusted by guage screws; and by the sliding of the blocks, the distance of the oxen from each other may be regulated. The middle of the yoke is furnished with a draught staple or eye-bolt which is moveable and regulated by a hand-screw at the top, whereby the pitch of the draught it regulated.

An adventurous mouse attempting to run across the street, was seized by a barn door cock who was strutting in the warm sun. The poor mouse, unable to escape from the bill of his merciless enemy, in pure desperation forced his way some distance down the throat of chanticleer. The body of the defunct rooster, with nothing but the tail of the mouse protruding from his bill, furnished a warning as pertinent as any thing to be found in Esop, of the danger to any biped, with or without feathers, who may attempt to molest the seemingly helpless.

Eight of the twenty monarchs of Europe are Protestants; nine are Roman Catholics; two are of the Greek Church, and one is a Mohammedan. Those belonging to the Greek Church are the Emperor of Russia and the King of Greece. Four of them are men of irreproachable characters. Many of them are as respectable as our public men whom we delight to honor. The Queens are all of spotless character, which could not have been said of former times.

Why does sunshine extinguish a fire?

Because the rays engage the oxygen which had hitherto supported the fire.

Why does a fire burn briskly and clearly in cold weather?

Because the air, being more dense, affords more nourishment to the fire.

An expedition, which promises the most important results both to science and commerce, is at this moment fitting out in England, for the purpose of navigating some of the more important unexplored rivers in South America. It is to be under the command of Lord Ramelagh. Several noblemen and gentlemen have already volunteered to accompany his lordship, and the enterprising and scientific band, it is said, will sail as soon as the necessary arrangements shall be completed.

At Drontheim, in Norway, they have a regiment of soldiers, called Skate Runners. They wear leg gaiters for traveling in deep snow, and green uniform. They carry a short sword, a rifle fastened by a broad strap passing over the shoulder, and a climbing staff seven feet long, with a spike in the end. They move so fast in the snow that no cavalry can overtake them, and it does little good to fire cannon balls at them, as they go two or three hundred feet apart. They are very useful soldiers in following an enemy on a march. They go over marshes, rivers and lakes at a great rate.

The simple appearance and the whole deportment, says an American writer, of an obscure congregation at Hido, in the South Sea Islands, whom I had once known, and at no remote period, only as a set of rude licentious and wild pagans, did more to rivet the conviction of the Divine origin of the Bible, and of the holy influences by which it is accompanied to the hearts of men, than all the arguments, and apologies, and defences of Christianity, I ever read.

One of the English railways has a car devoted to lounging and smoking. It is forty feet in length, runs on six wheels, and reposes upon Adam's patent bow springs. It is provided with a long table, and parallel seats with morocco cushions. The lights are of plate-glass, and the beauties of the retreat are repeated again and again by superb mirrors inserted in the panels at each end. The furniture is richly carved mahogany; the groundwork of the vehicle is white, the mouldings gilt, the drapery bright crimson silk, the lamps of a self-balancing construction.

A patent for a New Invention has been obtained by Mr. William Beach, of Troy, for the application and mode of using cast iron plates for covering roofs. "They are about one foot square, and made to fit into another, so as to render the roof water-tight by applying white lead to the joints. It can be afforded at sixteen cents the square foot, and comes at about half the cost of copper. They weigh three and a half pounds a square foot." It is easily attached to the roof and promises to be of much utility.

M. Soyer, the Reform Club cook, of London, in a work recently published, called the 'Gastronomic Regenerator,' says; 'During the last ten months I had to furnish 25,000 dinners for the gentlemen of the Reform Club, and 33 dinner parties of importance, comprising about 70,000 dishes, and to provide daily for 70 servants of the establishment, independent of about 15,000 visitors, who have seen the kitchen department in that lapse of time.'

The most singular instance of longevity on record, is that of Thomas Cairne, who, it is asserted in the parish register of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, deceased on the 2d of January, 1588, aged 207 years. He was born in the reign of Richard II., anno 1389, and lived in the reign of no less than twelve kings and queens, to wit, Richard II., Henry IV., V., and VI., Edward IV., and V., Richard III., Henry VII., and VIII., Edward VI., Mary and Elizabeth. So say the Annals of Health.

The Philadelphia Ledger says that a map of the State of Pennsylvania, wrought in lace—in which the towns, or cities, rivers, &c., are all distinctly shown, each county being worked in a style of lace different from those adjoining—may be seen at the Female Institute of Mr. Burns, in Baltimore. This unique piece of female ingenuity, is the work of one of the ladies of the Institute, and contains fifty-five different kinds of lace work.

The Cottage Gardener says, that Dr. Harrison of Edinburgh prefers dandelion coffee to that of Mecca; and many persons all over the continent prefer a mixture of succory and coffee to coffee alone. Dig up the roots of dandelion, wash them well, but do not scrape them, cut them into the size of peas, and then roast them in an earthen pot, or coffee roaster of any kind. The great secret of good coffee is to have it fresh burnt and fresh ground.

The Suabian Mercury publishes the following statistics relative to the Austrian Monarchy: "The Austrian Monarchy covers an extent of 12,104 square miles, containing 35,293,957 souls, inhabiting 713 towns, 2,468 burghs, and 64,208 villages. The clergy is composed of 65,565 individuals, and the church revenue, without including Hungary, Transylvania, and the military frontier, exceeds 7,000,000 of francs. Austria exceeds all other states in the number of primary schools, in which more than 4,000,000 of pupils are educated at an expense of 4,000,000 of florins."

A man 65 years old, a native and resident of Nantucket, has recently, for the first time in his life, visited the continent. He traveled as far as Sandwich, Mass., and greatly admired the appearance of an entire forest of trees; a curiosity he had never before witnessed.

Queen Victoria's income, says a late English paper, amounts to the snug little sum of £500,000 per annum, or nearly equal to two millions five hundred thousand dollars yearly. This would make in round numbers, $48,076 per week, $6,868 per day, $232 per hour, $4 70 per minute.

The annual income of Louis Philippe, from what the nation allows him, in addition to that of his private property, is estimated to be $3,000,000—about $9,000 per day.

"If I were so unlucky," said an officer, "as to have a stupid son, I would certainly, by all means, make him a parson." A clergyman, who was in his company, replied, "You think differently, sir, from your father."

We reserve our decisive judgment of a drama till the last scene closes—till the curtain drops. Shall we not treat the schemes on Infinite Wisdom with as much respect as the plot of a drama?

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, }
IRA SAYLES, } Principals,

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Alfred, June 23, 1846.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classses will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

BIBLE DISTRIBUTION IN GERMANY—APPEAL OF THE AM. AND FOR. BIBLE SOCIETY.

We have received a copy of the Periodical Paper of the American and Foreign Bible Society, accompanied by a polite request from the Corresponding Secretary to publish some extracts from it. The following letter of J. G. Oncken, Missionary in Germany, together with the Appeal of the Managers of the Society, will show the reader how wide a field is open, and how urgent is the demand for assistance. Mr. Oncken's letter was written from Breslau, in Silesia, and addressrd to the Cor. Sec. of the Am. and For. Bible Society.

My Dear Brother—Your very acceptable letter, dated May 9th, reached me in this place, and tended not a little to refresh my spirit and strengthen my hands amidst the spiritual destitution of the people by whom I am surrounded. The contents of your letter could not have reached me at a more acceptable time, as I was just mourning on account of the small number of the laborers in the promising field around me. The happy decision of your respected Board, when I read it, filled my eyes with tears of joy, and not less the assurance from you, my brother, that you and many others of God's people in the United States, continue to plead for me and our glorious work before the Lord. As the churches and converts increase, we need this more than ever. The responsibility of our work is almost overwhelming; yet the Word and Spirit of the Lord are sufficient, not only to keep us from all error, but also to enable us to build the Lord's house after the divine original.

We are in our time exposed to peculiar dangers in this country, when both our political and ecclesiastical institutions, venerable by age, are shaken to their very centre, and when the religious excitement among all classes has reached an unexampled height. The Lord keep us from the troubled waters of politics, in which the Christians of Great Britain and America have, I fear, been so much immersed as to injure their spirituality of miud, and zeal for the Lord. We have just one work to do, and whatever convulsions may shake the earth, we must have our eye and heart fixed on this; to preach Christ, become all things to all men, that we may save some, and restore apostolic churches. He who has called and sent us, has thus far been with and blessed us, above our most sanguine expectations, and on His unchanging word, 'Behold I am with you always,' relying, we will go forth to the battle, certain that the most glorious victories will be achieved in the strength of Jehovah.

The object of my visit to this place, is the formation of a little church. Two brethren, formerly Roman Catholics, natives of Silesia, the one residing here, the other engaged as colporteur near Landeck, but also with us at present, have testified of the Lord, and the first fruit of their laboring is, the ingathering of four souls to the Lord, whom I intend baptizing into Christ's death this evening. To-morrow morning (Lord's day,) the church will be formed. In the afternoon I shall have a good opportunity of preaching the unsearchable riches of the gospel in the saloon of the Moravian brethren, and in the evening we shall commemorate the Lord's death with the infant church. There are several other believers in this town, convinced of the truth of believers' immersion, but fear restrains them from following the Lord at present.

Brother Straube is engaged among the Roman Catholics, distributing Scriptures, conversing with the people, and conducting small meetings for expounding the word of God, which, however, must generally be done in the forest. He is a dear, simple-hearted, but devoted brother. His abilities are not great, but his humility, zeal, and devotedness are of an extraordinary character. He has several times made excursions into Austria, an attempt always attended with imminent danger, for the object in view, the introduction of scriptures, if found out, he will be imprisoned for one or two years. He has supplied a number of Austrian peasants with testaments, which, in crossing the frontiers, were tied to his body. He will now and then renew these spiritual depredations, and we will pray the Lord to protect his poor servant, and deliver him from the mouth of the lion. If I can induce him, he will make his stay here, as there is a large field among the one hundred thousand immortal beings in the Silesian capital.

I leave this, if the Lord permit, on Monday morning, for Landshut and Gnadenfrei, the latter a Moravian settlement, and shall be back here on Tuesday or Wednesday evening on my way to Thorn, where I hope to meet brother Ehlert, another converted Roman Catholic, who is engaged as colporteur on the Vistula. In company with him, I intend to visit the Menonites, several of whom have already joined our ranks. In fact, the truth is advancing in every direction, and we only want a few hundreds of dollars to employ a greater number of brethren as colporteurs. The call for these is so loud, that I shall be compelled to visit Scotland in autumn, if spared, to induce the Scotch Baptist churches to give us an annual donation in aid of our funds. Oh! how desirable that the churches in America would give us annually five thousand dollars. We would then be enabled to employ ten more brethren. Six dear brethren, five of them converted Roman Catholics, have gone into Hungaria, and I have made arrangements to send them, through the booksellers at Leipzig, the holy scriptures for distribution. If you can do any more for us in this quarter, think of us.

Brother Kobner, one of my fellow-laborers at Hamburg, just returned from a tour to East Friesland and Holland. A church of fifteen members was formed between Leer and Wener, and we have prospects of seeing the cause advanced there by the labor of these brethren. What shall we render to the Lord for all the wonderful displays of his sovereign grace! And yet greater victories will be achieved by his gospel, if we are but steadfast, and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

I must still add that I visited Stettin in Prussia, where one hundred and twenty persons have been baptized since January. If we could place a dozen brethren there, immense good might be done to the souls of men. I gave one of the brethren there a small sum to enable him to labor among Protestants and Catholics in the circulation of the scriptures. I ordered a good supply of bibles and testaments for him from Hamburg. At Berlin, and at five or six villages where we have small assemblies, the work is progressing, and upwards of forty-nine have been baptized since January.

Now farewell, beloved brother.

Yours in Christ, our everlasting all,

J. G. ONCKEN.

APPEAL.

Whoever has carefully examined the facts collected in this periodical, will not need argument to be convinced, that at the present period there is an uncommon demand for the holy scriptures, and a corresponding opportunity for usefulness in their dissemination. It is a principle of Christianity, that responsibilities increase in proportion to opportunities for usefulness, and it thence results that there is now an increased obligation upon believers to contribute of their means, and to put forth their most vigorous exertions, to furnish the word of grace to the destitute.

This is especially true in respect to the supporters of the American and Foreign Bible Society. No preceding period in the history of this institution has been so replete with interest. Before it lies outstretched a widely extended and most inviting field. In addition to the Baptist Asiatic missions, embracing those in India, Burmah, Arracan, Siam, and China, for all of which it is accustomed to make annual appropriations according to their necessities, broad openings for active operations are presented in Germany, France, Hayti, the British possessions in America, the United States, Central and South America. In Germany, six colporteurs are already employed, and the facilities for usefully distributing the word of God in that country, are almost daily increasing. The earnest appeal for aid, in the interesting letter of brother Oncken, ought to meet a cheerful and fervent response in every Christian bosom. The churches of Christ have been praying for ages, that God will convert to the truth the members of the great anti-christian apostacy. Lately, the notes of alarm have been sounded through all the borders of Zion, that the enemy was hourly increasing in numbers and in power, and was coming in like a flood to overwhelm all the fairest portions of God's heritage. A species of panic and consternation has been manifested by some of the elect, and they have been almost ready to abandon efforts for the conversion of Romanists, from the conviction that the case was hopeless, until the great Captain of our salvation, in some signal and unprecedented manner, interposed to arrest the progress of the foe. But Jehovah Jesus delights to work through his people. While He leads them on to victory, He wishes them to fight. And He now revives their hopes and encourages their efforts, by creating a diversion among the enemy. The ranks of the latter are giving way; their ramparts lie broken, exposed, and defenceless, and He summonses his followers to enter the breach and strike home upon the foe. There are no stronger bulwarks of Romanism than ignorance of the scriptures, and that prejudice and bigotry which forbid their use. These barriers against the truth have already partly yielded, and it now depends upon Christians to force their way in and take possession in the name of Jesns, and by the aid of his word and Spirit. Every one who reads brother Oncken's letter, and bears in mind that he speaks as well of Romanists as of Protestants seeking the truth and receiving it in love, and contemplates the effects of Ronge's present movement in Germany, in breaking down the barriers of prejudice and superstition in the minds of hundreds of thousands of the inhabitants, and thus opening the way for the reception of the word of God, must feel convinced that this is the time, the very time, for those who love the Lord and the souls of men, to contribute freely for the distribution of the bible among the countrymen of Luther, the numerous reading population of Germany.

But it is not only in Germany that we need assistance. The French scriptures are in the progress of preparation for the press, and, when issued, we wish to distribute them in France, Hayti, Nova Scotia, and the Canadas. From all these quarters we have applications, and some are couched in terms of earnestness that compel us to early and efficient action.

We likewise wish to prepare the Spanish scriptures for circulation in Central and South America. In Central America, especially, we have facilities for scripture distribution, which it appears to us decidedly wrong to neglect. * *

But with all these wide and inviting fields spread out before us, the Society is at this very time entirely destitute of pecuniary means. We have not a dollar in the treasury. The last appropriation to Germany has been delayed for the space of two months, only on account of the want of funds. This state of things has originated from two causes. The calls upon us have been greater of late, and for nearly a year no special and urgent appeal has been made to the friends of the Society. During the early part of this period, the missionary operations of the Baptist denomination were regarded as in a perilous condition, and, as extraordinary exertions were being made to rescue them from danger, it was urged upon this Society not to push its efforts for the collection of funds. Upon the state of partial inactivity thence resulting, the spring and summer months supervened, a season not most favorable for collections in many of our best fields. The consequence is, that we are now obliged, most solemnly and pressingly, to call upon our friends to render us early and effectual aid.

The heathen need the bible. They cannot be evangelized without it. Any attempt permanently to diffuse among them the blessings of the gospel without imparting to them the word of God, must prove abortive. Such attempts have often been made by Roman Catholics, and the result has been a disgusting mixture of heathen superstitions and popish abominations. Upon the absolute necessity of the printed word in evangelizing the heathen, the remarks of brother Sutton, missionary in Orissa, are most impressive. "The usefulness of our Scriptures is indisputable. We could do nothing efficiently without them. Their influence resembles the showers of heaven and the glorious sun in maturing the fruits of the earth. However difficult it might be to assign to each influence its distinct result, there can be no difficulty in perceiving what would be lost by their withdrawment. Our scriptures and books are as much the means of intelligence and fruitfulness, in the hands of the Spirit, to our rising churches and schools, as the sun and clouds to the teeming earth."

Thousands and tens of thousands of Roman Catholics, in Germany and elsewhere, are ready to receive the bible at our hands. It depends upon the members and friends of this Society to furnish the means of tendering it to them. We have already colporteurs in the field who need support, and we wish to employ more. Shall we have the funds requisite for such a purpose?

The British and Foreign, and the American Bible Society, are extending the transfer, or truth-concealing, principle over the world. Shall we be enabled to prosecute vigorous measures for extending the translation, or truth-revealing, principle? * * *

In closing this appeal for aid, we ask those who love the bible, if, when they read its blessed pages and enjoy its delightful promises, they can feel contented not to contribute, according to their ability, to extend these glorious privileges to others? When they reflect, how small a sum is required to furnish a copy of the sacred scriptures to a fellow immortal, who otherwise may be for ever destitute, can they enjoy the peaceful calm of a good conscience, unless they assist to disseminate many copies among their brethren in iniquity, whose only hope of salvation is through the knowledge of the true God and of his Son Jesus Christ, as revealed in his word?

GERMAN CEMETERIES.

The German mind, if it be not highly religious, is, nevertheless, earnest and serious. It is more characterized by quiet reflection, than by that sort of activity which results in definite purpose. It is powerfully inclined to the superstitious, and it dwells with more satisfaction on the unknown and shadowy, than on the present and the real. It is to this peculiarity of the national mind, that I ascribe the extraordinary attention paid throughout Germany to the burial places of the dead. A burial ground, to the German, is like the house of an acquaintance, who, if he be no more bodily present, nevertheless, fills the place with his spiritual presence, and converses with the spirits of those who come to hold communion with his own. He therefore constructs the dwelling of death near his own living habitation; the path is worn by his frequent footsteps; its gate swings as easily on the hinges as if it opened to the mansion of earthly love; he fills the spot with the emblems of fresh existence; he plants it with the gay flowers of spring, and twines over it the unfading laurel; he carries his children to pass their holiday among its mounds and its monuments; and the lesson which he inculcates in their minds, as they rise to depart, is, "Do thus to me when I am gone, and keep green the sod of your father." I know that this practice of planting and strewing the graves of the dead with flowers, is not peculiar to Germany. It is done almost everywhere in Europe, and is likewise an old English custom. The beautiful passage in Shakspeare's Cymbeline, is undoubtedly familiar to my readers:

> "Whilst summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele,
> I'll sweeten thy sad grave; thou shalt not lack
> The flower that's like thy face, pale primrose; nor
> The azured hare-bell, like thy veins; no, nor
> The leaf of eglantine; whom, not to slander,
> Out-sweetens not thy breath."

A fresh grave in Germany is not only covered with bright flowers, but also with knots of brilliant ribbons, to which, commonly, papers are attached, containing some word of affection, some pious verse, or some simple prayer. Lemons are often mingled with these, the significance of which I do not know. The monument is generally in the form of a cross—that of the more humble class, constructed of wood painted black. German epitaphs are usually simple, and breathe a more religious, as well as a more naturally affectionate spirit, than those for instance, in Pere la Chaise. Yet, sometimes, the wildness and fancifulness of the German mind makes itself visible, even here. I met, the other day, the following inscription in a cemetery, just outside the walls of Berlin, where the philosophers Hegel and Fichte repose. It is engraved upon the monument of a royal counsellor, who seemed also to have been a philosopher.

> "Materie ist Ur-Schwere, Ur-Schwere verflieſſt nicht;
> Geist ist Urlicht erlischt nicht.
> Butte Arotomie. Lcite 118."

"Matter is primitive Gravity, primitive Gravity perishes not; Spirit is primitive light, primitive light is not extinguished."

This seems to have been a quotation from some philosophical work of the deceased, and expresses, if indeed it means any thing, a belief in the doctrine of materialism. Oftentimes, the tendency of the German imagination to take delight in whatever is horrible and gloomy, carries them, in the matter of which we treat, far beyond the bounds of good taste, and even decency. The sculpturings and devices upon tombstones are frequently of a character to cause involuntary loathing and abhorrence, making death more deathlike, and corruption more disgusting. Sometimes this gloomy fancy is carried from the church yard into the church, and over the funeral tablets which surround the inside walls, skulls and leg bones are cut in stone, with such grinning accuracy, that you can hardly convince yourself you are not viewing the mortal relics themselves, of those whose memories are thus unpleasantly perpetuated. In the burial ground at Leipsic, which is one of the oldest and most famous in Germany, there is one device upon a tombstone, which I am free to confess, is the most extraordinary sight I ever beheld. I can hardly permit myself to describe it. I will simply say, that it represents a human skull, and beneath it thigh bones, cut out of white marble in alto-relievo, and it evidently is intended to depict the state of semi-corruption. The bleached, glistening skull, itself horribly distorted and mutilated, is covered over with black reptiles, some looking out of the eyes, some sprawling over the forehead, some winding around the bones of the jaw, and—but enough. I cannot refrain also from saying, however unpleasant the theme, that, in this Leipsic burial ground, the same diseased and sombre taste suffers the vaults of tombs, which are often of great size, and most gorgeously sculptured and pompously inscribed, to remain open,—so that the pained and loathing eye sees the mouldering coffins of many generations, piled one upon another, and covered with the thick dust of time and mortality. After looking into these gaudy but sickening receptacles of death, the following simple lines suggested themselves to me. I hope I may not be considered egotistical in inserting them here:

> Let me sleep in mother earth,
> Lay her sod upon my breast,
> From her bosom I had birth,
> In her bosom I would rest.
>
> Let no pomp of marble rise,
> Writ with golden praises o'er,
> Foes will none the less despise,
> Friends will none the less deplore.
>
> If for Ill my life has been,
> Sculptor's toil were vainly spent;
> If to Good—the hearts of men
> Build the noblest monument.

STRIKING INSTANCE OF SELF-DEVOTEDNESS.

The most striking instance of self-devotedness in the cause of Christ of which I ever heard, in these days of deadness, I was told of last week by an English minister. It has never been printed, and therefore I will relate it to you just as I heard it, to stir up our cold hearts, that we may give ourselves to the Lord. The awful disease of leprosy still exists in Africa. Whether it be the same leprosy as that mentioned in the Bible, I do not know, but it is regarded as perfectly incurable, and so infectious that no one dares to come near the leper. In the south of Africa, there is a lazar-house for lepers. It is an immense space, enclosed by a very high wall, and containing fields which the lepers cultivate. There is only one entrance, which is strictly guarded. Whenever any one is found with the marks of leprosy upon him, he is brought to this gate, and obliged to enter in never to return. No one who enters in by that awful gate is allowed to come out again! Within this abode of misery there are multitudes of lepers in all stages of disease. Dr. Halbeck, a missionary of the Church of England, from the top of a neighboring hill, saw them at work. He noticed two particularly, sowing peas in the field. The one had no hands, the other had no feet, these members being wasted away by the disease. The one who wanted the hands, was carrying the other, who wanted the feet, upon his back, and he again carried in his hands the bag of seed, and dropped a pea now and then, which the other pressed into the ground with his foot; and so they managed the work of one man between the two. Ah! how little we know of the misery that is in the world. Such is the prison-house of disease. But you will ask, who cares for the souls of the hapless inmates? Who will venture in at this dreadful gate, never to return again? Who will forsake father and mother, houses and lands, to carry the message of a Saviour to these poor lepers? Two Moravian missionaries, impelled by a divine love for souls, have chosen the lazar-house as their field of labor. They entered it never to come out again; and I am told that as soon as these die, other Moravians are quite ready to fill their places. Ah! my dear friends, may we not blush and be ashamed before God, that we, redeemed with the same blood, and taught by the same Spirit, should yet be so unlike these men, in vehement, heart-consuming love to Jesus and the souls of men.

GOOD AND BAD LUCK.

"I may here as well as any where impart the secret of good and bad luck. There are men, who, supposing Providence to have an implacable spite against them, bemoan in the poverty of a wretched old age the misfortunes of their lives. Luck forever ran against them, and for others. One with a good profession, lost his luck in the river, where he idled away his time a fishing, when he should have been in the office. Another, with a good trade, perpetually burnt up his luck by his hot temper, which provoked his employers to leave him. Another, with a lucrative business, lost his luck by amazing diligence at every thing but his business. Another, who steadily followed his trade, as steadily followed his bottle. Another, who was honest and constant to his work, erred by perpetual misjudgments; he lacked discretion. Hundreds lose their luck by endorsing; by sanguine speculations; by trusting fraudulent men; and by dishonest gains. A man never has good luck who has a bad wife. I never knew an early-rising, hard-working, prudent man, careful of his earnings and strictly honest, who complained of bad luck. A good character, good habits and iron industry are impregnable to the assaults of all the ill luck that fools ever dreamed of. But when I see a tatterdemalion, creeping out of a grocery late in the forenoon, with his hands stuck into his pockets, the rim of his hat turned up, and the crown knocked in, I know he has had bad luck—for the worst of all luck is to be a sluggard, a knave, or a tippler."

THE DYING MOZART.

Wolfgang Mozart, the great German composer, died at Vienna, 1691. There is something strikingly beautiful and touching in the circumstances of his death. "His sweetest song was the last he sung," the "Requiem." He had been employed upon this exquisite piece for several weeks—his soul filled with inspirations of richest melody, and already claiming kindred with immortality. After giving it its last touch, and breathing into it that undying spirit of song which was to consecrate it through all time, as his "cygnean strain," he fell into a gentle and quiet slumber. At length the light footsteps of his daughter Emilie awoke him. "Come hither," said he, "my Emilie—my task is done—the Requiem—my Requiem is finished." "Say not so, dear father," said the gentle girl, interrupting him as tears stood in her eyes. "You must be better—you look better, for even now your cheek has a glow upon it—I am sure we will nurse you well again—let me bring you something refreshing." "Do not deceive yourself, my love," said the dying father, "this wasted form can never be restored by human aid. From Heaven's mercy alone do I look for aid, in this my dying hour. You spoke of refreshment, my Emilie—take these my last notes—sit down to my piano here—sing them with the hymn of your sainted mother—let me once more hear those tones which have been so long my solacement and delight." Emilie obeyed; and with a voice enriched with tenderest emotion, sung the following stanzas:

> Spirit! thy labor is o'er!
> Thy term of probation is run,
> Thy steps are now bound for the untrodden shore,
> And the race of immortals begun.
>
> Spirit! look not on the strife
> Or the pleasures of earth with regret—
> Pause not on the threshold of limitless life,
> To mourn for the day that is set,
>
> Spirit! no fetters can bind,
> No wicked have power to molest;
> There the weary, like thee—the wretched shall find
> A haven, a mansion of rest.
>
> Spirit! how bright is the road
> For which thou art now on the wing!
> Thy home it will be, with thy Saviour and God,
> Their loud hallelujah to sing.

As she concluded, she dwelt for a moment upon the low melancholy notes of the piece, and then turning from the instrument, looked in silence for the approving smile of her father. It was the still passionless smile which the rapt and joyous spirit had left—with the seal of death upon those features.

BIBLE READING OF PUBLIC CHARACTERS.

Lord Kenyon, who understood law rather better than the gospel, closed one of his charges to a jury as follows: "Finally, gentlemen, I would call your attention to the example of the Roman Emperor Julian, who was so distinguished for the practice of every Christian virtue that he was called Julian the Apostle."

But we need not leave our own country for similar examples among our legislators. We find Mr. Hodge, a member of Congress from Illinois, in the course of debate, quoting the following lines as coming from the Bible:—

> "Whilst yet the lamp holds out to burn,
> The vilest sinner may return."

Col. Benton, in the Senate, spoke of our Saviour's having cast seven devils out of a certain man, and of the devils taking possession of the swine, who ran violently into the sea and perished, &c.

Two members of a State Legislature, at the close of the session, addressed a circular to their coustituents—"We hope the course we have pursued and the votes we have given, will meet your approbation. We hope you will say to us, as Nathan said to David, 'Well done good and faithful servants.'"

"Mr. Speaker," said a member of a legislative body, earnestly opposing a measure before the House, "Mr. Speaker, I would no more vote for that measure, than I would fall down and worship the golden calf that Abraham made." "Mr. Speaker," said another member, "it was not Abraham that made the golden calf, it was Nebuchadnezzar."

An editor of one of our newspapers, when giving an obituary notice of a worthy man, remarked—"We may say of him as the Holy Scriptures have so beautifully expressed it—'An honest man's the noblest work of God.'"

One of our own city editors, himself a clergyman, too, refers to Daniel as having persecuted the saints before he became a Christian.

The last case I shall give, is taken from Waddy Thompson's Recollections of Mexico, in which, speaking of the Hospital of Lazarus, he says, "The inmates would have rivaled, in sores and rags, the brother of Mary and Martha!"

How many of these men read their Bible?

The Little Princess Anne.—When the Princess Anne, daughter of Charles the First, who died the eighth of December, 1640, lay upon her death-bed, and nature was almost spent, she was desired by one of her attendants to pray; she said she was not able to say her long prayer, meaning the Lord's prayer, but she would say her short one. "Lighten mine eyes, O Lord, that I sleep not the sleep of death." The little innocent had no sooner pronounced these words, than she expired. She was not quite four years old.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 29, 1846.

DESPERATE DEPRAVITY OF BOATMEN.

We have read a great deal, within the last two or three years, about the condition and prospects of Boatmen on the Canals in the State of New York—particularly in connection with the efforts to stop the running of boats on Sunday. Sometimes, when Government was to be reproved, they have been represented as a most deserving class of men, whom the State had "robbed of their right to the Sabbath," and had compelled to labor on that day in opposition to their inclinations and the dictates of their consciences. And while reading this side of the story, one would be inclined to think that the boatmen were really men of whom the world was not worthy, and whom, therefore, the existing powers had determined either to ruin or to exterminate. At other times, when a good report was to be made respecting the Sunday reform movements, great importance has been attached to what had already been accomplished, in inducing boatmen to desist from labor on Sunday, and in bringing them under the influence of religious instruction. There is a paper published at Syracuse, N. Y., called the Religious Recorder, which has been very forward, although it has not stood alone, in making these representations. But in a recent number of that paper we find the following article upon the subject, by one of the editors, which puts entirely a different face upon matters, and shows that the boatmen, instead of being so very desirous of enjoying the rest of Sabbath, are the last men the to indulge any such desires, and also that the efforts which have been put forth to stop the running of boats on Sunday, instead of having to any considerable extent accomplished that object, have only been as a drop in the bucket. We do not copy the article because we are glad to hear of the existence of such a state of things. Far from it; the announcement gives us pain, and deepens our conviction that a reform is needed much more extensive than the advocates of a stricter observance of Sunday have ever yet conceived of—a reform which shall bring men back to the law of God, and make them appeal to that as the unchangeable standard of duty. But we copy the article for the sake of showing how contradictory are the representations upon this subject at different times, and how much that is said has no other object than mere present effect. If there is any one thing which we hate, it is religious cant, by whomsoever used, and for whatever object. It does nobody any good, but disgusts all reasonable and thinking men. We fear that the Sunday reform movement has been cursed with a great amount of it, and we are glad to see a growing disposition to dispense with it and look the facts of the case fairly and soberly in the face. The following is the article from the Religious Recorder:—

Sabbath-breaking Canal Boats.

We have just enough business on this canal, (the Chenango,) to keep the fact of Sabbath-profanation before the community; though it is not, as yet, a giant iniquity. Why it should be tolerated at all, where there is so little pressure of business, and so little apology for such desecration, would be a mystery, were it not that the canal is owned by the State; and it seems to be the settled policy of the men that rule over us, to encourage Sabbath-breaking on all public works.

I wonder if it ever occurs to them, or to any of our thinking men, that this is the great cause of the unfaithfulness and dishonesty, so loudly complained of in our boatmen and forwarders. Why has it come to pass, that so few of our forwarders, (I mean those directly engaged in running lines of boats,) can be relied on as men of strict integrity? Why, for example, is my furniture five weeks in coming from Syracuse to Binghampton? when a line of boats, advertised as "affording special accommodations to emigrants," run the whole distance, twice a week? Why was a poor woman cast ashore, a few weeks since, at Syracuse, when it was abundantly evident that she had paid her fare through to Oswego? Why is it unsafe ever to trust the word of a captain? or to leave your goods, on a promise of the agent that such or such a boat will bring them? Why do such men as Mr. D. (there are some who maintain their integrity) frequently caution those who ship through houses, never to pay in advance—and never to pay a bill of lading professing to come from them, till they are sure it has not been forged, or altered from the original? I might fill my sheet with details of facts of this description, going to show a degree of desperate depravity, which is truly astonishing. And yet it is not strange. Men who fear God, are shut out of employment on our canals, except to a very limited extent. The very terms of the contracts between the forwarders and the boatmen oblige them to set at defiance the laws of heaven. A regular system of coercion, extending from the forwarding houses clear down to the lock-tenders, compels every man and boy, in any way connected with the business, to violate the Sabbath. There are a few Sabbath-keeping lines, it is true, but they are a mere drop in the bucket. The great mass of the men engaged on the canal, are habitual Sabbath-breakers. They are a community of men who "fear not God." Is it strange that they "neither regard man?" Is it not to be expected that the people, who, through their representatives, authorize and sanction such high-handed wickedness, should already begin to feel the consequences? By the laws of this State this iniquity has been brought into being, and is still sustained. By the settled laws of Jehovah's empire, the people of the State are beginning to reap the terrible retribution—in the want of confidence between man and man—in the prevalence of fraud, dishonesty and corruption—in the ruined health, and debauched characters of thousands of our promising young men—and in the regular training of an army of boys for the State Prison and the gallows. How long will it be, if this process of demoralization goes on, before our laws will cease to afford us protection?—before the hoarded wealth of the very men who make themselves rich by the gains of Sabbath-breaking, will lie at the mercy of an infuriated rabble?—before all law and all authority will be trampled in the dust—and nothing but an iron-handed despotism can save us from plunder and assassination? We fondly imagine, that our mountain stands strong, and we shall never be moved. But, as sure as the laws of cause and effect remain unchanged, the people of this State will yet experience a terrible retribution, unless there is a speedy reformation, and an entire putting away of this legalized Sabbath-breaking. P.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

Having, in my article on the Position of Sabbath-keepers, taken the high ground of Constitutional right, as our only resource and dependence, to secure our religious immunities, and having expressed much distrust in any appeals, under present circumstances, to the people or to legislatures, still I am not insensible to the fact, that there are many generous spirits in the community who sympathize deeply with us, and that there would be many more, were we to wake up to our work and disseminate more information on the subject among the populace; and also, that there are some among our public functionaries, who recognize the broad principles of true republicanism, and have independence enough, not only to acknowledge those vital principles, but to stand by them against the strong current of prejudice and bigotry. To such I am ever ready to render honor, their just meed; and my object in taking up pen, at this time, is to say, that they ought to be remembered, and be remembered gratefully, by all Sabbath-keepers. It is seldom, in these days of political degeneracy, that we find men who look beyond party prejudices and sectarian bigotry, and succor the weak and oppressed, from a pure sense of republican principles. Like the Sibylline Leaves, they ought to be more highly valued as they lessen in number, and be cherished the more ardently, for the rareness of the virtue.

During the last session of the Legislature of this State (New Jersey,) we had a fine opportunity of testing the sincerity and the duplicity of truckling demagogues. I do not wish to rehearse the double-faced dealing and disgusting prostitution we witnessed while pressing our claims of religious equality on the sense of justice of the members of the Legislature. Men who can be insensible to their solemn obligations, will feel no compunctions on being reminded of dereliction of duty, and violation of engagements, made only to be violated. I leave them to the retribution of oblivion. On consulting the Journal of the Assembly, I cannot find any direct, yea and nay, vote on the "Bill Granting—(restoring; it should never have been named granting,)—Equal Rights"—for it was "choked off;" but on the motion to strike out the provision of the fourth section of Revised Act on Vice and Immorality—the objectionable part, the removal of which would have placed Sabbath-keepers, to all intents and purposes, on a perfect equality with all other denominations—only six members voted for it. All the other friends, the friends, par excellance, of equal rights—the Simon Pure friends of the dear people—the genuine friends of liberty and equality—the self-constituted champions of the rights of the people and the vociferous execrators of union of Church and State—almost to a man turned their heels against us and the dearest rights of freemen. The six, the immortal six, were CORY, C. LIPPINCOT, PHILLIPS, PIERSON, PULLEN, and SROPE. These were the steadfast friends of the religious rights of American citizens—the firm friends of Constitutional Liberty! Give them the honor due their deserts. And wherever a Sabbath-keeper has the opportunity—the privilege—of upholding such an honest upright servant, it is but rendering unto Cæsar what belongs to Cæsar, to sustain them by our influence and our votes. This we can do as individuals, in our private capacity, without combining as a party, and thereby bringing odium on our cause; as we apprehend much damage would accrue upon organizing a political party on religious grievances—creating strong prejudices where now none exist, and strengthening the obstacles to redress; for it would have the appearance of desiring to make political capital out of those grievances, and seeking to ride into power on the sympathies of the public. Let us, individually, honor all who succor the cause of unalienable rights and religious privileges; and honor our cause by keeping it strictly separate and apart from the political squabbles of the day. Our Master's Kingdom, he declared, was not of this world. Let us be careful to do it no damage by merging it in, or contamanating it with, political broils, and thus bring reproach on our sacred banner, by unfurling it in the political arena, and subjecting it to the taunts of partisan gladiators. We occupy high ground. We have an honorable calling, and an honorable standing, and a noble and righteous cause. While we preserve our present position, we shall command the respect of all good men of all parties; and we are confident that our object will be much easier reached and much more fully accomplished by resorting to the tribunal established for redress, by the Constitution of the United States. Should we fail there, then, and not till then, does it become necessary, or would it be expedient, to appeal to the people; and even not then, until we have enlightened public opinion on the subject of human rights and religious immunities; which can be much better effected without having any political aim or bearing connected with it; which will most undoubtedly incur inveterate opposition and hostility; and thus not only impede the attainment of our rights, but become a hindrance to the promulgation of the cause of our Master. I repeat, again, that we are on high ground; if we keep our true position, there will be no need to crawl or beg. In the mean time, honor and sustain those who honor and sustain true republican principles, and show by their acts, that they understand human rights, and stand by religious immunities. It is of the utmost importance that we should never lose sight of those who have proven themselves true and faithful. It is a most vital principle we contend for—it is primary and essential. Other topics are ephemeral and change from year to year. Religious rights are abiding and change not. It is every thing to us, and without it, every thing else is nothing. It therefore becomes us to lay aside all other party predilections, and go for our religious rights when trampled upon, and stand by those who appreciate true republican principles, and uphold unfettered religious freedom. But all in the right way. W. M. F.

Bordentown, N. J., Oct. 23, 1846.

SELLING LIQUOR ON SUNDAY.

The authorities of the city of Boston seem determined to enforce the law against selling spirituous liquors upon Sunday. For several weeks past the city Marshall has been on the look out for offenders, and has succeeded in arresting several, whom he has promptly lodged in jail until the Sunday was past.

This special legislation against selling liquor on one day of the week, while its sale is allowed on the other six, has always appeared to us rather one-sided. If the law is predicated upon the notion that selling liquor is injurious to the public, or is a public nuisance, then we do not see why it is any less a nuisance on other days than on this one. But if the law is passed under the impression that it is contrary to the word of God, and therefore wicked, to sell liquor on Sunday, we are unable to see why it is not equally wicked to sell other things on that day. There is certainly an appearance of partiality here, in singling out this one kind of business, which must greatly weaken the respect of the people at large for the law. We think, with the Ohio Judge whose decision we published some weeks ago, that a man's business cannot properly be called a nuisance upon a religious day, unless it is a nuisance also upon other days; and if it is a nuisance at all, then it ought to be abated upon any and every day. On the other hand, we think that if it is a violation of the law of God, and one which legislators ought to restrain, for men to traffic in ardent spirits on Sunday, then the law ought equally to restrain traffic in other things. But here comes the rub. Public opinion is against enforcing the strict observance of any one day of the week by civil penalties; and long experience has shown that efforts to do it are wholly unavailing. Hence the expedient is adopted of mixing up the injurious effects of selling liquor with the sin of trafficing on Sunday, and so making a sort of apology for the law. By this we do not mean to justify the rumseller. There can be no justification of his trade. It is injurious to society, and a violation of that law of God which forbids putting the cup to a neighbor's lip. What we do mean to insist upon is, that if legislators would have their laws obeyed, they must base them upon true and consistent grounds. If liquor-selling is a nuisance, then let it be abated at all times. If trading on Sunday is a sin which it is the duty of legislators to restrain, then let them carry out the principle in its application to all kinds of trading.

"A POINT OF CONSCIENCE."

Many persons seem to have a notion, that if a man rests from his labors on Sunday for conscience's sake, he may confidently expect the Lord, in some way or another, to make up the loss to him in the course of the following week. Hence this is the most effectual consideration to move them to keep strictly the Sunday and it is also the consideration by which they attempt to move others. Now we do not doubt that the Lord is exceedingly gracious to those who are faithful to him, and will in the end make all things work together for their good. But we do doubt whether there is much piety or consistency in urging men to be strict in the observance of the Sabbath upon such grounds. We are certain that there are many cases in which it is impossible to see exactly how the loss is made up. The following paragraph from the Western Recorder, presents a case in point. The editor is apologizing for some delay in the publication of his paper, and says:—

"We here state that a matter of conscience had somewhat to do with the delay of our paper. We were in Cincinnati on the 17th and 18th days of September, ult. Those two days were occupied at the Cin. Type Foundry in putting up our type. We were in readiness to leave for home on Saturday, and could have taken passage on board a better boat, and on more favorable terms, than we afterwards obtained. But we refrained from starting, on account of the near approach of the Lord's Day, knowing that we should then necessarily be journeying on that day. We accordingly spent the Sabbath in the city, and took one of the first boats starting for Pittsburgh on Monday, 21st. We had a slow and unpleasant passage, and did not reach Marietta, till Thursday night. We were then obliged to tarry on expense till Saturday, and then to leave our freight, and come home by stage, not reaching here till late at night. Had we left Cincinnati on Saturday instead of Monday, as we might have done, we would have reached Marietta in time for a boat to Zanesville, with but little detainure, would have got home several days sooner, type and all, with much less expense, and might have got out our paper, at least ten days sooner. Many an individual would without scruple have pursued this latter course. But though we have suffered much inconvenience and mortification by the delay, the question with us is, whether had we done so, we would have felt any better, or been prospered any more, by neglecting to have respect to the day of the Lord."

FAMILY WORSHIP.

Of all the relations sustained by human beings, the most important and serious is the parental. In this capacity, the training of immortal beings for this world and the world to come is entrusted to us. Our children are to fill stations in life for weal or woe to themselves and society. They will diffuse an influence around them, either good or bad, according to their characters and conditions in life. They will acquire and sustain a character here which will qualify them for heaven or hell. These considerations, to a reflecting mind, will induce a sense of obligation so powerful as to lead to a most solemn inquiry, Who is sufficient for these things? Piety, deep-rooted and abiding, is essential to the proper training of a family. Among the means needful to qualify us for the proper training of children, prayer is assuredly not the least. The closet is often a witness to the most fervent and affectionate prayers of a pious parent. "Oh that Ishmael may live before thee!" This patriarchal prayer is written on the heart of every Christian mother and father in Israel. It is needful, however, for our children to know that we pray for them. Every sensible heart in the family will be touched by the prayers offered at the domestic altar, and a sense of the strength of parental affection will be felt. Should any of the children be called away from home, to occupy stations for themselves, the exercises of religion in the family will have a place in their memories and hearts, and an inexpressible satisfaction will be felt that still they share an interest in parental supplications. No doubt they will be influenced by a recollection of their parents' ardent aspirations to heaven for blessings on their souls. Eternity only will disclose the effects produced on youthful minds by the devotions in which they have united in the family circle. The blessings promised in the sacred volume to religious families, are very great and abundant. The threatenings against those who call not on the name of the Lord, are very fearful. God says, "I will pour out my wrath on the families that call not on my name." Family worship seems to grow from personal religion as a natural result, nor do any godly pair consider their house complete without an altar for the Lord. There may arise excuses among Christians for its neglect, but for the most part they are the effect of declining piety in the soul. No business engagements or worldly things of any kind ought to interfere, nor will they, if the heart is right. Every pious wife and mother will make it a part of her business so arrange her domestic affairs so as to encourage these sacred exercises. Every pious husband and father will arrange his engagements as far as possible so that no neglect shall attach to him. Every sensible child, and certainly every pious child, will cheerfully be at home and at the place of prayer when heaven is to be invoked for a blessing on the whole family. Surely family worship must tend to bind together parents and children most effectually, and make home the sweetest place on earth. It may be the means of bringing the whole family around the throne of God in heaven, to praise him in everlasting songs. 'Tis a lovely scene on earth, to witness parents and children all engaged in reading the word of truth, and then prostrating themselves together in the exercise of prayer to the Author of their being. May the time soon come, when every family will have its altar, and every heart send up its grateful acknowledgments and devout supplications to the throne of God. W—R.

SALEM, N. J., Oct. 11, 1846.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—A correspondent of the Syracuse Journal says, that the Supreme Court, sitting at Rochester—Chief Justice Bronson presiding—has made an important decision. In an action for a penalty, under the new License Law, the Court held that strong Beer is "strong and spirituous liquor," within the meaning of the act, and that an action lies for retailing it. Another point was also raised in this cause, viz: whether the plaintiff should state what kind of liquor was sold. The Chief Justice thought he need not, on account of the difficulty in the proof, remarking that men did not always know what kind they drink.

THANKSGIVING.—In nine of the States, this ancient festival will be held on the 26th of November, viz: New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, Michigan. This uniformity may be the result of an understanding among the Governors of the various States. We hope the time may soon come when all the States in the Union shall observe the festival on the same day.

HONOR TO CLARKSON.—The Executive Committee of the American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society have published a series of resolutions expressing their veneration for the character of the lamented Clarkson. They have also invited Hon. William Jay to deliver in this city a eulogy upon his life and labors.

TOLERANCE OF IBRAHIM PACHA.—An English paper says that the popularity of Ibrahim Pacha is on the increase. He has given proof of his great tolerance on a late occasion. The great Rabbi of the Jews had died, and it was indispensable to do that honor in death to the chief of a religion which was his due. The fear lest some fanatics might disturb the ceremonies, had caused an application for protection to be made by the Israelites, to the governor of Cairo. He gave in return an evasive answer, and it was determined that an address should be sent to Ibrahim Pacha in person. This address Ibrahim Pacha received in his divan, and after hearing it read, he turned towards the assistants and said—"Since my journey through Europe I am discontented with myself. We cannot conceal from ourselves the fact that much remains on our part to be done, not only to put ourselves on the level with Europe, but even to commence in the way of progress. I have seen what protection is generally given to religion of every description, and the respect in which all was held, and I do not intend that in Egypt it should be otherwise. We owe the same protection to all, and I should be most unhappy were it otherwise. Instead of giving you a few soldiers to escort the conveyance, we shall put £3,000 at your disposal, and my own carriages will be given to put the bier in." Pacha concluded by saying—"Fear not to be disturbed in the exercise of your religious duties to the head of your church. Go, and remember, that Egypt shall henceforth be a country where all religions may be followed with entire liberty."

OBITUARIES AND MARRIAGE NOTICES.—It is strange that these are still sent to us without a responsible name, or any name at all, notwithstanding our repeated admonitions. Such notices will go into the stove, or under the table, they will not be published. [Baptist Register.

The evil complained of above, is a serious one, but it does not tell half the story, or the Register is more lucky than some of his neighbors. Obituaries and marriage notices some times come to us without responsible names, and without the postage having been prepaid. We remember of having received a long obituary notice, on which we paid 10 or 12 1-2 cents postage, and found at the bottom of it a modest request that we would send a dozen copies of the paper containing it to the writer. In our clemency we complied with the request, although it subjected us, together with the postage, to an expense of about fifty cents. We wish this class of correspondents hereafter to remember two things. 1. Pay your postage. 2. Be short as possible in your obituary notices. A failure to comply with these terms will compel us to follow our neighbor Beebe's plan of disposing of them. [Christian Secretary.

DEATH OF THOMAS CLARKSON.—The last steamer from England brings news of the death of the venerable THOMAS CLARKSON, whose name has been identified with the efforts to abolish Slavery and the Slave Trade for the last fifty years. He died at his residence, Playford Hall, near Ipswich, on the 26th of September. The Ipswich Express says: "His spirit burned bright to the last, and while he ceased not to direct his thoughts to the great question of the emancipation of the human race, he calmly looked forward to 'the crown of life' laid up in Heaven for the faithful followers of the Cross. He was born at Wisbech, in Cambridgeshire, on March 28th, 1760."

THE COLUMBIAN MAGAZINE for November is upon our table. It contains, besides the usual variety of light reading, two beautiful engravings and a fashion-plate. Among the contributors to the present number are T. S. Arthur, James K. Paulding, Mrs. Frances S. Osgood, and "Fanny Forrester" or Mrs. Judson. Edited by John Inman and Robert A. West. PROCLAMATION,

By SILAS WRIGHT, Governor of the State of New York.

The year eighteen hundred and forty-six draws to a close. Its seasons have been uncommonly propitious, and its harvests are realized. Unusual health has blessed our State and the teeming earth has yielded its abundance to supply our necessities and minister to our comforts.

The wave of passion, which, during the past year, rolled over some of our Counties, has subsided, and internal peace is restored to our citizens, and tranquility to our firesides.

The most sublime spectacle connected with Civil Government is now exhibiting before us. The Representatives of the Sovereignty of our People, assembled to take in pieces and re-construct the frame-work of the State Government, have discharged the high trust and returned to their constituents, and to their private duties, without having excited passions, alarm or apprehension in the community; and our Freeman are examining their labors, and preparing to pass a verdict of approbation or rejection upon their work, with a vigilance inspired by a pervading patriotism, and with a calmness and confidence which Free Institutions can alone impart. Not an individual in the State apprehends an encroachment upon his just rights, or an abridgment of his civil and religious privileges, from this peaceful and voluntary revolution of his Government. Stronger evidence of high intelligence and sound morality in a People cannot be afforded.

These, and innumerable other temporal blessings of a kindred character, constantly flowing upon our State and its citizens, call for continued thankfulness to the bountiful Giver of every blessing.

The gift of a Saviour, and the full light of Divine Revelation, are spiritual blessings which should awaken to expressions of devout thankfulness the hearts and the voices of a Christian People.

I respectfully recommend Thursday, the twenty-sixth day of November next, to be observed as a Day of Public Thanksgiving; that the People of the State, abstaining from their ordinary business avocations, may assemble at their usual places of Religious Worship, and, uniting with each other, and with their fellow citizens of many of the other States, may pay their tribute of thanks to the Author of these and all temporal and spiritual good gifts; and may pour out their hearts in prayer to Him, that His rich smiles may be continued to our Country, and that the signal blessings of this year may be crowned by the termination of our existing Wars in an honorable and just Peace.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the privy seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Witness my hand, at the City of Albany, the nineteenth day of October, [L. S.] in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-six. SILAS WRIGHT.

By order, HORACE MOODY, Private Secretary.

General Intelligence.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Caledonia left Liverpool on the 4th inst., and reached Boston at midnight of the 20th, bringing one hundred and ten passengers.

The most important news brought by the Caledonia, is of the loss of the steamer Great Britain, on the coast of Ireland, on the night of Sept. 22d. It seems that she left Liverpool on the morning of the 22d, with 185 passengers, 60 tons of valuable goods as freight, and about the same measurement of passengers' baggage. The day was pleasant, and the ship made good headway. But towards evening the breeze freshened, and the rain began to fall. About half past nine o'clock at night, the passengers were startled by an extraordinary noise on deck, and a cry of "stop her," "aground, aground!" "the breakers!" "we are wrecked!" "oh! we are wrecked!" It proved that the Captain had mistaken the light on "St. John's Point" for that of the "Calf of Man," and that the ship was ashore at Rathmullin, in Dundrum Bay. The passengers all remained on board until the following morning, when they were landed, and proceeded to Liverpool. It is a providential circumstance, that the ship struck when she did, for had she struck on any of the numerous rocks in the neighborhood, she must have been dashed to pieces, and in all probability many lives would have been lost. As it is, no lives were lost, but there is much uncertainty about the fate of the ship. There were hopes of getting her off, but this had not been accomplished when the Caledonia sailed.

Dr. Cox, of Brooklyn, was to preach in the Scotch Church, Liverpool, 4th October, on the providential escape of the Great Britain.

The prices of Cotton, and of Corn and Flour, had improved—the latter articles materially.

The Bishop of St. Asaphs, and Sir John Williams, Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, have died since our last advices. Mr. Vaughan Williams has been appointed the successor of the latter.

On the 29th ult. Robert Scurfield, Esq., one of the largest ship owners of Sunderland, committed suicide.

A sad accident occurred at the Aberdeen Railroad works on the morning of the 28th of Sept. Three of the arches of the inclined plane gave way, and buried a number of the workmen in the ruins, seven of whom were killed.

The food prospects of the country form a subject of anxious controversy. The failure of the potato crop is not regarded as quite so heavy a calamity as it was a short time back.

In Ireland the distress and destitution consequent upon the failure of the potato crop, is really awful. The law for affording employment to the people is being carried out with alacrity by the government and landed gentry of the kingdom.

Serious riots had occurred in the County of Waterford, Ireland, on the 29th ult., large mobs having attacked bakers' shops for the purpose of obtaining bread. Two of the people had been killed by the dragoons ordered to disperse the rioters, and much excitement existed at the last advices.

The proposed marriage of the Queen of Spain to a son of Louis Phillippe, creates considerable disturbance throughout Europe. Several of the Spanish nobility have protested against it, and the English Government has made a formal protest to the French and Spanish Courts. Notwithstanding the protests, it was thought that the marriage would take place on the 10th inst.

On the 8th of July some English merchants and other foreigners came into collision with the populace at Canton, and were driven into factories. They fired upon the Chinese, killing four and wounding twelve. It does not appear that any but the Chinese were injured. The authorities on both sides had taken up the matter.

Incidents of the Storming of Monterey.—A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun writes as follows:—

The greatest loss of the Americans was on the first day, but there are different reports as to the number of killed and wounded. Some of the staff say that our loss is 700 killed and wounded, but I think there must be at least 1,000.

The Texan Rangers are the most desperate set of men in battle that I ever heard of. They charged up to the breastworks, dismounted, and rushed over on foot, with sword in hand. They were each armed with rifles, and, as may be supposed, did great execution among the copper skins.

I will relate you a number of incidents that occurred during the three days:

Col. McClung, of Mississippi, the great duelist, got upon the breastworks, waved his hat, and was in the act of giving three cheers, when a ball struck him, from the effects of which he has since died.

Samuel W. Chambers, one of the Rangers, or "the Delaware hero," as they call him, got over the breastworks, obtained a foothold on the top of an 18-pounder, and deliberately took aim with his "fire-shooter," firing with great effect, and crushing the Mexicans; until the piece was taken by Gen. Worth and turned on the city. Chambers escaped without a wound.

Capt. Gillespy, of the Texan Rangers, was killed while pouring water into the tube of a cannon, with the Mexicans around him. But it is impossible for me to mention all the numerous incidents that occurred at the present time.

Our army was about 7,000 strong before the battle, but is now about 5,500. I miss many a noble fellow from the ranks. The Mexicans were nearly double our number. Their loss in killed and wounded is not less than 2,000. A great many were killed in their houses, as we had to rush in and shoot them down to stop their destructive fire from windows and housetops.

The Great Wilderness of New York, says the Ithaca Chronicle, is an immense plateau of land, elevated more than 1,400 feet above tide, and occupies a central position between the Canada line on the North, and Mohawk on the South—the Champlain Valley on the East, and Lake Ontario on the West.

It covers an area of 8,000 square miles, equal to the whole of Massachusetts and a corner of Rhode Island. The Adirondac mountains are the crowning summits of the great uplift, and Tahawus or Marcy, the monarch of the whole, his brow of rock just on the boundary of Eternal Frost. You enter this savage region by Lake Champlain to Westport or Keeseville—or from the South more readily by Caldwell to Schroon Lake, and Portersville, thence to Long Lake or the Iron Works. In this uninhabited territory are 100 lakes of from one to twenty miles in length—some reposing in the perpetual shade of interlocking mountains, others flashing like silver mirrors in quiet valleys, and all of them alive with the finest fish. Streams disencumbered leap from the rocky flanks of lofty heights, and dash off oceanward beneath the foliage of a primeval forest. In these the speckled trout dart in shoals, and bound to the surface toward evening, as if in perfect frolic.

Through the mountain gorges stray the sullen bear and tawny moose, while the beautiful deer feeds along the solitary waters, and the panther screams in the tangled thicket.

From Tahawus and Whiteface you can sweep a circle of 500 miles in circumference, and all an ocean of mountains, holding in their embrace nearly thirty visible lakes.

SUMMARY.

Advices from Santa Fe to the 6th of September have been received. Gen. Kearney left on the 3d, with eight hundred men, for another settlement, and expected to be absent twenty days, allowing the main body of the army and the horses to recruit their strength in the mean time. He has captured another town, the fortification of which, situated on an eminence, sweeps in its range the whole town. The inhabitants have chosen a new government under the protection of the forces of the United States. A letter dated September 2d, reports that Gens. Armijo and Ugarta were marching for Santa Fe with an army of five thousand Mexicans. Our troops are in fine spirits, and Gen. Kearney says the larger the force of the enemy the better.

The great gun, lately cast at Alger's foundry, was fired a few times at South Boston Point. Shells, 12 inches in diameter, and 180 pounds in weight, were thrown various distances, according to the charge, elevation, and length of fuse used. With a charge of 20 pounds of powder, 20 seconds fuse, at an elevation of 22 degrees, a shell was thrown 2 1-2 miles, and buried deep in the earth an Squantum. A recochet shot was tried with 100 seconds in fuse, 20 pounds powder charge, and 7 pounds in the shell. It dashed through and over the water at an awful rate, and exploded at a distance of about 3 miles, in the water, throwing the fragments several hundred yards in every direction.

A letter dated St. Johns, N. F. Oct. 7, says:—A report was current for some days last week, of great loss of life at Burin, by the late gale, which we are sorry to state, has been confirmed. We have seen a letter addressed by a respectable person there to a gentleman in town, conveying the melancholy intelligence of the loss of ten large boats with forty-five men on board, many of them having large families, now rendered entirely destitute. We hear also that great distress exists to the Northward, occasioned by the failure of the fishery, and the destruction caused by the gale; it is even said that many are now brought to the verge of starvation.

The Boston Times says: We understand that the Grand Jury in the United States Circuit Court have, for two or three days past, had under consideration complaints against several of the Expresses running between this city and other places, for carrying letters out of the mail, in violation of the existing Post Office Laws. These investigations have resulted in finding three bills of indictment against Thompson & Co., Tuck & Co., and Bradford & Gardner. It is probable these cases will be tried during the present session of the U. S. Circuit Court, and will no dobut excite much public attention and interest.

The publisher of 'The New York Organ,' Mr. John W. Oliver, has been sued—damages laid at $2,000—for publishing an article in which the Westchester House, corner of Bowery and Broome-st., is called a terrible nuisance, and in which it is also stated that it is rare that persons from Churches in the neighborhood are suffered to pass on the Sabbath, without being annoyed by the profane or drunken revelry of the crowd which congregates there; and that it is not an unfrequent sight to see one or two of the Star Police among them, who seem about as jovial as the rest.

On Monday, August 31, Luke James Hansard, Esq., Printer to the House of Commons, gave a sumptuous dinner to the whole of his large establishment, consisting of 230 persons, at the King and Queen Inn, Brighton. The entire expense of the railway return tickets (available from the preceding Saturday to the following Wednesday,) dinner, tea, and beds, was defrayed by the above named gentleman, at an expense of £250.

The "Liberty Party" are about to establish a newspaper at Washington, to operate on a great scale. John Q. Adams, Mr. Giddings and all the great spirits are to be interested. The plan is to raise a fund by subscription, of $20,000 a year for three years, which it is thought will be sufficient. A considerable portion of this large sum, we are told, is already pledged.

Mr. Stewart Strong arrived in New York on Tuesday morning from Colborne, Upper Canada, reports that a snow storm was experienced there on Sunday morning, the 17th inst. Snow lay in the fields this side of Lake Ontario on Sunday the 18th, two or three inches deep. Accounts from Buffalo also state that snow fell there on Saturday.

It is said that the steamer Great Western was seized at Liverpool, on her late trip to England, in consequence of some one on board having attempted to introduce surreptitiously a large quantity of tobacco into that country. She was released on the payment by the owners of some £20,000 or £30,000.

While Albany, Utica, and even the Island of Manhattan itself, have had a foretaste of approaching winter, a garden on Staten Island proudly displays its Lilacs in full bloom; this garden belongs to Madame Vanderbilt. Thus in the circumference of a few miles one can witness the frosts of Winter and the splendors of Spring.

A French chemist, M. Jobbard, claims to have discovered a method of producing gas for illuminating purposes, from water. He charges the hydrogen from aqueous vapor strongly with carbonaceous vapor from oil gas, tar, or any other oil, and produces a bright white light.

The Springfield Gazette says, "We saw, this morning, three or four clusters of half grown pears of what the farmers would term the third growth of this season, from a tree belonging to the Parson's house, in State street."

Accounts have been received from Smyrna, announcing the capture of four pirate boats, with sixty men on board, by Lieut. Lyons (son of Sir E. Lyons) near Sancho.

The gold mines of South Carolina are more profitable. One of the mines is earning from seventy-five to one hundred dollars per day.

A man passing under the name of Alex. McDonald was lately arrested near Mobile. He is supposed to be James Cowan, who committed a murder in Pittsburg in 1838, and before his trial succeeded in breaking jail and making his escape, since which time he has not been heard of, until a short time since, when, being intoxicated, he made some unguarded remarks which led to his arrest. $1,000 reward was offered for his apprehension at the time of his escape.

Sheriff Gorham brought into our office yesterday morning, says the Springfield Republican of the 6th, a bunch of green pears, about the size of butternuts, which he said were the fruit of a third blossoming this season. They came from a tree in West State street. We have noticed in our exchanges a number of instances of pears and apples having attained a second growth, but we never heard of an instance like this before.

An old ship, valued at $6,000, that has been running from New Orleans to Brazos for a few months, has already remitted to her owners $10,000, and is still picking up the money. She is owned by a Maine Yankee, and he is still as anxious as ever to have the war continue.

A fine schoonor, of about 200 tons, was launched on the 22d inst., from the ship-yard of Messrs. George Greenman & Co., of Mystic Bridge, Conn. She is to be called the "Elizabeth."

The colored cook of a canal boat on the Ohio canal, lately issued a writ of attachment against the boat, for her wages, but on the trial, the defence objected to the testimony of the witness, as a colored person could not testify in any case where a white person is a party. The judge, however, decided that a canal boat is not a white person, within the meaning of the law.

Section 91 of the Militia Law of the last session provided that certain portions of that law should not go into effect until twenty days after a proclamation by the Governor that the same might be carried into execution without detriment to the public interests and to the laws of Congress. Gov. Wright has issued his proclamation that the law may now be carried into full effect.

The whole of Oregon territory, both English and American, has been divided by the Pope into eight dioceses. M. Blanchet, heretofore Bishop in Oregon, has been nominated Archbishop of the whole country. Two of the eight dioceses only are filled up at present, one by a brother of the Archbishop, the other by his Vicar General.

A melancholy occurrence happened at Geneseo on the 15th. Two young men named McMinch and Traxler, (the later a son of Peter Traxler, Esq., a highly respectable farmer of Sparta,) who were attending the Geneseo Academy, and boarding with S. W. Spencer, Esq., placed a kettle of burning charcoal in their sleeping room on going to bed, and in the morning at 5 o'clock McMinch was just able to crawl from the room, and Traxler was dead. McMinch will probably recover.

Mr. Clay said, in a famous speech, that the value of slaves in the Union was twelve hundred millions of dollars; and how, he asked, could it be expected that the South would ever consent to sacrifice that vast amount of property by emancipation?

MEDICAL NOTICE.

DR. CHARLES H. STILLMAN takes this mode of giving notice to those who have made inquiries, that he is prepared to receive under his care a limited number of patients affected with diseases of the Eyes, particularly those requiring surgical operations, at his residence, Plainfield, N. J.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

Elihu Burritt, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in Advance.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Miscellaneous.

THE FATHER IS COMING.

BY MARY HOWITT.

The clock is on the stroke of six,
The father's work is done;
Sweep up the hearth and mend the fire,
And put the kettle on!
The wild night-wind is blowing cold,
'Tis dreary crossing o'er the world.

He's crossing o'er the world apace,
He's stronger than the storm;
He does not feel the cold, not he,
His heart it is so warm;
For father's heart is stout and true
As ever human bosom knew!

He makes all toil, all hardship, light;—
Would all men were the same,
So ready to be pleased, so kind,
So very slow to blame!
—Folks need not be unkind, austere,
For love hath readier will than fear!

—Stay, do not close the shutters, child,
For far along the lane,
The little window looks, and he
Can see it shining plain;
I've heard him say he loves to mark
The cheerful firelight through the dark.

And we'll do all that father likes!
His wishes are so few—
Would they were more! that every hour
Some wish of his I knew!
I'm sure it makes a happy day
When I can please him any way!

—I know he's coming by this sign
That baby's almost wild;
See how he laughs, and crows, and stares,
Heaven bless the merry child!
His father's self in face and limb,
And father's heart is strong in him!

Hark! hark! I hear his footsteps now—
He's through the garden gate;
Run little Bess and ope the door,
And do not let him wait!
Shout, baby, shout, and clap thy hands,
For father at the threshold stands.

THE BURNING OF MOSCOW.

BY J. T. HEADLEY.

At length Moscow, with its domes, and towers, and palaces, appeared in sight; and Napoleon, who had joined the advanced guard, gazed long and thoughtfully on that goal of his wishes. Murat went forward and entered the gates with his splendid cavalry; but as he passed through the streets, he was struck by the solitude that surrounded him. Nothing was heard but the heavy tramp of his squadron as he passed along, for a deserted and abandoned city was the meagre prize for which such unparalleled efforts had been made. As night drew its curtain over the splendid capital, Napoleon entered the gates, and immediately appointed Mortier governor. In his directions he commanded him to abstain from all pillage. "For this," said he, "you shall be answerable with your life. Defend Moscow against all, whether friend or foe."

The bright moon rose over the mighty city, tipping with silver the domes of more than two hundred churches, and pouring a flood of light over a thousand palaces, and the dwellings of three hundred thousand inhabitants. The weary army sunk to rest; but there was no sleep for Mortier's eyes. Not the gorgeous and variegated palaces and their rich ornaments—nor the parks and gardens, and Oriental magnificence that everywhere surrounded him, kept him wakeful, but the ominous foreboding that some dire calamity was hanging over the silent capitol. When he entered it, scarcely a living soul met his gaze, as he looked down the long streets; and when he broke open the buildings, he found parlors, and bed-rooms, and chambers, all furnished and in order, but no occupants. This sudden abandonment of their homes betokened some secret purpose yet to be fulfilled. The midnight moon was sailing over the city, when the cry of "fire!" reached the ears of Mortier; and the first light over Napoleon's falling empire was kindled, and that most wondrous scene of modern time commenced,

THE BURNING OF MOSCOW.

Mortier, as governor of the city, immediately issued his orders and was putting forth every exertion, when at daylight Napoleon hastened to him. Affecting to disbelieve the reports that the inhabitants were firing their own city, he put more rigid commands on Mortier, to keep the soldiers from the work of destruction. The Marshall simply pointed to some iron covered houses that had not yet been opened, from every crevice of which smoke was issuing like steam from the sides of a pent-up volcano. Sad and thoughtful, Napoleon turned towards the Kremlin, the ancient palace of the Czars, whose huge structure rose high above the surrounding edifices.

In the morning, Mortier, by great exertions, was enabled to subdue the fire. But the next night, Sept. 15th, at midnight, the sentinels on watch upon the lofty Kremlin, saw below them the flames bursting through the houses and palaces, and the cry of "fire! fire!" passed through the city. The dread scene had now fairly opened. Firey balloons were seen dropping from the air and lighting upon the houses—dull explosions were heard on every side from the shut-up dwellings; the next moment a bright light burst forth, and the flames were raging through the apartments. All was uproar and confusion. The serene air and moonlight of the night before had given way to driving clouds, and a wild tempest had swept with the roar of the sea over the city. Flames arose on every side, blazing and crackling in the storm, white clouds of smoke and sparks in an incessant shower went driving towards the Kremlin. The clouds themselves seemed turned into fire rolling in wrath over devoted Moscow. Mortier, crushed with the responsibility thus thrown upon his shoulders, moved with his Young Guard amid this desolation, blowing up the houses and facing the tempest and the flames—struggling nobly to arrest the conflagration.

He hastened from place to place amid the blazing ruins, his face blackened with the smoke, and his hair and eye brows singed with the fierce heat. At length the day dawned, a day of tempest and of flame; and Mortier, who had strained every nerve for thirty-six hours, entered a palace and dropped down from fatigue. The manly form and stalwart arm that had so often carried death into the ranks of the enemy, at length gave way, and the gloomy Marshall lay and panted in utter exhaustion. But the night of tempests had been succeeded by a day of tempests; and when night again enveloped the city, it was one broad flame, waving to and fro in the blast. The wind had increased to a perfect hurricane, and shifted from quarter to quarter as if on purpose to swell the sea of fire and extinguish the last hope. The fire was approaching the Kremlin, and already the roar of the flames, and the crash of falling houses, and the crackling of burning timbers, were borne to the ears of the startled Emperor. He arose and walked to and fro, stopping convulsively and gazing on the terrific scene. Murat, Eugene, and Berthier rushed into his presence, and on their knees besought him to flee, but he still clung to that haughty palace, as if it were his Empire.

But at length the shout, "The Kremlin is on fire!" was heard above the roar of the conflagration, and Napoleon reluctantly consented to leave. He descended into the street with his staff, and looked about for a way of egress, but the flames blocked every passage. At length they discovered a postern gate, leading to the Moskwa, and entered it, but they had only entered still farther into the danger. As Napoleon cast his eye around the open space, girdled and arched with fire, smoke, and cinders, he saw one single street yet open, but all on fire. Into this he rushed, and amid the crash of falling houses and raging of the flames—over burning ruins, through clouds of rolling smoke, and between walls of fire, he pressed on; and at length, half suffocated, emerged in safety from the blazing city, and took up his quarters in the imperial palace of Petrowsky, nearly three miles distant. Mortier, relieved from his anxiety for the Emperor, redoubled his efforts to arrest the conflagration. His men cheerfully rushed into every danger. Breathing nothing but smoke and ashes—canopied by flame, and smoke, and cinders—surrounded by walls of fire that rocked to and fro and fell with a crash amid the blazing ruins, carrying down with them red-hot roofs of iron, he struggled against an enemy that no boldness could awe, or courage overcome. Those brave troops had heard the tramp of thousands of cavalry sweeping to battle without fear; but now they stood in still terror before the march of conflagration, under whose burning footsteps was heard the incessant crash of falling houses, and palaces and churches. The continuous roar of the raging hurricane, mingled with that of the flames, was more terrible than the thunder of artillery; and before this new foe in the midst of this battle of the elements, the awe-struck army stood powerless and affrighted.

When night again descended on the city, it presented a spectacle, the like of which was never seen before, and which baffles all description. The streets were streets of fire, and the entire body of the city a mass of fire, led by a hurricane that whirled the blazing fragments in a constant stream through the air. Incessant explosions from the blowing up of stores of oil, and tar, and spirits, shook the very foundations of the city, and sent vast volumes of smoke rolling furiously towards the sky. Huge sheets of canvass on fire came floating like messengers of death through the flames—the towers and domes of the churches and palaces glowed with a red-hot heat over the wild sea below, then tottering a moment on their bases, were buried by the tempest in the common ruin. Thousands of wretches before unseen were driven by the heat from the cellars and hovels, and streamed in an incessant throng through the streets. Children were seen carrying their parents—the strong, the weak, while thousands more were staggering under the loads of plunder they had snatched from the flames. This, too, would frequently take fire in the falling shower, and the miserable creatures would be compelled to drop it and flee for their lives. Oh, it was a scene of wo and fear inconceivable and indescribable! A mighty and close-packed city of houses, and churches, and palaces, wrapped from limit to limit in flames which are fed by a whirling hurricane, is a sight this world will seldom see.

But this was all within the city. To Napoleon without, the spectacle was still more sublime and terrific. When the flames had overcome all obstacles, and had wrapped every thing in their red mantle. that great city looked like a sea of rolling fire, swept by a tempest that drove it into vast billows. Huge domes and towers, throwing off sparks like blazing fire-brands, now towering above these waves, and now disappearing in their maddening flow, as they rushed and broke high over their tops, scattered their spray of fire against the clouds. The heavens themselves seemed to have caught the conflagration, and the angry masses that swept it, rolling over a bosom fire. Columns of flame would rise and sink, along the surface of this sea, and huge volumes of black smoke suddenly shoot into the air as if volcanoes were working below. The black form of the Kremlin alone, towered above the chaos, now wrapped in flame and smoke, and again emerging into view—standing amid this scene of desolation and terror, like virtue in the midst of a burning world, enveloped but unscathed by the devouring elements. Napoleon stood and gazed on this scene in silent awe; though nearly three miles distant, the windows and walls of his apartment were so hot that he could scarcely bear his hand against them. Said he, years afterwards:

"It was the spectacle or a sea of billows of fire, a sky and clouds of flame, mountains of red rolling flame, like immense waves of the sea, alternately bursting forth and elevating themselves to skies of fire, and then sinking into the ocean of flame below. Oh! it was the most grand, the most sublime, and the most terrific sight the world ever beheld."

How to make an unproductive Tree bear.—A lady of our acquaintance, took us into her garden a few days ago, where we were shown an apple tree which she informed us had been planted for ten or more years, but had never until last year borne any fruit. In looking over an old volume, she accidentally met with what purported to be a remedy for this unproductiveness, which was simply to cut from each limb, close to where it diverges from the trunk, a piece of bark about four inches round the limb, one inch in width, immediately replace it by tying it on with a rag until it adheres again. Early last spring, she tried this experiment upon the tree we speak of, leaving, however, two or three limbs untouched. The result was, in the autumn it was filled with apples; but it is worthy of remark, that those limbs only which had been cut bore fruit. The operation is very simple, and as it has proved successful in this instance, we have no hesitation in recommending its trial in similar cases. [Reading Gaz.

Presevation of Apples.—Apples intended to be preserved for winter and spring use, should remain upon the trees until quite ripe, which usually takes place about the coming of the first heavy frost. They should then be plucked from the trees by hand, in a fair day, and packed up immediately in casks, in alternate layers of dry sand, plaster, chaff, saw-dust, or brand, and conveyed to a cool dry place, as soon as possible. The sand or saw-dust may be dried in the heat of summer, or may be baked in an oven at the time required to be used. The peculiar advantages arising from packing apples in sand, are explained and commented upon as follows, by the late Mr. Webster, author of the "American Dictionary of the English Language," "1st, the sand keeps the apples from the air, which is essential to their preservation; 2d, the sand checks the evaporation or perspiration of the apple, thus preserving in them their full flavor—at the same time any moisture yielded by the apples, is absorbed by the sand—so that the apples are kept dry, and all mustiness is prevented. My pippins, in May and June, are as fresh as when first packed. Even the end of the stems look as if just separated from the twigs; 3d, the sand is equally a preservative from frost, rats, &c. But after the extreme heat of June takes place, all apples speedily lose their flavor, and become insipid." [Am. Agri.

Slaves in China.—The Chinese deal largely in slaves, not from Africa, but purchased from the families of their own countrymen. The Chinese slaves are seldom driven to incessant toil, but are treated in the manner of hired servants, and are restrained by a sense of justice and propriety from leaving the service of their owners. The supply of slaves to meet the demand is, generally speaking, from such sources as the following: A debtor, hard pushed by his creditor, will sometimes sell his wife or children, or even himself, (having no family,) into slavery, to pay his debts. Orphan children, left destitute, are often sold into slavery, merely to procure their support. Parents or guardians will often sell those under their care, either to get rid of the charge or to make a little money. Very large numbers of slaves are those who, in infancy, or too young to remember, were kidnapped from their friends. For many make it a business to procure young children, and maintain them till adult age, either to sell, or make them minister to the carnal appetites of the people.

Romantic Incident.—A letter from Madrid, under date August 11, says: "A rather romantic incident occurred in the escape of 286 soldiers, compromised in the Gallacian Insurrection, which is not unworthy of being noticed. Amongst them was a young sergeant, who was attached to a beautiful girl. This attachment was returned with all the passionate fidelity of a Spanish female heart. When the lover was sentenced to be transported to the Havana, she dressed herself in soldier's clothes, and went on board with him at Ferrol. As the packet boat was approaching Lisbon, it was she who suggested to the crew of the revenue boat of the Vigo, and to others, to rise and overpower the crew of the packet; and she herself first laid her hand on the captain's collar and arrested him. She then placed herself at the head of the mutineers, who chose her for their leader without knowing who she was."

◆

A Sturgeon in Harness.—The following from the New York Evening Post goes ahead of any thing that we have read lately. We should advise the author to take out a patent for his invention—he might call it a Sturgeon Propeller. "A person who lived east of the Hudson, a little back of Tivoli, caught last spring one of those fish, (Sturgeon) which weighed about one hundred and sixty pounds. He carried it to a large pond near his house, the longest diameter of which is near a mile, and without taking it out of the net in which he had caught it, he knotted some of the meshes closely around it, and attaching them to a pair of lines put the creature into the water. To the end of the line he had taken eare to attach a buoy, to mark the place of the fish in the pond. He keeps a small boat, and when he has a mind to make a water excursion, he rows to the place where the buoy is floating, ties the lines to the boat, and pulling them so as to disturb the fish, is drawn backward and forward with great rapidity over the surface. The pond in its deepest parts has only about seven feet of water, so there is no danger of being submerged."

Practices in the English Groggeries.—An ex-grogseller, of London, lets out some secrets of the craft, in a series of letters in the Boston Traveler. He says:—

"First, all drippings of glasses or measures having contained wine or spirits, are carefully collected in a zinc stand, kept for that purpose. This stand is regularly emptied out every morning or oftener, if necessary, and put away in bottles, to be afterwards made into cordials and compounds by the admixture of syrups and other ingredients. Some establishments calculate to pay their servants' wages from these drippings. Second, all drippings of ale, beer, or any other article that will not mix with the spirits, are collected in a zinc trough, in which is a pipe to convey it down into the waste butt in the cellar; this to be afterwards mixed with beer, as required.

◆

Draining and Ditching.—This is possibly one ef the best seasons of the year for carrying on these operations, and we would therefore advise the owners of land to avail themselves of its occurrence to relieve any fields they may have in a wet condition naturally, of their surplus of water. It is useless to expect good crops where the roots or plants have to struggle for existence in a bed of puddle. Aquatic plants may there exist, and flourish, but it is impossible that the grain crops or artificial grasses can thrive under disadvantageous circumstances of position.

◆

Good Night.—The sound is full of sweetness and tenderness. Why dost thou yet linger, departing one? Dost thou wish for another, and yet another good night? Is that word so grateful to thee? Where, indeed, is the ear that loves it not—that does not wait to have it repeated more than once? Let us receive these beautiful words, as one of the pledges of our fair acquaintance; a temporal emblem of those breathings of eternal peace which will gush forth from one bosom to another, as happy spirits meet and part in the city of our God.

VARIETY.

No well-bred person will be insolent to his inferiors. On the other hand, he will observe a scrupulous tenderness of manner towards them—a care of word and action, that shall lighten the burden of humility which they must necessarily feel, as much as possible. This refinement of heart is the most prominent characteristic of a high and noble spirit. It is the only mark of a lady or gentleman that is wholly unequivocal. When we see a person very choice of his words, and very dainty at the table, yet capable of insulting the unfortunate, or ridiculing distress, we always think of the ass in the lion's skin.

Two gardeners, who were neighbors, had their crops of early peas killed by the frost. One of them came to condole with the other. 'Ah!' cried he, 'how unfortunate! Do you know, neighbor, that I have done nothing but fret ever since? But bless me, you seem to have a fine healthy crop coming. What are these?' 'Why these are what I sowed immediately after my loss.' 'What, coming up already?' said the fretter. 'Yes,' replied the other, 'while you were fretting, I was working.'

Madam Regnier was once reprimanded by her husband in company. She was too loquacious, and he checked her by saying, 'Silence, madam, you are a fool.' She lived nearly thirty years afterwards, but never uttered one word even to her children. Imagine that long silence. A wife attentive to all her duties, careful of her husband's comforts, meek, chaste, tender, loving, speaking always with her eyes, weeping and smiling like April, reproving only with a frown, and dying at last without one word passing her lips from the moment when he whom she adored had rudely wounded her pride and arrested the flow of her happy spirits.

It is represented in some of the temperance papers, that certain church members are averse to the introduction of temperance principles, lest it should split the church. The sentiment thus expressed is, that it is better to indulge drunkenness and other flagrant sins in the church, than to reduce the number of tax-paying members.

We sometimes hear of buying titles of nobility in the Old World—sometimes of buying a wife—but not until now of buynig off from being shot in a duel. One of the foreign papers mentions that, lately, at Baden-Baden, an Englishman, after discharging his own pistol without doing execution, purchased his adversary's shot for £1,000! We think he was a very sensible fellow.

The report of a surveying commissioner in Maine, sometime since, mentioned the following names of places in that State: Soboomock, Passamegamic, Depskanegan, Parkwalamas, Abawljacamegas, Nawsawwaduhunkermuxas, Amagemaramus, Rapagenas, and Chesuncook.

It is estimated that 100,000 drunkards have become total abstinents since 1840. Of these, many thousands have become Christians, and are now in the way to heaven. No wonder that those few professors that are indifferent or are opposed to such a work as this are cursed with a spiritual death.

It is stated in a late number of the North American Review, that there are cypress trees in Mexico, whose ages have been ascertained to be upwards of three thousand years. A cypress stands at Montezuma whose girt is 45 feet. But the largest known stands at Santa Maiara del Thule, is forty feet in diameter, and is apparently healthy and sound.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, }
IRA SAYLES, } Principals,

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classses will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

THE ORIGINAL SABBATH UNCHANGED.

BY JAMES A. BEGG.

SECTION V. [Cont'd from Rec. June 3.]

The Observance of the Weekly Sabbath enjoined upon the Israelites.

It is not, surely, necessary farther to insist, or to seek, from the nature of the duties enjoined in the ten commandments, to prove that the law is of a perpetual character. If the fourth were excluded, and God's law brought into accordance with the practice of a sinning church, its precepts would be accepted as unquestionably good and right. The duties enjoined in no other of the ten are regarded as of a temporary nature. Confessedly they flow out of the relation of man to his Maker, or the connection of man with his fellow man. They are all necessarily binding, as essentially right; and, therefore, we should not be led to expect that a different character attaches to the fourth commandment, (binding us to the maintenance of a memorial of the Creator,) since nothing of a temporary nature is expressed, while we do ourselves perceive the value which the Sabbath obviously has as made and fitted for man.

Enactments of the law, even as given to the Israelites through Moses, and more peculiarly pertaining to them than the ten commandments do, had an earlier origin than their being engrossed in the book of the law. Thus circumcision holds, in this respect, a prominent place; yet our Lord, in reasoning with the Jews, reminds them of its earlier origin, "not because it is of Moses, but of the Father," (John vii. 22.) and Paul, insisting on the value of the promises given by God to Abraham, reasons in a manner which bears forcibly upon our present argument. "And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect." (Gal. iii. 17.)

Besides, when a temporary character is attributed to the Sabbath, it is of the utmost importance to a right understanding of the purpose of God, that we observe how, in presenting it in the Decalogue, the Lord has given here the same reason as at first for the Sabbath's sanctification, and that this reason is one not arising out of circumstances peculiar to Israel, but is of universal interest. As we have already seen in the first mention of this blessed day, so here again, God's creation work and His resting on the seventh day, are repeated in the very words of the original narrative of the creation, forming still the reason appended for the commandment itself. "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested on the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." It is not that God blesses and hallows the Sabbath NOW, but He "blessed" and "hallowed" it. This was past; it refers to the period of the institution of the Sabbath, and not to that when the injunction to its observance is merely renewed. But the same general object still continues to be contemplated by God,—the commemoration, as well by Israel as by all, of His creative power and His cessation from creating work—while, in that fidelity which mankind generally refuse to yield, He desires that they by their obedience should be to Him "a peculiar treasure," "a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Other nations by their idolatries were forgetting the Lord who "made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested on the seventh day; and He requires of that nation now chosen to be His witnesses, and thereby appointed as the world's instructors, that they should tell of Him who is the world's Creator, by remembering the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

We are thus furnished with instruction which may be profitable to us in reviewing the history of God's appointment. It was in Adam's innocence that God at first sanctified and blessed the seventh day; and the change, in respect of our condition, if not in respect of the Divine complacency in contemplating the workmanship of His hand, after it had come to be defiled by sin, might, had not evidence been furnished to the contrary, have led us to doubt whether the Creator, in looking back upon His work, so marred by the disobedience of the creature, could still, in speaking from Sinai's glory, assign the same reason which He had originally given, when now calling upon man to remember the Sabbath day. When the wickedness of man awfully prevailed, "it repented the Lord that He had made man on the earth, and it grieved Him at his heart." (Gen. vi. 6.) But as sin had not rendered unnecessary the sanctification of the Sabbath by the rebel, so neither in the mind of the all-wise and beneficient Creator was the primary reason impaired, or the purpose contemplated in His institution thereby affected. The observance of the Sabbath, therefore, as it had already been enjoyed from the first, is now also embodied among the duties of the Decalogue, and finds a place in Israel's code of laws, while the rest of complacent delight of Jehovah, and the refreshing which creation, all perfect and glorious, gave to Him who beheld it to be very good, (Exod. xxxi. 17,) are still urged as the reason for its blessing.

But the intimation of the Sabbath appointment and blessing stands, as we have already observed, in the Decalogue associated with a call for its remembrance, implying the danger of its neglect. In Eden, while man was unfallen, the mere intimation that it had been blessed for him by his God, and the announcement that the honor of the Creator is involved in its weekly sanctification by the creature, would, doubtless, have proved sufficient to secure its regular observance; and, when Israel first received the manna in the wilderness, the weekly miracle of its cessation was calculated to arrest attention, and suggest to them the purpose of the Father of mercies, that upon it they should enjoy a holy rest to His glory. But now, when God gives utterance in words to this law, it is with an injunction ro "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." In fallen man, the proneness to live by sense rather than by faith, renders necessary the injunction which calls upon him to confess, in ordinance expressive, his knowledge of, and confidence in, the invisible Creator. Of the ten commandments, the fourth alone has this special note of observation; but the words, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," are the expressions of friendly caution against neglect which should not be overlooked by any. He by whom that caution is uttered knows the importance and value of the Sabbath for the purposes of its appointment, and He also knew then, what has since become apparent in the history of the church, the very great need of that call to its remembrance.

The importance of sanctifying the seventh day,—for still the particular day, as well as the reason, remains the same,—seems, indeed, strongly set before us, in its present connection, standing as it does as one of those commands which all acknowledge not only as really good, but as essential to the well-being of our species. This importance is enhanced by the consideration that it was uttered by the same voice on such a solemn occasion, and with the same awful sanctions, as those prohibiting idolatry, and murder, and theft, and covetousness; and enjoining love and reverence to God, honor and obedience to parents, and regard for the universal well-being of man.

The commandment addresses itself directly to the father and the master—he to whom God has given the honor of ruling for Him, and on whom the responsibility is laid, that he and his house should serve the Lord. Not only by precept and example, is he bound to give instruction concerning the duty of honoring and serving God, by obedience to His command. His offspring are immediately associated with him in the obligation it imposes: "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter." The parental authority, as well as the place of affection the father holds in his family, are to be used in both enjoining and encouraging his offspring to seek and to prize the blessings of the Sabbath, and in preventing the violation of its sanctity, by labor or otherwise refusing to hallow it to the Lord.

But the precept of God enlarges with the necessities of His creatures. As in Paradise there were none in servitude, and those to whom the Sabbath was then revealed had not yet come, in any degree, into the condition of evil, which seeks its gratification in oppression, there is in the intimation given in Paradise, no reference to the condition of servants. But now, that the God and Father of all re-promulgates His will in a fallen world, when the selfishness of the sinful heart was in danger of exacting labor in God's time, His command in regard to the Sabbath unites, in its hallowing embrace, the whole household, including the "man-servant" and the "maid-servant," and makes a special demand on the master for consideration of the necessities of all his domestics. While God claims the homage due to himself, as the Creator of all, he thus secures the blessed rest which the memorial of creation brings to inferiors, as well as to superiors.

Designed for all creation, God has by this commandment, extended the rest of the Sabbath to the cattle of His people. The "ox" and the "ass" are here included as sharers with their owner of the needed cessation from labor, that on the Sabbath they may enjoy periodic repose, and refreshing from the effect of their weekly toil for man's advantage. For if even a merciful man is merciful to his beast, much more so is He to whom, by right of creation, both belong. This purpose is more distinctly expressed in a following chapter: "Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest; that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thine handmaid and the stranger may be refreshed." Exod. xxiii. 12.

"The stranger," whose care is thus brought before our notice, is also included in the provisions of the commandment uttered by God to His people. Whether attracted to the land of Immanuel to witness the glory of which already he had heard the fame, or whether brought for purposes of worldly aggrandizement, seeking shelter beneath the roof a saintly household, or entering within the hallowed gates of such a city, enjoying the protection afforded, he is made subject also to the jurisdiction exercised, while this influence and control are brought to bear upon the stranger that he may share of the blessings of the Sabbath. His position will not tend to remind him of Israel's God, by witnessing in the air of all around the stillness and the sanctity of sabbatic rest, but he is himself brought within its circle, and feels, in so far as external circumstances can impart, its blessed influence in his personal experience. The abstaining from labor on the Sabbath is thus made imperative upon "the stranger" as such. Of whatever race he may be, within the gates of Israel, he must conform to the sabbatic law. And this including of strangers in the observance of the Sabbath, is the more remarkable since there were institutions peculiarly Israelitish, from participation in which they were expressly excluded, unless, by compliance with the intiatory rite, they became naturalized, and united to the commonwealth of Israel. But as the Sabbath was made for man, the stranger in the land of of Israel was not only permitted and invited, but was virtually compelled to become sharer in the privileges it confers. And if he came from a land where such a privilege was not enjoyed, and belonged to a people by whom it was not observed, he was thus practically instructed in the blessed purpose for which it was given. [To be cont'd.

THE FIRST PRINTED BIBLE.

The earliest book, properly so called, is now generally believed to be the Latin Bible, commonly called the Mazarin Bible, a copy having been found about the middle of the last century in Cardinal Mazarin's library, at Paris. It is remarkable that its existence was unknown before; for it can hardly be called a book of very great scarcity, nearly twenty copies being in different libraries, half of them in those of private persons in England. No date appears in this Bible, and some have referred its publication to 1452, or even to 1450, which few perhaps would at present maintain; while others have thought the year 1455 rather more probable. In a copy belonging to the Royal Library at Paris, an entry is made, importing that it was completed in binding and illuminating at Mentz, on the feast of the Assumption, (August 15,) 1456. But Trithemics, in the passage above quoted, seems to intimate, that no book had been printed in 1452; and considering the lapse of time that would naturally be employed in such an undertaking, during the infancy of the art, and that we have no other printed book of the least importance to fill up the interval till 1457, and also that the binding and illuminating the above mentioned copy is likely to have followed the publication, at no great length of time, we may not err in placing its appearance in the year 1455, which will secure its hitherto impeached priority in the records of biography. It is a very striking circumstance, that the high-minded inventors of this great art, tried at the very outset so bold a flight as the printing an entire Bible, and executed it with astonishing success. It was Minerva, leaping on earth in her divine strength and radiant armor, ready at the moment of her nativity, to subdue and destroy her enemies. The Mazarin Bible is printed, some copies on vellum, some on paper of choice quality, with strong, black, and tolerably handsome characters, but with some want of uniformity, which has led, perhaps unreasonably, to a doubt whether they were cast in a matrix. We may see in imagination this venerable and splendid volume leading up the crowded myraids of its followers, and imploring, as it were, a blessing on the new art, by dedicating its first fruits to the service of Heaven.

[Hallam.

AMIABILITY WITHOUT GODLINESS.

Let us beware, then, how we entertain the hope of acceptance before God, either for ourselves, or for those we love, on the ground of an amiable cast of character. We would be far from disparaging those bright pictures of family-life, where, with affectionate rivalry, all the members vie in the work of making each other happy. Such examples shine as light in the darkness, and the homes which exhibit them look like cultivated spots redeemed from the vast spiritual waste—faint images of what earth for a brief space was, and of what man might have forever been. Still, we can never allow a man to plead these graceful affections as a reason why he should neglect to seek the great salvation; to set up the exactitude with which he discharges the duties of the second table, in extenuation of his deficient obedience to the spiritual requirements of the first. The qualities we speak of may serve for an ornament to religion, but they will not do as a substitute for it. They may dignify the Chirstian character, but they will not make one. The carved work of the temple would ill suit for a foundation; and the reed, which bows gracefully to the passing wind, will pierce the hand that makes it its support and staff. 'These things oughtest thou to have done,' we would say to one of this estimable class, 'and not to have left the other undone.' [Moore's Camb. University Sermons.

HEBREW SONG.

The following is a paraphrase of the touching melody sung by the few devout Jews who reside at Jerusalem, waiting for the restoration of Israel. Sitting on the ruins of what is deemed the old wall of the City of God, when the sun is shedding its last beams on the earth, they raise their mournful, yet hopeful, plaint to the ear of JEHOVAH.

Our nation is broken,
Our city in dust,
Nor comes the bright token
In which we have trust:
The Heathen surround us
And mock at our prayer;
These ruins around us
Turn Hope to Despair.
Great God of our Fathers! even Thou whose right hand
To our sires was a shield—to our foemen a brand;
Thou, whose glory illumined the city of old,
Ease the heart of the people waxed prayerless and cold,
Thee, thee, we implore,
Let thy temple arise,
In beauty once more,
To Judah's soft skies;
Even now, even now,
That the Gentile may see
Not in vain do we bow,
God of Jacob! to Thee.
For ever and ever thy glory shall live,
And mercy is thine to redeem and forgive;
Then forget not, O Lord! in its grief and despair,
The nation Thou lovedst when its city shone fair.
Thee, thee, we implore,
Let thy temple arise,
In glory once more,
To Judah's sad skies;
Even now, even now,
That the Gentile may see
Not in vain do we bow,
God of Isaac! to Thee.

FITNESS FOR MARRIED LIFE.

To married life all young women are tending, at least in expectation. A fitness to fulfil the peculiar duties of married life, should compose a part of your present education. I mention this subject, not to pander to a foolish affectation. I mention it as a minister of God. I find that it is made my duty to do so in the Bible. The institution of marriage is of God. So should it be regarded. All young women, I suppose, expect to be married, and will be very much disappointed if they are not. I regard the solemnization of marriage as one of the most momentous events that can transpire. Not even the burial of the dead has any greater solemnity or impressiveness to my mind. It involves the fate of many. And it deserves a more calm and serious and thoughtful consideration than it generally receives. You are not to rush into its obligations as a horse rusheth into battle. You are to regard marriage as the great event in your life, and prepare for it accordingly. All other things, and all other events are lost in this. Hear me, then, I entreat you, upon this matter.

You have already decided in your mind what you would regard as indispensable in a husband; are you what a wife should be? You wish to be happy in married life; are you qualified to make others so? Have you those qualifications and those accomplishments, and that fitness which will adorn your fireside, and induce your husband to praise your virtues? In the opinion of many, all that is requisite to enter that state, in which so much of the good and evil of life is to be gathered, is to be familiar with some of the lighter and more showy attractions of life. To talk a little French, perform well on the piano, be acquainted with the last novel, know the shade of the silk and the precise width of the ribbon worn at the levee of Victoria, or at the Tuilleries, is the fullness of preparation. I have no controversy with such knowledge and such attractions. But I ask you, as rational beings, will such acquisitions alone make home happy? Will they aid you in the new and strange duties of your household? Those duties, at best, will try your disposition; and if you know them not, confusion, mortification, regret, and tears, will overwhelm, but not relieve you. Secure the more useful, then will the brilliant be a garland of grace about your person. And those showy accomplishments, to gain which thousands have been expended, fortunes sacrificed, and years of the most precious portion of life consumed, fade in a day before the real duties of life. And those educated in ignorance of what is before them, are victims to excessive cruelty. Through a mistaken kindness, daughters are doomed to a bondage the most servile. They become a prey to the rapacity of servants, exposed to their impertinence, and dependent upon their caprice. The drudgery of domestic life need not be done. To other hands the absolute toil may be committed; but every young woman should know how to act and what to do. A commodore of a ship-of-war need not load or discharge his guns, but he should know how to direct. In the storm, he need not stand at the helm, but he should understand navigation, and be able to take an observation. He need not, in the gale, climb to the topmast, but he ought to know the ropes in the ship, and be able to give the right word, and direct others in their toil.

I cannot resist the conclusion, that the domestic education of our females is wrong. The evils that flow from the system now prevalent, may be learned from those who suffer the most from it. Your acquaintances who are settled in life can tell you, that they find little time to paint or embroider; the piano is seldom opened; and while many of them are chained down by a despotism they cannot control, such will assure you, that had they in early life given more attention to those duties which they are now called upon to perform in domestic life—duties which, in importance, increase year by year, they would have been far happier as wives, and as mothers better qualified. The young woman who would blush to have it known that she is at the head of her household, and has ability to direct all its concerns, mistakes the true dignity of her sex, and throws from her that which will secure to her a commanding influence.

PERSONAL EFFORT.

One of the visitors of the New York City Tract Society offered tracts to two carpenters, and while one of them accepted, the other refused, saying that he had no time to read. "Do you never read the Bible?" inquired the visitor. "No," was the reply. "Do you never pray?" "No; there is no praying at my house." "But sir, do you not consider that you and your family are dependent upon God? How do you obtain your food and raiment?" "I work for them." "Well; but who gives you health and strength to work for them?" "God I suppose." "And can you be so ungrateful to one who gives you all that you enjoy? Let me entreat you to seek the forgiveness of your sins. Read this Tract. Read the Bible. Wrestle with the Lord in prayer until you enjoy a sense of his pordoning mercy. Go with your wife and your child to the sanctuary. Ask God for an understanding heart, and live no longer in rebellion against him." Subsequently to this interview two other christian friends called and conversed with him, at the request of the visitor. Soon after this he was found at a social prayer meeting once and again; then, listening to the ministration of truth; then, feeling its power; and now, both he and his wife rejoice in hope of eternal life, and love to tell what the Lord has done for their souls. Here was personal effort. No doubt it was accompanied by private prayer. And here are the fruits that may be expected from such effort when made in humble dependence upon the influences of the Holy Spirit.

AN INFIDEL'S DEATH BED.

Some years ago, an individual well known and highly respected in the religious world, narrated in my hearing the following incident. In early life, while with a college companion, he was making a tour on the continent, at Paris his friend was seized with an alarming illness. A physician of great celebrity was speedily summoned, who stated that the case was a critical one, and that much would depend upon a minute attention to his directions. As there was no one at hand upon whom they could place much reliance, he was requested to recommend some confidential and experienced nurse. He mentioned one, but added, "You may think yourself happy indeed should you be able to secure her services: but she is so much in request amongst the higher circles here, that there is little chance of finding her disengaged." The narrator at once ordered his carriage, went to her residence, and much to his satisfaction found her at home. He briefly stated his errand, and requested her immediate attendance. "But before I consent to accompany you, permit me sir," said she, "to ask you a single question. Is your friend a Christian?" "Yes," he replied, "indeed he is—a Christian in the best and highest sense of the term, a man who lives in the fear of God. But I should like to know your reason for such an inquiry?" "Sir," she answered, "I was the nurse that attended Voltaire in his last illness, and for all the wealth of Europe I would never see another infidel die." [Ford's Damascus.

AN ANECDOTE.—The celebrated mimic, Griffin, was asked to imitate the person, manner, and singularly awkward delivery of Dr. Woodward, the geologist and physician, in the character of Dr. Fossil, in a farce, then preparing under the title of "Three Hours after Marriage." The mimic dressed himself up as a countryman, and went to the doctor to ask his advice about a long series of diseases with which he pretended his poor wife was afflicted. All this he did to justify and prolong the interview, in order that he might have sufficient time to study the doctor's manner. This accomplished, he offered the fee of a guinea, which the doctor declined, saying, "Keep your money, poor man! Keep your money! You have need of all your cash and all your patience too, with such a load of diseases at home." The actor, on his return to the farce writer, related his conversation, and concluded by declaring that he would sooner die than prostitute his talents by making a public laughing stock of Dr. Woodward, who, receiving him as a poor man, had shown tender humanity and compassionate sympathy at the narrative of his assumed calamities.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.—On one occasion, traveling in the Barbary States with a companion who possessed some knowledge of medicine, we had arrived at a door near which we were about to pitch our tents, when a crowd of Arabs surrounded us, cursing and swearing at the "rebellers against God." My friend, who spoke a little Arabic, turning round to an elderly person, whose garb bespoke him a priest, said, "Who taught you that we are disbelievers? Hear my daily prayer, and judge for yourselves." He then repeated the Lord's Prayer. All stood amazed and silent, till the priest exclaimed, "May God curse me, if ever I curse again those who hold such belief! nay, more, that prayer shall be my prayer till my hour be come. I pray thee, O Nazarene, repeat the prayer, that it may be remembered and written among us in letters of gold." [Hay's Western Barbary.

THE "CAMEL" AND THE "NEEDLE'S EYE."—Lord Nugent, in his recent publication, "Lands, Classical and Sacred," has given an application of the words which at once proves the fitness of the expression for the subject our Saviour had in view. Lord Nugent describes himself as about to walk out of Hebron through the large gate, when his companions, seeing a train of camels approaching, desired him to go through "the eye of a needle;" in other words, the small side gate. This his lordship conceives to be a common expression, and explanatory of our Saviour's words; for, he adds, the sumpters camel cannot pass through unless with great difficulty, and stripped off his load, his trappings, and his merchandize.

LICENSING AND ORDAINING MINISTERS.

An impression prevails somewhat extensively, that to license a man to preach the Gospel is a matter of no very great importance any way; but that to set him apart to the work by ordination, is an act of vast importance and solemnity, which ought not to be done without a thorough examination, and entire satisfaction as to his qualifications for the sacred office. Hence it sometimes happens, that in small churches, the members of which would not consider themselves qualified to judge of a candidate's fitness for ordination, we may find one, two, or even half-a-dozen persons holding licenses to preach. The consequences are not unfrequently most disastrous. Good men, who might be exceedingly useful in the stations for which they are qualified, are induced to take stations which they can never fill to their own honor, to the permanent edification of their brethren, or to the advantage of the cause of Christ. They endeavor perhaps for a while to meet the expectations which they have raised; but they soon discover their inability to do it, and either throw up their licenses in disgust with themselves and others, or become the leaders of parties to embarrass and distract the church.

We cannot agree with those who regard it as an unimportant thing to license a man to preach the Gospel; on the contrary, we regard it as involving both the usefulness of the candidate, and the best interests of the church. It is very easy to say, that a license does not finally decide the question; that the candidate must pass the ordeal of an examination before an ordaining council or presbytery; that if any thing is wrong they will set it right; and that they are the proper guardians of the sacred office. But is it so? Do ordaining councils take the responsibility upon themselves, and act freely in these premises? We fear that in many cases they do not. Indeed, we believe that as a general thing the work is laid out to their hands. The church has given the candidate a license to preach, has called a council to ordain him, and in some cases has even gone so far as to give notice that the ceremony will take place at a certain time. In such circumstances the council assemble and examine the candidate. If he proves to be qualified for ordination, in the estimation of the examiners, then all is well. But suppose he does not prove to be just what is desired; then the question is, not whether the candidate ought to be ordained, but whether, in the peculiar circumstances of the case, it would not be better to ordain him than to refuse. Perhaps the case which we have supposed is a strong one. We believe, however, that it differs in no essential respect from those which frequently occur, and which might, by a little previous calculation, be made to occur at any time. It shows conclusively, that the act of a church in licensing a man and calling him to ordination, involves every thing else. Who then can intelligently regard that act as unimportant?

The remedy for the evil to which we have alluded, is not so easily pointed out. Some have recommended dispensing with licenses entirely, and letting any church member preach whenever and wherever he has an inclination and can find hearers. If a church should wish one of these preaching brethren for a pastor, then let them call a council for advice, and lay the matter before them in such a manner that they may act freely respecting his ordination. Others have recommended the appointment of a standing council, composed of ministers and laymen, to take the whole subject of licensing into their hands. We will not pretend to say which of these plans, or whether either, will meet the necessities of the case. But we will say—and that is what we began this article for—that the business of licensing men to preach the Gospel is a most solemn and responsible business; and farther, that the church which grants a license, either to gratify a favorite, or get rid of importunity, without a reasonable hope that the applicant will at some future day prove a useful minister, inflicts a lasting injury upon itself, and proves recreant to a sacred trust from God.

An Incident at the close of the Evangelical Alliance.—The Edinburgh Witness says, that an incident of a very unique character tended to shed a very interesting light on the last scenes of the Conference. The discussion and proceedings which had sprung out of the subject of American slavery were just drawing to a close, when a man of deep color (Rev. M. M. Clark, of Washington) entered the hall, and took his seat as a member of the Alliance. He stated that he was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America, and pastor of a congregation composed partly of freemen and partly of slaves in the neighborhood of Washington; and that the slave portion of his flock had deputed him to appear as their representative in the Alliance. He had come thus late, being detained by an accident full of danger, but in which God had mercifully preserved him. On the high seas he was overtaken by a storm; the ship in which he sailed was dismasted, and compelled to return to New York; thence setting sail a second time, he had arrived in London just in time to witness the conclusion of the Conference. He then proceeded to read a document which appeared to be generally regarded as one of the most interesting of the documents given to the Alliance. The address spoke of the seventeen thousand members of the Methodist Church who are slaves whom he represented, and bespoke the prayers of the people of God for the speedy abolition of slavery in his country. He thought that the church has this great thing to do, and that all she wants to effect it, is her concentrated energies brought to bear with wisdom, prudence, and discretion, upon the enlightened conscience of the church and the world.

THE CRIMINALITY OF A SABBATH-BREAKING SPIRIT.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Whatever our views of truth may be, we ought to be watchful against a criminating spirit. There is a natural proneness to condemn all who do not think and act as we do. Hence have arisen many of the persecutions which have disgraced the church. Upon the absolute certainty of our being right, we must not persecute or pour contempt on those who are in error. To labor by every Christian and scriptural means to convince, is our duty; but we have no right to go any farther. This is the very thing we are pleading for in reference to our rights as Sabbatarians at the present time. These remarks are designed to introduce a subject which has frequently been hinted at in the Recorder. Some persons who write for it seem to think that none are punished for Sabbath-breaking but those who desecrate the seventh day, which is the Bible Sabbath. Perhaps the belief has not been expressed, that there is any retributive punishment at all for such conduct, even as it regards the Sabbath of the Lord our God. It may be seriously questioned, at least, whether direct judgment on Sabbath-breakers has ceased to be inflicted, more than on other violators of the divine requirements. Is it not a dangerous position to assume, that God does not take the daring rebel in his sins, and smite him? What are we to understand by the "wicked being swept away in his wickedness," but that the "righteous God takes hold on vengeance," uses the sword already sharp in his hands, and cuts off the sinner in the very act of rebellion? It may appear, to those who have been trained from their infancy to keep the true Sabbath holy, and to secularize the first day of the week, that no punishment can be inflicted on the individual who pursues business or pleasure on the first day of the week with consistency, there being no sacredness in it. It may be asked, however, whether there may not be a Sabbath-breaking spirit where there is no idea of the seventh day being the Sabbath? The greater part of the civilized, yea, evangelized world, have as much darkness on their minds respecting this subject as they once had in regard to a divine revelation and the gospel of Christ. They do as firmly believe that the first day is the Sabbath, as we do that the seventh is. Thousands as much deplore the desecration of that day as we do the rejection and violation of God's ancient and holy Sabbath. They are as sincere in warning the delinquent, in their estimation, as we are. Moreover, thousands pursue business and pleasure on the first day, who believe that it is holy time. They have been taught so by their parents, their ministers, and their Sunday School teachers. They have struggled hard to shake off restraint, and even after they have mastered their convictions, have sometimes had some qualms of conscience, especially in times of adversity. It has been confessed by some who have ruined themselves by public crimes, or by a life of sin, that the beginning of their course was Sabbath-breaking, using that word in reference to the first day. It may be fairly asked, whether a person who has no idea of a Sabbath save the first day, is not as rebellious if he violates it as the man is who transgresses the fourth commandment, believing it to be binding, except the former being guilty of the sin ignorance—a sin of which he himself would possibly have been guilty had he been trained in the same way, and lived under the influence of the same example. The first-day man who desecrates that day, as much lifts his hand against the divine throne in his own estimation, and says, "this man shall not reign over me," as you and I should, who decidedly believe in the seventh day Sabbath. A person who has always been a Sabbatarian may think it strange that any one should so firmly believe the first day to be sacred; but that does not disprove my position. So it is, and those who have changed their views and their course on this subject know it is so. Now the question is, are any of those calamities which befall individuals of the class refered to, the result of a Sabbath-breaking spirit or not—and do they come upon them in the way of judgment or otherwise? If judgments have ever fallen upon men for their crimes, and that while in the act of committing them, why not now, except the administration of the divine government be changed? The delay of judgment for a long time does not disprove the idea that God punishes in a signal and public manner the crimes of men. It would seem that Solomon believed God bore with sinners a long time, or he would not have said, "Because sentence againt an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil." He seems to be sensible, too, that though judgment traveled slow, yet it was sure. Hence he says, "He that, being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." Before we tell the sinner that there is no punishment to be expected from doing business or pursuing pleasure on the first day, let us endeavor to convince him that the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord his God, and then tell him, when convinced that God will hold him guilty if he profane it. Let no one plead ignorance to justify a criminal course, for God cannot be deceived; he knows whether we are honest or not, and he will judge us according to our works. With regard to the sincere, who are surrounded with "wood, hay, and stubble," when these combustible materials ignite with the fire of the last day, they will suffer loss, even if they are miraculously saved. The Sabbatarian may not be clear of Sabbath-breaking—(indeed, at the present day, sterling principle alone can save him,)—he may, if he looks at his conduct, perhaps discover some discrepancies upon this subject. Are not some busily engaged with their secular affairs until late on the sixth day evening? Are not many things done by them at home, which are neither works of necessity nor mercy, on the real Sabbath—a day in which we are not to "speak our own words, or think our own thoughts?" Alas! how many things are done in God's time, because we do not want to hinder in our own or to gratify a spirit of pride and vanity.

W—r.

☞ We cheerfully give place to the foregoing communication, because it contains much truth, and suggests the necessity of caution in speaking upon the subject of which it treats. We think our correspondent is mistaken, however, in supposing that any of the writers for the Recorder have intended absolutely to deny, either that God sometimes interposes to punish Sabbath-breakers, or that men are sometimes criminal in the sight of God for laboring upon the first day of the week. What the writers upon the subject have aimed to prove is, that the accidents which happen upon the first day of the week are no evidence for or against the sacredness of that particular day. This they have done in two ways. The first is by analyzing the facts, and showing the absurdity of inferring from them a peculiar divine regard for that day. The second is by collecting facts to prove that upon this ground we may with equal propriety argue the sacredness of any and every day of the week. [Ed. Rec.

THE BIBLE AND THE CREED.

We have sometimes been charged with using harsh and uncharitable words respecting the apostacy of Protestants from their fundamental doctrine, that the Bible is the only rule of faith and practice. Perhaps there has been some occasion for the charge, since it is almost impossible to use soft words in commenting upon practices which palpably belie boasted principles. Be that as it may, we have only spoken what we fully believed and deeply felt, and what, therefore, we can make no apologies for. Here is an extract which expresses our mind upon the subject exactly. It is taken from a sermon published by the Rev. Mr. Beecher, son of the venerable Dr. Beecher—a man who ought to be "an Hebrew of the Hebrews" for orthodoxy. Read and ponder it, ye who think that Protestantism needs no reforming:—

"There is nothing imaginary in the statement that the creed-power is now beginning to prohibit the Bible, as really as Rome did, though in a subtler way. During the whole course of seven years' study, the Protestant candidate of the ministry sees before him an unauthorized statement, spiked down and stereotyped, of what he must find in the Bible or be martyred. And does any one, acquainted with human nature, need be told that he studies under a tremendous pressure of motive? Is that freedom of opinion—the 'liberty wherewith Christ maketh free?' Rome would have given that. Every one of her clergy might have studied the Bible to find the Pontifical Creed, on the pain of death. Was that liberty?

"Hence I say, that liberty of opinion in our Theological Seminaries is a mere form. To say nothing of the thumb-screw of criticism, by which every original mind is tortured into negative propriety, the whole boasted liberty of the student consists in a choice of chains—a choice of handcuffs—whether he will wear the Presbyterian handcuff, or Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, or other evangelical handcuff. Hence it has already come to pass, that the ministry themselves dare not study their Bible. Large portions thereof are seldom touched. It lies useless lumber; or if they do study and search, they dare not show their people what they find. There is some thing criminal in saying any thing new. It is shocking to utter words that have not the mold of age upon them."

A Sad Case.—Some three weeks ago we received the first number of a very attractive weekly paper, which it was proposed to continue in this city for the promulgation of Unitarian views of religion. It was to be under the editorial supervision of Mr. Kiakland, husband of the distinguished "Mary Clavers," himself a writer of decided ability, who has given his attention chiefly to the discussion of moral and religious questions and to criticism. Soon after receiving that paper, we saw a notice in one of the dailys, that Mr. Kirkland, while on a visit to a sick relative in the vicinity of Newburgh, had very mysteriously disappeared. We regret now to learn, that the doubt hanging over his fate is dispelled by a mournful certainty, his body having been found in the Hudson River, near Newburgh. It is supposed that he was on the point of starting for New York, and while waiting for the boat, in the darkness of the night, he fell from the dock unobserved, and was drowned.

Monks for Pennsylvania.—The Roman Catholic Advocate says that a colony of missionaries, of the order of St. Benedict, started from Munich on the 29th of July, for the United States of America, to form at St. Joseph, in Pennsylvania, the first monastery of Benedictnes. It is composed of Rev. Father Boniface Wimmer, (prior,) F. Maximilian Goetner, two theologians, two scholastics, and several lay brothers.

SLAVE-HUNTING IN NEW YORK.

A case of slave-hunting occurred last week in New York, which excited a very deep and general interest. It seems that Capt. Buckley, of the brig Mobile, of Savannah, Georgia, while on his passage from that port to this city, on the 15th of October, discovered a colored lad concealed in the hold of his vessel, who confessed that he was a slave, and belonged to a Mr. Chapman, of Byrne Co., Ga. Now the penalty in Georgia for carrying off a slave is imprisonment not over two years, and a civil action for damages to recover the value of the slave. To escape this penalty, Capt. Buckley determined to keep the boy, who gave his name as George Kirk, on board of the vessel during his stay in New York, and then restore him to his master in Georgia on returning. But while the vessel was lying at the wharf, somebody got wind that there was a slave on board confined in the hold. A writ of habeas corpus was issued for him, and he was brought before Judge Edmonds of the Circuit Court. After a series of pleadings by the counsel on both sides, the slave was pronounced free, and left the Court in company with his friends; who, fearing that some other process would be issued, concealed him in a box, directed to a minister in Essex, N. Y., and so sent him off by a carman. But in the mean time the Mayor of the city sent a posse of policemen in search of the slave. They had their suspicions excited by the box, followed it, broke it open, and found the fugitive. He was immediately brought before the Mayor and Recorder, in accordance, as it was claimed, with a provision of the Revised Statutes authorizing the Captain to make the arrest on account of finding the slave concealed on board his vessel. After one or two days delay, during which no little excitement prevailed, Judge Edmonds decided that the old law was unconstitutional, and could not justify retaining the slave for the purpose of returning him to his master; and so he was set free again. While this question was pending, Capt. Buckley, as if determined that in some way or another the slave should be detained until his master could demand him, had procured a warrant against him for assault and battery. However, after some parley, and after receiving distinct notice that in case of pressing this charge he would be taken up for assault and battery on the slave, the Captain withdrew his complaint, mutual releases were exchanged, and the slave discharged. The last that was seen of him, he left the Tombs in a closed carriage, accompanied by his counsel and two policemen. It is to be hoped that before this he has found his way to a land where slave-hunting is neither sanctioned by law nor upheld by public opinion.

Baptist Mission in Oregon.—Encouraging letters have recently been received from the missionaries of the Baptists in Oregon. They started from Iowa in April, 1845, in company with numerous emigrants, and arrived at the Twalletine Plains about the 5th of December, having been seven months and a half on the road. There was only one regularly organized Baptist church in Oregon, but two or three others were to be organized soon. Of Protestant schools there are but few, on which account the inhabitants are represented as feeling very anxious for their children. The population from the States is estimated at from 5,000 to 6,000, who are settled principally on the Willamette river. The missionaries have commenced establishing primary and Sunday schools, and think the field around them is uncommonly encouraging. They are, however, greatly in want of libraries, elementary school books on geography, grammar, arithmetic, natural philosophy, &c. These they solicit their friends in this part of the country to provide. Boxes, papers, or letters for them can be forwared from most of our seaports, addressed to Rev. Ezra Fisher, or Rev. Hezekiah Johnson, Oregon City, Oregon.

The Jews of Leghorn.—The following account of the Jews of Leghorn, is given by a correspondent of the Boston Olive Branch. It is the language of a candid man speaking of the habits of a persecuted but deserving race.

"There are four or five hundred Jews in Leghorn, a few of them rich, but the greater part are small pedlers, like the Jews every where—they buy and sell old clothes, old iron, old furniture, old any thing—and legions of them perambulate the streets with cases of sham jewelry, which they sell for the real whenever they can—combs, jack-knives, wallets, purses, silver pencil cases made of copper, and such small matters, consisting of the Jew's stock in trade in Leghorn, and you can hardly move a step without being bothered by their importunities—they come into the coffe-houses and shove your cup one side to make room for their cases of knicknacks, knock at the door of your chamber after you have gone to sleep—hang upon you like an incubus. I suppose the Jews were not always such an over-reaching set of small pedlars as they are now—the oppressions of Christian states must have driven them to it. It has only been a few years since the Jews enjoyed civil rights, or could hold landed property in any part of Europe—so that they were compelled to resort to trade for a living—if they established themselves in shops their goods were often confiscated upon the most frivolous pretences, so they were obliged to become pedlars—to carry their stock in trade on their backs, and to carry only as much as they could hope to turn into money before they should be robbed of it—they were obliged to resort to cunning and artifice to conceal their gains, until cunning and artifice have become their characteristics—every man's hand was against them, and instead of wondering why the Jews are such a mean, sordid race, I only wonder why the persecutions of Christian communities have not made them a thousand times worse than they are."

The Foreign Mission.—An important meeting of the Executive Board of the Missionary Association was held at Metouchin, N. J., on first-day last. The principal subject for consideration was the location of our Foreign Mission. Facts which have come to light within a few months past respecting the climate of Zanzibar, and the difficulty of proceeding from thence to Abyssinia, have led members of the Board to question the wisdom of designating the missionaries to Eastern Africa. The subject was discussed somewhat at the recent special meeting of the Board in New York, and referred to the regular meeting at Metouchin for decision. After a full and prayerfull consideration, it was decided to change the location from Eastern Africa to China. A complete statement of the reasons for this change, together with the prospects in the new field, prepared by a committee appointed for the purpose, will be published next week. We feel confident that it will satisfy all minds, and deepen the existing interest in our Foreign Mission.

"Days of Old."—Our readers have not forgotten the beautiful series of articles under this title, which we published some months ago. We have recently learned that these articles were written by Mrs. Tonna, better known as "Charlotte Elizabeth," and were only broken off by her physical incapacity to continue them. The following account of her may be new to some of our readers, and will interest all:—

Charlotte Elizabeth Tonna, the celebrated authoress, became deaf in childhood, and thus dwelt in a world of comparative silence; yet she was not lonely. Her active mind was always busy, and, as the object of her whole life, from the time the Lord brought her to the knowledge of himself, was to do good, she found abundant employment among the ignorant, the suffering, and the sinful. Though unable to hear a word of the service, she was always in her seat at public worship, and from the fingers of her devoted husband, Mr. Tonna, were transferred to hers, the idea of the sermon. It was a common remark, "Mrs. Tonna knows more of the sermon than any body else in the church." For years she suffered with a cancer under her arm, which deprived her of her favorite employment of writing, and compelled her to depend on the aid of her husband, as her amanuensis, in preparing her later works for the press.

Christianity Planted in Egypt.—A London correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer commmunicates the fact that a Christian Church was about to be erected in the "Land of Egypt"—a land where the light of Divine truth, more than three thousand years ago, shone just enough to reveal its utter darkness; and where, both since and a long time previous, vegetables and reptiles, stars which gem night's canopy, as well as sun and moon, have been adored, instead of the great Creator. He says:—

"Among the wonders of modern Egypt, that, to a contemplative mind, though utterly opposite in their nature and character, outvie those stupendous works of the olden time—wonders, too, which all owe their creation to the old man, himself the greatest wonder of them all, Mehemet Ali—among them may be named a splendid Protestant Christian Church, now in progress of erection in the most splendid portion of the Frank quarter of Alexandria. The following is the enumeration of Europeans whose fixed or occasional residence made such a structure necessary: In 1845, permanent residents, 107; travelers in transit, 2,200; ship's crews, 2,007; tourists, 166; total, 6,050. For these it was proposed to erect a very humble structure, and the British resident (Col. Campbell) mentioned the matter to Mehemet Ali. He at once gave a plot of ground on the south side of the Great Square, intimating his wish that the building should correspond in size and magnificence with the other buildings in the neighborhood. By an act of Parliament, where British subjects abroad raise one half of the support of a clergyman, the Government may contribute the same amount, and the clergyman may be Episcopalian or Presbyterian, according to the majority of those for whom the church is intended. In this case, the majority being Episcopalians, the clergyman was licensed by the Bishop of London. The building is dedicated to St. Mark, and is the first Christian edifice in that region in modern times."

Speech-Makers of the Evangelical Alliance.—The Rev. Pharcellus Church, who was a member of the Evangelical Alliance, in a letter to the editor of the Christian Reflector, giving some account of the proceedings, writes thus respecting the speech-makers of the occasion:—

"Unfortunately, those most fierce for speaking, were, as a general thing, least competent to throw light on the subject in hand. My friend, Dr. Jenkyn, was much amused with the unsolicited prayer of an American Methodist, wherein he told the Lord that he had not before opened his mouth in this Conference. But this silent brother had one thing to console him, that he was in very honorable company. Such men as Harris, Jenkyn, Tholuck, except when specially called on, and many others of a like character, were in the same category. Dr. Jenkyn told me, what I before suspected, that many of the best London members had not spoken at all, and that so far as selections of speakers were made for the occasion, the social positions or connections of the man are much more regarded, than his ability to entertain the audience. The English leaders in this movement act somewhat like the landscape painter, who allows the old wall or broken hedge near him, to figure more largely on his canvass, than the lofty mountains, extended plains, and magnificent buildings that stand in the back ground. Their own little sects and feuds must be conciliated, and are more to them than all continental Europe and America. This feeling, my connection with the business committee enabled me fully to appreciate. Of all the speakers, none impressed me so favorably as those of the established church. On the score of cultivation, naviete in modo, catholicity of feeling, and every quality which adorns the social state, they are certainly much in advance of their dissenting brethren. I speak only of those present in this meeting, who are no doubt the choicest spirits in the English church."

TERRIBLE STORM AND LOSS OF LIFE.

The New Orleans Picayune of Oct. 23d gives the details of a terrible gale in the Gulf of Mexico, the fury of which is unexampled. At Key West it commenced blowing from the North-East on the morning of the 11th, and the tide rose rapidly. The storm increasing in violence raged to a hurricane until midnight, when it abated. The next day it blew a moderate gale. But the hurricane had swept away every dwelling-house save six in Key West. They were totally destroyed. The Custom House and the Marine Hospital, were both unroofed. It is supposed that of Government property destroyed the amount is $300,000. The loss of life is very great. A great many persons were drowned and killed by falling buildings. The light-house and dwelling-house attached were destroyed, and 14 souls perished in these buildings. The Sand Key light-house is gone, and the buildings and people in them. The U. S. brig Perry ran ashore, but it is thought she may be saved. Com. Sloat was on board her; all the hands were saved. The Perry lies in seven feet water. The Cutter Morris Waldron, is ashore three miles from Key West with loss of masts, anchors, chains, guns, bulwarks, and probably a total loss. The brig Colorado, of Boston, was probably dismasted and went ashore, but was got off much injured. The schooner Com. Kearney is ashore in two feet water. The schooner Gov. Bennett, Warfield, was dismasted, is now discharging, and will be condemned. The H. W. Safford of N. Y. for Brazos Santiago came in dismasted, and would probably be condemned. Brig Matamoros from New York for St. Marks was dismasted, but lies high and dry with part of her cargo thrown overboard. The brig Waskallow, from New York, left before the gale; the schr. Catharine H. Bacon, damaged but, not lost; also the Adelia, Waldron, of Rhode Island; the brig Gen. Wilson of New York, went ashore in three feet water. The brig Napoleon, of Boston, dismasted, was connemned and sold for two hundred dollars. The bark Frances, Watts, from Havana for New York, was damaged and two masts gone. The pilot boats Lafayette and Louisa sunk in the harbor. The ship Eben Preble, of Boston, went ashore on the north-west bank, and is now high and dry, and can't be got off. There are 4 or 5 vessels in the vicinity bottom up. About 20 vessels are ashore on the reef, among them is the bark Iris, from New Orleans to New York. Their cargoes are mostly lost. The current ran six miles an hour through Key West. As far as ascertained, fifty persons had lost their lives. Stones could not withstand the gale, so violent were the elements. The scene was awful in the extreme.

ICELAND; EPUPTION OF MOUNT HECLA; EARTHQUAKE SHOCKS.—A letter from Copenhagen, of September 21st, has the following intelligence:

"We have just received news from Iceland to the 18th, and from the Ferroe Islands to the 25th ult. Never in the memory of man has there been a more disagreeable Summer than the present. Torrents of rain and storms succeeded each other without intermission. The measles and the dysentery, carried off almost a fourth of the inhabitants, especially on the coasts, which caused the cultivation of the land to be paralyzed, and the fishery, which would have otherwise been most abundant, to be neglected. The bad weather prevented the Danish, German, French, Belgian and English savans from pursuing their researches into the State of Mount Hecla, but they have decided on passing the Winter in Iceland, in order to profit by the cold and dry weather to carry on their investigations. Toward noon on the 23d ult., there was a sudden and violent eruption of Mount Hecla, the commencement of which was accompanied by several shocks of an earthquake, extending to a radius of about three miles, (seven French leagues.) The eruption lasted about forty minutes; the flames rose to an immense height, and all the country round the volcano was covered with a thick layer of ashes."

EARTHQUAKE AT TRINIDAD.—Letters of a recent date from the Island of Trinidad state that twelve or fifteen shocks of an earthquake had been experienced in that Island within the last few days—some of them more severe than any that had been felt there for many years. Much damage had been done to buildings, and even the ground was cracked in several places. Two of the shocks occurred during divine service, and one while the people, or a portion of them, were assembled at the Theatre. In one of the churches a very large stone fell from the roof or tower directly in the midst of the congregation, but providentially no person was hurt. A general consternation prevailed among the inhabitants on account of the number and violence of the shocks, and an apprehension that they might again be repeated. As yet no lives had been lost.

FROM VENEZUELA.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, under date of Puerto Cabella, Oct. 9, 1846, says:—"Since the elections commenced here we have had some political disturbances, which, it is to be regretted, have resulted in bloodshed. Fortunately, Gen. Paez was immediately named as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, and through his energetic movements the country has been saved from the full effects of a most disastrous plot, formed by what is termed the 'Guzman party.' On the 29th ult. a battle took place between that party and the Constitutionalists, in which the latter came off victorious, having killed a hundred, and wounded double that number. The Government party were headed by Col. Guerrero, who had some 400 choice and valiant men, against 500 Rebels, supposed to be headed by one Rangel.

MULTITUDE OF BOOKS.—In 1732, when there were not half the number of books in the world that now exist, we read the following complaint: "Books, indeed, are the magazines of learning, but they are so multiplied that it is difficult to know where to begin; and therefore it would be a work of merit to point out such authors as best deserve our attention." This multiplicity of books is an evil, however, which in a measure effects its own cure, by making more apparent the necessity of confining one's self to a choice selection.

WRECK OF THE RHODE ISLAND.—The steamboat Rhode Island, from Stonington to New York, was struck on Sunday morning about 6 o'clock, when six miles East of Huntington, L. I., by a tremendous sea, which carried away her rudder and snapped the main braces and stanchions in an instant. Her engine was kept going, however, until she drifted within about half a mile from shore, when her anchors were let go. After great trouble the life-boat was then got out and immediately stove upon touching the water—five men in her narrowly escaped destruction. A letter was then sent on shore in a bottle, which was secured by the people on shore and an express immediately started to New York to procure assistance. As there was no prospect of any communication with the shore, a second bottle attached to a barrel was sent adrift at about one o'clock. This barrel drifted beyond the Point, but was secured by an excellent dog, which gnawed off the string, and brought the bottle on shore, in which was contained a letter, requesting that lights might be kept on the beach all night. At low tide the bow of the boat took the ground, and she lay quite easy, so much so, that the passengers were not much alarmed for their safety. About half-past 3 o'clock, Captains C. Bunce, John Uddle, Wm. King Higbee having obtained a whale boat, which was transported from several miles distance, overland, succeeded in boarding the steamboat. At about half-past three, the landing of passengers commenced, and continued until about half-past six, when about sixty got ashore, including all the ladies, twenty-five in number. The gale then increased, and no farther communication was had with the shore. About eighty passengers and crew were left on board. They all, however, got off before the boat from New York arrived. About half the freight was thrown overboard.

A COACH UNDER SAIL.—The New Orleans Bulletin gives the following description of a novel vehicle in use on Galveston Beach, and in Texas, viz: a coach propelled by wind. The vehicle is constructed with four wheels, the front ones being much wider apart than those behind, and on them rests a body like that of an omnibus. In front is the mast, on which the mainsail is placed, and where the tongue of an ordinary carriage is, is a bowsprit for the jib. It is steered by an apparatus which directs the hind wheels. The beach on Galveston Island is as level as a floor, and hard almost as stone, and when there is a fair wind the carriage runs at railroad speed. When the trade winds prevail, the wind blowing then from Southeast, it runs from one end of the Island to the other and back with the utmost facility.

LIME AND RATS.—A gentleman of this city who had occasion to use considerable lime about his premises, which had hitherto been much infested with rats, informed us that these destructive vermin had suddenly ceased to appear or to annoy him. "Before using the lime," said he, "you could scarcely walk across the yard after night, without treading on them. He showed us several of their principal holes, around which he had deposited a small portion of fresh unslacked lime, which evidently had the effect of driving them from these places, which they before resorted to in great numbers. The above is a simple and cheap method of getting rid of this annoying and destructive pest. Suppose you try it?

SUMMARY.

A counterfeiter was caught on the 16th, near Franklin, Tenn., and carried to Nashville, who had between six and ten thousand dollars in fraudulent money, with other matters pertaining to the trade, in his saddle bags—evidence was so full and clear of his villainy, that he concluded not to put the civil authorities to any trouble, but went to jail without formality of a trial. He is an Italian, and stated that he cleared eleven thousand dollars in good money, last year, as his share of the spoils.

On Saturday afternoon a man named Dwyer, one of the several men in the employ of Joel Rathbone, Esq., in quarrying out stone in the neighborhood of the Norman's Kill, received serious injury by the premature discharge of a blast, that he died shortly afterwards. Dwyer leaves a wife and family. Col. Rathbone headed a subscription list, for the benefit of the family of Dwyer, with a handsome sum, to which additions were made by the persons in his employ.

A serious accident occurred at Wheeling, Va., on Friday evening, which resulted in the instant death of Mr. Robert Boyd, iron merchant, and an injury to Mr. John W. Bowring, Washington Bowring, two German laborers and another man named Myers. The wall of an unfinished building fell upon them.

A driver of a team between Westboro' and Mendon, in this State, got asleep on his team a day or two since, and fell off under the fore wheel, which passed over his ribs. He then endeavored to extricate himself, but, the team being still in motion, the hind wheels passed over his hips. He was taken up alive, but was so much injured that no hopes are entertained of his recovery.

A fire occurred in Hudson on Friday night in the carriage establishment of Delamater, near the Railroad Depot, destroying that establishment with most of its contents. Loss is estimated at some $10,000; said to be insured. In the same block was a large tannery, owned by Mr. Reynolds, which was also consumed.

The Chicago Democrat gives the following summary of the assessors' returns of the property of that city, the first store of which, a wooden building, was erected twelve years since. The total valuation is $4,500,000—and the taxes on the same are 17,000, of which the 1st and 2d Wards pay $11,000.

The other day we heard a poor Irish woman describing her love of children. She never tired of tending them, she said, and when she heard one cry, "her heart eried with it." There is infinitely more real poetry in this simple idea, than in half the verses that are sent us for publication.

There is said to have been invented in England, recently, a preparation which promises to supersede the use of gunpowder, as it more than answers its purposes—is stronger, more combustible, cheaper, and less dangerous. This new material is made of cotton.

The Griggsville (Ill.) Free Press says that a person charged with murder was tried and acquitted at the late term of the Macoupin Circuit Court. The circumstances attending the killing, as related to us, should have left no doubt but that it was murder. The counsel for the prisoner assumed, however, on the trial, that there were some individuals in every community, who ought to be killed, and that the unfortunate man who had been murdered belonged to that class. If this new doctrine in regard to murder is to prevail, (and it seems to have had the sanction of a Macoupin jury,) it will entirely eclipse the fashionable plea of insanity, which prevails so extensively "down east."

The Angelica (N. Y.,) Advocate states that the late storm did great damage in that region. Several animals were drowned in various parts of the country, and from 100 to 200 bridges taken off. A saw mill in the town of Rushford, belonging to Mr. Walker, was razed by the flood at a loss to the owner of some $800.

It is said that M. Jobard, following out a hint of Sir Humphrey Davy, has ascertained that water may be made the means of a cheap illumination. It is decomposed by a very simple process and furnishes a beautiful light. A penny's worth of oil duly mixed with water in a retort will furnish the light of ten candles, for twenty-four hours. The French Government has become the owner of the patent for public purposes, and several large manufactories in France are now successfully using it.

A New York company have contracted to remove a whole row of six two-story brick houses, situated on the Ridge Road, and adjoining Peers & Co.'s stables, Philadelphia, over to a lot on the other side of the road. They are to remove four of the houses at once, and then the other two together. The undertaking is to be accomplished by means of screws and rollers. The company expects to make a progress of about thirty feet a day.

At a recent trial in Boston in which the jury were unable to agree, Judge Ward said that three witnesses on one side or the other must have committed perjury on the trial. In remarking upon the contradictions in the evidence, in his charge he said, that such an exhibition of false swearing was calculated to create a well-grounded apprehension that there is no safety for property, or life, or liberty in Boston.

A paragraph from an English paper lately appeared, stating that Dr. Ryan, of London, had illustrated, before the Royal Polytechnic School of that city, a method of cutting and boring glass by common iron instruments, employing a solution of camphor and turpentine, instead of the usual preparation, such as emery, sulphate of copper, etc.

A telegraphic dispatch from Buffalo, dated Oct. 25th, says: "We learn from the Canal Collector's office, that during the week ending 24th inst. eight hundred thousand pounds weight of cheese was shipped Eastward from this port. We have now in this port half a million bushels of wheat. These two items give an idea of the wonderful extent of the produce business transacted in Buffalo."

The mail statistics for the month of October, give the number of letters mailed during that month as follows, viz: Total number 2,877,496, of which 1,993,387 were mailed in the free States, and 884,109 in the slave States. The number mailed in Ohio during that month was, 203,303, and in Kentucky, only 74,133.

There is employed in Mr. Cooper's Iron Establishment, at South Trenton, a man by the name of Sweeney, who has visited nearly every part of the world—has spent many years among the Indians of the Pacific Ocean—and speaks more Indian languages, probably, than any other man in the State.

The Albany Argus says that potatoes are received there in great quantities, by canal. They sell, as they arrive, at 25c. the bushel. They are then selected, and the choice lots forwarded to New York, where they bring a handsome profit.

The house of Mr. Tutman Denman, in North Carolina, was struck by lightning which instantly killed his wife and set fire to his house. Two children and a negro were stunned and hurt, but recovered shortly. The negro and one child escaped, but the other remained by the body of the mother and was burned to death in the house.

Rev. Amos A. Phelps has gone to the West Indies for the winter on account of his health. He will no doubt collect important facts illustrating the workings of Emancipation.

The Columbus correspondent of the Zanesville Courier states that Miss Dix, the celebrated philanthropist, lies dangerously ill at the Lunatic Asylum, but every care and attention is paid to her.

A chimney, one hundred and fifteen yards high, is now in the course of erection at Edinburgh, and another, one hundred and sixty-five yards in height, is nearly completed at Wigan.

It is stated that James M. Scofield, Editor of the New London Morning Star, has recently become sole heir by the death of a bachelor uncle to an estate in the Northern part of Scotland, said to be worth £180,000.

The common Cholera is raging with great violence in Prince Edward Island, caused it is supposed, by the effect of the drouth on the water. Adults, as well as children, were dying in considerable numbers.

The three persons in Richmond, Va., charged with the murder of Mr. Hoyt, have had their trial and been acquitted.

There was a disastrous fire in Apalachicola, on the 17th of Oct. which nearly laid the city in ruins. It was the work of incendiaries, and the loss is estimated at $80,000.

The proprietors of a number of the first hotels in Boston have been arrested for selling liquor on Sunday.

The steamboat Oregon was compelled to return to New York on Saturday evening in consequence of an accident which occurred on the other side of Hell-Gate. It appears that after she passed through the Gate, she came in collision with a bark, the bowsprit of which carried away the smoke-pipe of the Oregon, and completely raked her deck from the pipe to the stern.

The New York Observer of Saturday contains a letter from a 'gentleman of great distinction, who was one of the passengers on board the unfortunate steamer Great Britain,' intimating that her recent misfortune was the result of intemperance. This is indeed a serious charge, and will undoubtedly be fully investigated.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 24th says, Capt. Winsor, of the ship Sunbeam, which arrived yesterday from Boston, reports that he spoke on the 18th inst., thirty miles east of Key West, the U. S. schooner Flirt, bound to Norfolk, and all well. The Flirt reported that on the 11th inst., there had been a tremendous gale at Havana, and that fifty sail of vessels were lost in that harbor.

The 10th section of the late act of Congress establishing the Smithsonian Institution, requires the author or proprietor of any book, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut or engraving, for which a copyright shall be secured, to deliver a copy thereof within three months after its publication, to the Secretary, to be placed in the library of said institution.

THE TRUE AMERICAN DISCONTINUED.—The No. of this paper for Oct. 21st, says: "We have to announce the discontinuance of the True American. Orders have been received from C. M. Clay's attorney, to let it cease with the present number. The necessity assigned for taking this step is pecuniary. Mr. Clay's attorney does not feel willing to meet the regular expenditures of the paper. Its discontinuance therefore, is deemed indispensable by him." The gentleman who has edited the paper during Mr. Clay's absence, expresses a firm conviction that this discontinuance is merely a suspension, and that a paper will be established in its [illegible], in Kentucky, permanently, in a few weeks.

FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.—No news of importance has been received since our last. The papers are extensively occupied with accounts of the recent sanguinary battle at Monterey. The loss of the opposing forces has been variously stated. The American loss was probably about 260 killed and 300 wounded. The Mexican loss was upwards of 1,000. A feeling of great hostility to the Americans exists throughout Mexico.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS IN RHODE ISLAND.—We have recently prepared, and placed in the hands of Sanford P. Stillman, a complete statement of our accounts with subscribers in Rhode Island. Those in arrears for the first and second volumes may find, by referring to his book, the exact amount of their indebtedness to us. Those who have not yet paid for the third volume, will find that fact distinctly noted. We hope our debtors will not subject us to trouble by neglecting to make prompt payment. The first half of the third volume is more than two-thirds gone; it is necessary, therefore, for all such as intend to have their papers at the advance price to give immediate attention to this subject.

MEDICAL NOTICE.

DR. CHARLES H. STILLMAN takes this mode of giving notice to those who have made inquiries, that he is prepared to receive under his care a limited number of patients affected with diseases of the Eyes, particularly those requiring surgical operations, at his residence, Plainfield, N. J.

NOTICE.

Brethren visiting the city and remaining over the Sabbath, are informed that meetings are held every seventh day, at 11 o'clock in the morning, at the meeting-house recently purchased of the Eleventh-street Baptist Church, in 11th street, a little east of Grace Church, between Bowery and Third Avenue. The public are also respectfully invited to attend. Evening lectures by the pastor, Eld. Thos. B. Brown, will be appointed as soon as circumstances will permit.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

ELIHU BURRITT, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in ADVANCE.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

PROCLAMATION,

By SILAS WRIGHT, Governor of the State of New York.

The year eighteen hundred and forty-six draws to a close. Its seasons have been uncommonly propitious, and its harvests are realized. Unusual health has blessed our State and the teeming earth has yielded its abundance to supply our necessities and minister to our comforts.

The wave of passion, which, during the past year, rolled over some of our Counties, has subsided, and internal peace is restored to our citizens, and tranquility to our firesides.

The most sublime spectacle connected with Civil Government is now exhibiting before us. The Representatives of the Sovereignty of our People, assembled to take in pieces and re-construct the frame-work of the State Government, have discharged the high trust and returned to their constituents, and to their private duties, without having excited passions, alarm or apprehension in the community; and our Freeman are examining their labors, and preparing to pass a verdict of approbation or rejection upon their work, with a vigilance inspired by a pervading patriotism, and with a calmness and confidence which Free Institutions can alone impart. Not an individual in the State apprehends an encroachment upon his just rights, or an abridgment of his civil and religious privileges, from this peaceful and voluntary revolution of his Government. Stronger evidence of high intelligence and sound morality in a People cannot be afforded.

These, and innumerable other temporal blessings of a kindred character, constantly flowing upon our State and its citizens, call for continued thankfulness to the bountiful Giver of every blessing.

The gift of a Saviour, and the full light of Divine Revelation, are spiritual blessings which should awaken to expressions of devout thankfulness the hearts and the voices of a Christian People.

I respectfully recommend Thursday, the twenty-sixth day of November next, to be observed as a Day of Public Thanksgiving; that the People of the State, abstaining from their ordinary business avocations, may assemble at their usual places of Religious Worship, and, uniting with each other, and with their fellow citizens of many of the other States, may pay their tribute of thanks to the Author of these and all temporal and spiritual good gifts; and may pour out their hearts in prayer to Him, that His rich smiles may be continued to our Country, and that the signal blessings of this year may be crowned by the termination of our existing Wars in an honorable and just Peace.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the privy seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Witness my hand, at the City of Albany, the nineteenth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-six.

[L. S.] SILAS WRIGHT.

By order. HORACE MOODY, Private Secretary.

Miscellaneous.

LABOR'S THANKSGIVING HYMN.

BY MARY HOWITT.

That I must work, I thank thee, God!
I know that hardship, toil, and pain,
Like rigorous winter in the sod,
Which doth mature the hardy grain,
Call forth in Man his noblest powers;
Therefore I hold my head erect,
And, amid life's severest hours,
Stand steadfast in my self-respect.

I thank thee, God, that I must toil!
Yon ermined slave of lineage high,
The game-law lord who owns the soil,
Is not so free a man as I!
He wears the fetters of his clan;
Wealth, birth and rank have hedged him in;
I heed but this, that I'm a MAN,
And to the great in mind akin!

Thank God, that like the mountain oak
My lot is with the storms of life;
Strength grows from out the tempest's shock,
And patience in the daily strife
The thorny hand, the furrowed brow,
Degrade not, howe'er sloth may deem;
'Tis this degrades—to cringe and bow,
And ape the vice we disesteem.

Thank God for toil, for hardship, whence
Come courage, patience, hardihood,
And for that sad experience
Which leaves our bosoms flesh and blood;
Which leaves us tears for others' woe!
Brother in toil, respect thyself;
And let thy steadfast virtue show
That man is nobler far than pelf!

Thank God for toil; nor fear the face
Of wealth nor rank; fear only sin,
That blight which mars all outward grace,
And dims the light of peace within!
Give me thy hand, my brother, give
Thy hard and toil-stained hand to me;
We are no dreamers, we shall live
A brighter, better world to see!

NEVER TOO OLD TO LEARN.

Socrates, at an extreme old age, learned to play on musical instruments. This would look ridiculous for some of the rich old men in our city, especially if they should take it into their heads to thrum a guitar under a lady's window, which Socrates did not do, but only learned to play upon some instruments of his time—not a guitar—for the purpose of resisting the wear and tear of old age.

Cato, at eighty years of age, thought proper to learn the Greek language. Many of our young men, at thirty and forty, have forgotten even the alphabet of a language, the knowledge of which was necessary to enter college, and which was made a daily exercise through college. A fine comment upon their letters truly!

Plutarch, when between seventy and eighty, commenced the study of Latin. Many of our young lawyers, not thirty years of age, think that nisi prius, seire facias, &c., are English expressions; and if you tell them that a knowledge of Latin would make them appear a little more respectable in their profession, they will reply that they are too old to think of learning Latin.

Boccaccio, was thirty-five years of age when he commenced his study in polite literature. Yet he became one of the three great masters of the Tuscan dialect, Dante and Petrarch being the two others. There are many among us ten years younger than Boccaccio, who are dying of ennui, and regret that they were not educated to a taste for literature; but now they are too old.

Sir Henry Spelman, neglected the sciences in his youth, but commenced the study of them when he was between fifty and sixty years of age. After this time he became a most learned antiquary and lawyer. Our young men begin to think of laying their seniors on the shelf when they have reached sixty years of age. How different the present estimate put upon experience from that which characterized a certain period of the Grecian republic, when a man was not allowed to open his mouth in caucuses or political meetings, who was under forty years of age.

Colbert, the famous French Minister, at sixty years of age returned to his Latin and law studies. How many of our college-learnt men have ever looked into their classics since their graduation?

Dr. Johnson, applied himself to the Dutch language but a few years before his death. Most of our merchants and lawyers of twenty-five, thirty and forty years of age are obliged to apply to a teacher to translate a business letter written in the French language, which might be learned in a tenth part of the time required for the acquisition of the Dutch; and all because they are too old to learn.

Ludovico Monaldesco, at the great age of one hundred and fifteen, wrote the memoirs of his own times. A singular exertion, noticed by Voltaire, who was himself one of the most remarkable instances of the progress of age in new studies.

Ogilby, the translator of Homer and Virgil, was unacquainted with Latin and Greek till he was past fifty.

Franklin did not fully commence his philosophical pursuits till he had reached his fiftieth year. How many among us are there of thirty, forty, and fifty, who read nothing but newspapers for the want of a taste for natural philosophy! But they are too old to learn.

Accorso, a great lawyer, being asked why he began the study of law so late, answered that indeed he began it late, but he should therefore master it the sooner. This agrees with our theory, that healthy old age gives a man the power of accomplishing a difficult study in much less time than would be necessary to one of half his years.

Dryden, in his sixty-eighth year, commenced the translation of the Iliad; and his most pleasing productions were written in his old age.

We could go on and cite thousands of examples of men who commenced a new study and struck out into an entirely new pursuit, either for livelihood or amusement, at an advanced age. But every one familiar with the biography of distinguished men will recollect individual cases enough to convince him that none but the sick and indolent will ever say, "I am too old to study."

DR. GOLDSMITH.—A poor woman, who had seen better days, understanding from some of her acquaintance that Dr. Goldsmith had studied physic, and hearing of his great humanity, solicited him in a letter, to send her something for her husband, who had lost his appetite, and was reduced to a most melancholy state of continual anguish. The good natured poet waited on her instantly, and after some discourse with his patient, found him shrinking into that worst state of sickness, poverty. The doctor told him they should hear from him in an hour, when he should send him some pills, which he believed would prove efficacious. He immediately went home, and put ten guineas into a chip box, with the following label: "These must be used as necessity requires; be patient and of good heart." He sent his servant with this prescription to the comfortless mourner, who found it contained a remedy superior to any thing Galen or his tribe of pupils could administer for his relief.

THE SEA OF ICE.

The guide soon summoned us to the sea of ice, and we began, "with cautious steps and slow," to descend the steep and rugged face of the mountain. As we approached the surface of the glacier, those inequalities that appeared from the summit of Montanvert to be no more than gentle undulations, rose into considerable elevations, of from fifty to a hundred feet, intermingled with half formed pyramids, bending walls, and shapeless masses of ice, with vast blocks of granite and frightful chasms, exhibiting a scene the most savage and fantastic that ever entered into the imagination of man. It is improperly called "the sea of ice," although the surface cannot, perhaps, be better compared than to a stormy sea, but it is in fact a river; and if you conceive of two enormous mountains, rising to the height of eight or ten thousand feet, forming a deep ravine about a mile and a half in breadth, that pursues a straight course for several miles, but divides at the upper end into two glens, that run up to the highest elevations of the Alps, and that terminates at its lower extremity in an icy precipice of nearly two thousand feet, whose base is in a still deeper valley—if you then imagine innumerable torrents to roll, deep and impetuous, from the summits of the mountains—conceive them as collected by those two glens, meeting in this deep ravine, and as they hurry to dash with their collected waters down the precipice into the deeper valley, arrested by a mighty hurricane—wrought into the wildest forms by the fury of the tempest, and then, by the fiat of the Almighty, instantly congealed—if, moreover, you add the innumerable fissures and chasms torn in the ice by the undermining torrents and the unevenness of the bed below, you will have a tolerably correct idea of the sea of ice. And if you gather round it lofty peaks and snowy summits, cataracts and avalanches, clouds and storms, you will have completed the outline of this wonderful picture.

THE INVINCIBLE WAR-CLOAK.

A friend in Charlestown, Mass., has kindly sent us the following extract:—

Extract from a letter from J. F. B. Marshall, merchant, of Honolulu, Oahu, Sandwich Islands, to his friends in Charlestown, Massachusetts, written in May, 1839.

I have to-day seen the most valuable cloak in the world, computing the value or the price of the material, and the labor bestowed upon it. I mean the feather war-cloak of the King, which belonged to his father, the celebrated warrior Tamehameha. The King's Secretary, Haalileo, brought it for us to look at—his Majesty having heard us express a wish to see it. We were deeply sensible of the distinguished honor done us, and examined the cloak with much pleasure and interest. It is of yellow feathers, and the enormous value of it arises from the fact, that the birds from which these feathers are taken, are very rare, having but one feather under each wing, and consequently very valuable. The common price for one feather is a piece of nankin, or $1,50. Thus at a rough estimate the cost of the cloak, computing it at the value of the feathers alone, is at least one and a half millions of dollars. The cloak has been seven generations of kings in making, and computing the value of the labor bestowed upon it at the average rate, that is 25 cents per diem, the whole cost of the cloak would be quite as much as I should wish to see at the foot of any of my tailor's bills. It is eleven feet broad at the bottom, two and a half at the top, and four feet long. It is called the "Invincible Cloak," old Tamehameha being impressed with the idea that when he wore it, he was invincible. His war spear was also shown us. It is of a dark, hard wood, 10 feet in length, and a very formidable weapon in the hands of a master of the exercise. [N. Y. Evangelist.

THE DEW.

The theory of the dew is interesting to all the admirers of nature, and illustrates in a striking manner the beautiful economy of the operations of her system. Professor Johnson, in his agricultural chemistry, remarks: That the dew is celebrated at all times, and in every tongue, for its sweet influence, presents the most beautiful and striking illustration of the agency in the economy of nature, and exhibits one of the wise and bountiful adaptations, by which the whole system of things animate, is fitted and bound together. All bodies on the surface of the earth radiate or throw out rays of heat, in straight lines—every warmer body to every colder—and the entire surface itself is continually sending rays upward through the clear air into free space. Thus on the earth's surface all bodies strive, as it were, after equal temperature, (an equilibrium of heat,) while the surface as a whole tends generally towards a cooler state. But while the sun shines this cooling will not take place, for the earth then receives in general more heat than it gives off; and if the clear sky be shut out by a canopy of clouds, these will arrest and again prevent it from speedily dissipating. At night, then, when the sun is absent, the earth will cool the most; on clear nights, also, more than when cloudy, and when clouds only partially obscure the sky, those parts will become the coolest which look towards the clearest portions of the heavens.

Now when the surface cools, the air in contact must cool also, and like the warm currents on the mountain side, must forsake a portion of the watery vapor it has hitherto retained. This water, like the floating mist of the hills, descends in particles almost infinitely minute. These particles collect upon every leaflet, and suspend themselves from every blade of grass, in drops of "pearly dew." And mark here a beautiful adaptation. Different substances are endowed with the property of radiating their own heat, and thus becoming cool with different degrees of rapidity; and those substances, which, in the air, become cool at first, also attract first, and most abundantly, the particles of falling dew.

THE POWER OF IMAGINATION.—A thousand instances might be brought forward to demonstrate the influence of imagination. One of the most remarkable was the dancing mania, which prevailed all over Europe in the fourteenth century, and which actually grew into a real epidemic. It is only requisite to relate two or three instances of more recent date in England. At a cotton manufactory at Holden Bridge, in Lancashire, a girl, on the 15th of February, 1787, put a mouse into the bosom of another girl, who was thereby thrown into convulsions, which lasted for twenty-four hours. On the following day, six girls, who had witnessed these convulsions, were affected in a similar manner, and on the 17th six more. The alarm became so great that the whole work was stopped, under the idea that some particular disease had been introduced in a bag of cotton opened in the house. On the 18th three more, and on the 19th eleven more girls were seized. Three of the whole number, namely, twenty-four, lived two miles from the factory, and there were at another factory, at Clitheroe, about five miles off, but who were strongly impressed with the idea of the plague, as the convulsions were termed, being caught from the cotton. Dr. Sinclair relieved all the cases by electrifying the affected girls. The convulsions were so strong, as to require four or five persons to hold the patients, and to prevent them from tearing their hair or dashing their heads on the floor or on the walls.

AN INGENIOUS PUFF.—A story is told of Signor Blitz, which took place in Hartford. It runs thus:—"A clergyman came into a public house where he was stopping, and, without knowing the Signor was present, commenced talking pretty severely against the trickery. The Signor bore it very good naturedly, and, stepping up to the clergyman, expressed his opinion that such language came with an ill grace from one who had a pack of cards in his pocket, and who had probably come here for the purpose of gambling. This charge was received with great surprise by the gentlemen present; and the parson was in a towering passion at the insinuation. The Signor reiterated his charge, and agreed to prove it. The clergyman defied his examination; but, lo and behold! he proceeded to take from the parson's bosom a pack of cards; another pack was found in his hat, and a box of dice in his coat pocket. If he had been caught with a sheep in his pocket he could not have been more surprised; and, joining the general laugh, he evinced a determination to be out of the Signor's company as soon as possible."

THE LARGEST CITY IN THE WORLD.—Sou Tchou is a large city in the interior of China, the largest silk market in that vast empire. To Europeans it has been unknown since 1781, when the Romish missionaries were driven out. The Paris correspondent of the National Intelligencer, says that M. Hedde, completely disguised as a Chinese trader, obtained ingress to Sou Tchou. M. Hedde says, its population is five millions, and that within a radius of four leagues around, there is a population of ten millions. Pekin has four millions. M. Hedde brought to Paris many samples of the domestic silks of China, of all colors and all prices. One of them, exceedingly fine, is called the flower of the Gardens. It comes from the interior, and until now has not been seen in France.

EXPOSURE TO THE SUN.—There are few points which seem less generally understood or more clearly proved than the fact, that exposure to the sun, without exercise sufficient to create free perspiration, will produce illness, and that the same exposure to the sun, with sufficient exercise, will not produce illness. Let any man sleep in the sun, he will awake perspiring, and very ill, perhaps he will die. Let the same man dig in the sun for the same length of time, and he will perspire ten times as much, and be quite well. The fact is, that not only the direct rays of the sun, but the heat of the atmosphere, produces abundance of bile, and powerful exercise alone will carry off that bile.

TELEGRAPHIC WIRES.—Much inconvenience and interruption have been occasioned by the breaking of the copper wires generally used in this country on lines of electric telegraph. This metal is expensive, but has been adopted on account of freedom from rust. In Great Britain, however, and on the continent of Europe, it is said that recent discoveries in chemical science allow iron wire to be employed, which, with greater size and strength, at much less cost, possesses all the advantages of copper and other metals which naturally do not oxidize. This iron wire is tinned and galvanized by a patent process, and on account of its advantages, it is said it is to be placed on telegraphic lines in the United States. Iron in sheets, and iron nails and spikes, are also rendered proof against rust by the same process.

MORE ROMANCING.—We have already announced the apprehension of Harper, charged with the murder of Mr. Meredith, of Baltimore. He is confined at Van Buren, Arkansas, waiting for an official requisition from the Governor of Missouri. The Lexington (Mo.) Express, having occasion to allude to the matter, lets us into the secret of the manner of his escape. His trial was a month off. "He was securely guarded, but the dictates of humanity prompted his guard to allow his wife to visit him. Woman's ingenuity suggested to her the means of effecting his escape. Hanging some of her clothes against the wall, knowing they would not be touched, she contrived to work out the mortar and bricks therefrom, carrying them out daily concealed about her person. None ever thought of examining her, and she worked away at her task of love unmolested. The result was the escape of her husband."

MISERIES OF INDOLENCE.—None so little enjoy life and are such burdens to themselves as those who have nothing to do. The active only have the true relish of life. He who knows not what it is to labor, knows not what it is to enjoy. Recreation is only valuable as it unbends us. The idle know nothing of it. It is exertion that renders rest delightful, and sleep sweet and undisturbed. The happiness of life depends on the regular prosecution of some laudable purpose, or calling, which enlarges, helps and enlivens all our powers. Let those in active usefulness retire to enjoy themselves. They are a burden to themselves.

VARIETY.

Benedict Arnold, the traitor, originally resided at New Haven, "did business," it would seem, as a merchant in all sorts of commodities, by the advertisement below, inserted by him in the Connecticut Journal, the first number of which appeared in April, 1755; the sheet was ten and one-quarter inches in length, and fifteen and a half wide—containing four pages, of two columns each:—"Benedict Arnold wants to buy a number of large, genteel, fat horses, pork, oats, and hay, and has to sell choice cotton and salt, by quantity or retail, and other goods as usual. Dated New Haven, June 24, 1766."

A most singular disclosure or confession of robbery has been made by a young man in this country. In the year 1843, during the carnival, two crowns of gold, studded with diamonds, valued at over $50,000, were stolen from the church of Sainte Marie in Aux-la-Chapelle, France. The Cure of this church has lately received a letter from Boston, it is said, in which a young man, well-known at Aux-la-Chapelle, offers to return the property in perfect condition, provided a yearly pension is settled upon him, and that an agent comes to Boston to receive the lost treasure.

When a marriage takes place in Norway, open house is kept for all comers for a whole week. Every neighbor and relation of the bride and bridegroom, brings provision as a contribution to the feast, and the new-married couple are expected to provide beer and brandy. When the guests take their leave, they make presents to the married pair, according to their circumstances and consanguinity, so that generally $100, and sometimes $500, are collected for the young couple.

Cuts for advertisements are not always so significant as they might be, but we have met with one in a Worcester paper which contains a rare combination of utility and wit. It is a picture over an advertisement of hair cutting and curling, and consists of a hare cutting off at full speed before an anaconda, who is curling up to spring upon him. This is cutting and curling with a vengeance.

Scientific men, from extensive and careful observation, have attempted to ascertain the mean length of human life. One calculation makes it eight years—that is one half our race die before they are eight years old; one quarter before one year; and one third before two years. One in four lives to fifty years; one in nine, to seventy; and one in thirty, to eighty.

The young ladies in one of the manufacturing towns in England have devised a novel way for imparting instruction to the poor and ignorant peasantry around them. They cut from newspapers and other periodicals, items descriptive of passing events of interest and containing the current news of the day, and paste them upon the doors, or some other conspicuous place in their houses.

The Rev. Mr. Norton recently visited and preached to a Protestant church, gathered from the French Romanists in Canada, consisting of 81 members, "every one of whom was born and trained in the Roman Catholic church." "While looking upon them," he says, "and noticing the peaceful and happy expression of their countenances when singing the praises of God, the tears started from my eyes. Hard indeed must be the heart that would not be affected by such a sight."

A gentleman was at a stable buying a horse, and wanted to see his motions. The horse trader called the boy, who happened to be away, to come and ride the horse, and he accordingly mounted; but not having heard the previous conversation, the boy was at a loss how to proceed, till he called his master to him and asked him in a low voice, which rather unluckily was overheard, "Sir, am I to ride him to sell by or to buy by?'

In Hampshire, near Stockbridge, England, there is a religious community, calling themselves the 'Little Benleyites,' who live in common in all things, without respect to marriage ordinances, or the usual laws of property. They sink the names by which they have been known in the world, go half naked, let their hair and beard grow, and subsist entirely on uncooked vegetables.

The New York Herald says 'the women of New York dress more gorgeously than those of any other city in the world. We know ladies who wear shawls worth one thousand dollars, and pocket handkerchiefs worth two hundred and fifty dollars.'

A certain eminent medical man lately offered to a publisher in Paternoster-row, a 'Treatise on the Hand,' which the worthy bookseller declined, with a rueful shake of the head, saying, 'My dear sir, we have too many treatises on our hands already.'

The steeple of the Central Congregational Church, at the Falls in Norwich, was blown down during the late storm. After turning a summerset, it fell through the roof to the floor of the church, making a hole just large enough to admit of its passage.

The earth is the habitation, the natural inheritance of all mankind, of ages present and to come; a habitation belonging to no man in particular, but to every man; and one in which all have an equal right to dwell.

By a Meteorological Journal kept by Professor Snell, of Amherst College, it appears that less than one half an inch of rain fell during the month of September—a less quantity than has fallen in any month for eleven years.

The Chinese affect to despise European ingenuity, but they cannot mend a common watch; and when it is out of order, they say it is dead, and barter it away for a living one.

There have been fifty kings, two protectors, and six queens of England; and the regular succession to the throne has been changed ten times since the kingdom was founded by Egbert, 1018 years ago.

It is estimated that the annual amount expended in New York city for segars is not less than $730,000.

Sixty-five students graduated at Cambridge Law School at the recent commencement.

By the earthquake of 1755 at Lisbon, 60,000 persons perished in six minutes. This shock was felt over nearly all Europe.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, }
IRA SAYLES, } Principals,

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classses will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

THE ORIGINAL SABBATH UNCHANGED.

BY JAMES A. BEGG.

The Observance of the Weekly Sabbath enjoined upon the Israelites.

Hitherto, although the mind of God in other respects as well as in this may have been known and obeyed on the earth by His people, in their individual and social character, we yet read of no great united manifestation of that mind, arresting the world's eye by its magnitude as well as by its righteousness. Now, however, in written testimony, and with a voice divine, uttered in the hearing of Israel, henceforth to be declared to them, and through them in word and the lively symbols of their appointed worship, that being received in faith and love, that mind may be exhibited by them individually and collectively. Not that now a new revelation of truths heretofore unknown is given; the same great and blessed truths which had been believed in previous ages, and which were lived upon by saints and patriarchs, are those now promulgated, and are to be set forth embodied in forms fitted to the now existing state of the world and of the church,—the substance of the whole being, the knowledge of and enjoyment in the living God.

Thus, although in the law given through Moses to Israel, besides the commandment to remember the Sabbath, new services, peculiar to the descendants of Israel, were connected with its sanctification. This does not, however, affect the nature of the Sabbath itself. That God should, for example, enjoin (Num. xxviii. 9,) the number of animals to be offered in sacrifice on each returning Sabbath to be greater than on other days, and that the shew-bread should be renewed regularly upon that day, (Lev. xxiv. 8,) cannot be regarded as proof that the sanctification of the Sabbath itself is less obligatory upon those who are not required to sacrifice at all. It was observed by the Israelites themselves, in the wilderness, previous to their receiving the law at Sinai, and therefore previous to their offering sacrifices upon it. The force of the obligation upon them is not therefore weakened when now the beautiful house where formerly their fathers worshiped, and in which alone acceptable sacrifice could be offered, has been destroyed, and they themselves are scattered far from its hallowed precincts. Public worship, where attainable, is a proper part of Sabbath sanctification; and sacrifice forms part of that worship which God required of His ancient people. None will question that while captives in the land of Babylon, the judgment of their God for the pollution of His Sabbaths, the sanctification of His day remained in unabated force; while yet no sacrifice could be offered except in the temple of God, in the city of Jerusalem, which the spoiler had burnt with fire,—proving that that which God had previously appointed in His law as an accessory, was not an essential even to Israel's sanctifying the day.

The sacrifices were but a part of that external form in which, for its more perfect preservation, the more essential part was enshrined. In them God gave manifestation of His character; and to faith, therefore, they were channels of life. It is only when thus viewed that the real value of the Mosaic institutions can truly be perceived. For though it is true that the mere observance of a form has no value in the eyes of the Lord, it is equally true that by that form the worshiper may be aided in yielding that which God does regard, yea, value highly. It is indeed for the sake of the kernel, that the nut is provided with a shell; but the very value of the one is imparted to the other, seeing that by it that which is prized is protected and preserved. When men are left without the stated calls which forms present, they are very ready to become remiss in attention to that the value of which they acknowledge. When the Apostle forbids the forsaking of the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, it is not that we may be led to believe that the mere circumstance of Christians meeting together, without the corresponding spirit for exhorting one another aright, will be acceptable to God, but that he would teach us that in the daily assembling of the faithful there may be found the needed aid to our faith and love for discharging this duty of mutual exhortation.

Subsequently, God gave to Moses farther instructions for Israel, recorded Exod. xxi. xxii. xxii., after which we read that Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, with the seventy of the elders of Israel, were called up into the mount, "And they saw the God of Israel; and there was under His feet as it were a paved work of sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness. And upon the nobles of the children of Israel He laid not His hand; also they saw God, and did eat and drink. And the Lord said unto Moses, Come up to me into the mount, and be there; and I will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them. And Moses rose up, and his minister Joshua, and Moses went up into the mount of God. And he said unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you; and behold, Aaron and Hur are with you; if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them. And Moses went up into the mount, and a cloud covered the mount. And the glory of the Lord abode upon Mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days; and the seventh day He called unto Moses out of the midst of the cloud. And the sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire on the top of the mount in the eyes of the children of Israel. And Moses went into the midst of the cloud, and gat him up into the mount; and Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights." Exod. xxiv. 9—19.

While Moses thus romained during so long a period with the God of Israel, he received additional instructions relative to the ordinances of worship, the object of which, as regards the table of stone, the law and commandments, was, as expressed above, that he might teach them. The instructions of the Lord, on this occasion, concluded with a statement to which it is needful we should now advert. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you, throughout your generations; that ye may know shat I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the Sabbath, therefore, for it is holy unto you; every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death; for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Six days may work be done, but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy unto the Lord; whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations for a perpetual eovenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day He rested, and was refreshed. And He gave unto Moses, when He had made an end of communing with him upon Mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone written with the finger of God." Exod. xxxi. 12—18.

A distinction, it is obvious, is to be drawn between that which was inscribed on the tablets of stone, "written with the finger of God," and the other laws, which, through Moses, God gave for the guidance of His people Israel. Much and important instruction indeed may be derived from the whole of the Mosaic institutions, for they are deeply impressed with the marks of divine wisdom and grace, in a consideration of the character and circumstances of those for whom they were designed. Still, however, there are in these appointments that which renders them specially fitted for those enjoying such opportunities, possessed of the knowledge, and making those acknowledgements of God which distinguished His peculiar people. God himself had audibly enjoined His law; they understood it without transmutation or mystification; they accepted it as divine, and covenanted to obey it. And even in regard to principles universally obligatory, there are, in their application to Israel, peculiarities which obviously were designed for them alone,—or, if for others, for such only as may be similarly situated. The precept calling for a remembrance of the Sabbath preceded its enforcement by the penalty of death annexed to its violation here; as, in the same code of laws, the punishment of death was enjoined for the presumptuous violation of other of the ten commandments. But the duty and the penalty are not necessarily connected. Thus, in reference to another precept of the Decalogue, the worship of the one living and true God only, is a duty incumbent upon all; and it was a duty before the appointment of the Mosaic economy rendered idolatry and blasphemy also capital crimes. The fifth commandment, too, enjoining honor and reverence to parents, is in itself essentially right and applicable to all, whether or not stubborn disobedience be visited with death. And so, likewise of adultery, which, according to the law of Moses, is also a capital crime.

It is important that we should know and understand the rectitude of principles, even though we should be placed in circumstances different from those of the people upon whom the penalty of their violation has been enforced. For in regard to all these crimes, and, perhaps, we ought to say especially in regard to the observance of the weekly Sabbath, nothing less than daring rebellion against the authority of the Most High could, in the land of Israel, involve the severe visitation. In judging of the penalty annexed, we are called to remember that the violation of the law, there, could not be the result of ignorance of the mind and will of God respecting it. The remembrance of the duty of sanctifying the Sabbath forms part of the "ten words" which God himself uttered in the hearing of all the people when He "added no more;" the intimation of the penalty which its violation incurred, is part of that with which Moses was entrusted, as a servant over the house of God; and Levites, priests, and prophets, were God's ministers for their farther instruction.

THE REAPER AND THE FLOWERS.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

There is a reaper whose name is Death,
  And, with sickle keen,
He reaps the bearded grain at a breath,
  And the flowers that grow between.

"Shall I have naught that is fair?" saith he;
  "Have naught but the bearded grain?
Though the breath of these flowers is sweet to me
  I will give them all back again."

He gazed at the flowers with tearful eyes;
  He kissed their drooping leaves;
It was for the Lord of Paradise
  He bound them in his sheaves.

"My Lord hath need of these flowrets gay,"
  The reaper said, and smiled;
"Dear tokens of the earth are they,
  Where he was once a child.

"They shall all bloom in the field of light,
  Transplanted by my care,
And saints, upon their garments white,
  These sacred blossoms wear."

And the mother gave, in tears and pain,
  The flowers she most did love;
She knew she would find them all again,
  In the field of light, above.

O. not in cruelty, not in wrath,
  The reaper came that day,
'Twas an angel visited the green earth,
  And took the flowers away.

QUARRELS AMONG CHRISTIANS.

If Christians, who have a matter of difference, would graciously agree to meet with each other in prayer, and to pray together kindly for each other before the throne of grace; surely, if they meant the attainment of that right and truth which they prayed for, they might soon find it out, and settle it accordingly. But it is the flesh which comes in, and mars all. One cannot stoop; and the other will not. They are not so wise as Luther's two goats, that met upon a narrow plank over a deep water. They could not go back, and they dared not to fight. At length one of them lay down, while the other went over him; so peace and safety attended both. Why should not believers try this method. But, alas! while grace remains idle or neutral, the world jeers and triumphs; the devil is busy and excites; good men mourn and lament; the weak are stumbled and turned aside; and a long train of inquietudes and jealousies fill the breasts of those who humbly hope to dwell with God and with each other through eternity. These things ought not to be.

If my brother be in the wrong, how shall I show myself in the right? By wounding him more than he hath wounded himself? By doing wrong likewise, and rendering evil for evil? No; let me pray, that God would open his eyes, and not shut my heart; that he would give him more grace, and me more patience to meet what is not gracious in him; and, at the utmost, that I may not be a partaker with him of anger, or of those sins which may follow upon it.

Am I in the wrong? What then shall I do? Shall I persist in it, and make myself more in the wrong? This would not be gracious; this would be bringing misery by heaps upon myself. Rather let me go first to God, and then to my brother, acknowledging my fault, or my error, to both. There is no shame in confessing our sins to God, nor any meanness in owning them to men. It is the mark of a noble and generous spirit in common life; and it is wisdom, as well as the duty and privilege, of a much better life in the Christian.

SLAVERY MUST CEASE.

"The spirit of the age, and the points of elevation which we have gained in the progress of events, are against the institution of slavery; and that instittnion is destined certeinly to fall. It is a system at variance with the settled views of mankind, and from which our race is not to go backward. Every thing which has been developed in the long track of ages and in the revelation of God, about the essential equality of man, the fact that all are of one race, that the same blood has been shed for human redemption, and that the same heaven is open for all, is against this institution. Every thing that has been elicited or established about the dignity of man, the nobleness of the soul, the honor of human nature, the distinction between intellect and matter, between man and the brute, is against the existence of this institution. Every blow that has been struck in the cause of liberty, either in this land or in the old world; every lesson taught by the struggles of the Puritans for freedom here, is against the spirit of this institution. Every common school, academy, and college in the land, and all the views we have adopted, that the human mind, as such, has a right to instruction;—and all that is sacred in the right of trial by jury, and all our views that every accused man, no matter what his color, has such a right—all our convictions that the Bible is made for mankind, and is to be withheld from none; and all the deep-felt and inextinguishable convictions which men are settling upon, that every man has a right to the fair avails of his own labor—all these things are against this institution. All the settled notions of religion, too, are against it; and it is only by a warfare upon the plain and indisputable principles of the Bible, that it is maintained.

"From these fixed points in regard to liberty, education, trial by jury, the right to read, and the right to the avails of labor, our race do not go backward. These are matters settled now, in the age in which we live. 'One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh,' but these principles, like 'the earth, abide for ever.' The spirit of Slavery is coming more into contact every year with these great principles; and as they acquire a deeper hold on the mind, the mind becomes more repellant to the system. The opposition made to the institution in this land and age, is not the ebullition of passion or excitement. It is the spirit of the age against it—the growth of centuries, the result of conflict, the fruit of liberty, the offspring of religion; and if any thing may be predicted in regard to the future, it is, that, somehow, the institution of slavery must cease forever." [Barnes.

THE STAGE ACTOR A PREACHER.

Some years since a young man from North Carolina, belonging to a company of play-actors, had his attention arrested one evening by a copy of the Dairyman's Daughter lying in his room at his boarding-house. He read it with deep interest and emotion, as have thousands of others, and while he read the touching delineations of Christian character contained in this inimitable narrative, his repentings were kindled together —his hard heart was dissolved into contrition, tenderness, and love.

He renounced the fascinations of the stage for the high pleasure and responsibilities of the Gospel ministry. He was a chosen vessel of mercy, and God honored him in winning many souls to Christ, as he had before decoyed many to perdition. He has been greatly blessed of God in revivals, and has enjoyed pleasing evidence that he has been instrumental in the conversion of a thousand individuals, amongst whom twenty are now ministers of the Gospel.

This is but the beginning of good done by a single tract. How greatly will this good be augmented through time and through eternity, while these thousand converts and these twenty ministers shall go forth and labor in their Master's vineyard, extending and widening the circle of blessed influences to the latest generations. What Christian shall have the glorious reward of distributing that tract? Who that loves the Saviour and the souls of men will not aspire to the honor and privilege of aiding to scatter these leaves of the tree of life, carrying them to every dark habitation in our land, and to every benighted corner of the globe?

STATED PRAYER.

There is no religion without prayer. Have stated times for devotion. At least, begin and end every day with God. Take time from sleep rather than want proper time for prayer. Watch against formality in your devotions. It is heartfelt prayers that are alone acceptable to God. Besides your intercourse with God at stated seasons, often look up to him, and ever go to him in the name of Jesus. Go into your closet, and down upon your knees with as much reverence as if you beheld the great and blessed God.

You require to be often reminded of this. For whether in childhood, in youth, or in manhood, we are all too apt to have a wandering heart in prayer, and repeat an outward form with the lips, but with a heart, alas, far from God.

Oh! pray against heartlessness, as one of the most powerful temptations of your spiritual enemy. Could you ascend into heaven every morning and evening to offer your devotion to the Most High, and then return to earth again, what a life of holiness you would lead! What fervent prayer and thanksgiving would you offer! Consider that the eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good, and that "all things are naked and open before him with whom we have to do."

ILL-NATURE RECOMPENSED.

I once heard of a young man traveling by night outside a coach, with an old man, who was a cripple. The young man had with him a new silk umbrella, and the old man a gingham one. Suddenly the old man cried out that his umbrella had fallen from the coach. In much distress he called on the coachman to stop, and requested the younger passenger, as a favor, to step down and recover for him his lost property; but the young man refused, saying it was rather too much trouble. Not content with this, he unfeelingly told the coachman to drive on, for he could not stop there all night for old fools who could not take care of what belonged to them.

The coachman, who expected to get more from the young man than the old cripple, broke into a loud laugh, while he touched his horses smartly with the whipcord. Round went the wheels with increased speed, to the delight of the one passenger and the dismay of the other. But when they arrived at the end of the journey, it was discovered that the old gingham umbrella was safe on the top of the stage coach, while the new silk one was missing. Thus, ill-nature was suitably recompensed, and the idle excuse, "It is too much trouble," met with a sharp reproof.

THE THRONE OF GRACE.

If you are a Christian, the throne of grace is yours. Your father is seated on it. Your Saviour has sprinkled it with his own blood. The Holy Spirit draws you sacredly to kneel before it; and the promise, when there, is, "Open your mouth wide, and I will fill it." What an honor to approach the King of Kings! Were we to have an audience with an earthly monarch, we should deem it an era in our history, and boast of it through life. But you, and I, and others may have audience with the King of the universe. Nay, we have liberty to approach him at any time, and under any circumstances. Have we wants? He can supply them. Are we in trouble? He can extricate us. Do afflictions press our souls? He can mitigate and remove them. Does sin pollute our joys? With him is the fountain of cleansing. Does Satan vex our souls? He invites us to his arms as our refuge. All relief and every blessing is from God.

[John Newton.

THE CHRISTIAN'S WORK.

The proper work of Christians is the extension of Christianity; the adding to the cloud of witnesses, the diminution of the sons of darkness, the accession of the gems to the Redeemer's crown. It is to be imbued with holy, untiring anxieties to rescue beings like themselves from going down to the pit; and because time is short, to devote every power, to consecrate every talent, devise every means, employ every resource, to "save souls from death,"—consequently to remember that men are always perishing, that therefore, we should be always laboring; that the season for activity is circumscribed, and that ere long, the night will come—it is coming—when our tongues shall be silent, our hands motionless, and our hearts pulseless; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest.

WEAR A SMILE.

Which will you do, smile and make others happy, or be crabbed and make every body around you miserable? You can live among beautiful flowers and singing birds, or in the mire surrounded by fogs and frogs. The amount of happiness you can produce is incalculable, if you will show a smiling face—a kind heart—and speak pleasant words. On the other hand, by sour looks, cross words and a fretful disposition, you can make scores and hundreds wretched almost beyond endurance. Which will you do? Wear a pleasant countenance—let joy beam in your eyes and love glow on your forehead. There is no joy so great as that which springs from a kind act or a pleasant deed—and you may feel it at night when you rest, at morning when you rise, and through the day, when about your daily business.

"A smile—who will refuse a smile,
  The sorrowing breast to cheer?
And turn to love the heart of guile,
  And check the falling tear?
A pleasant smile for every face,
  O, tis a blessed thing!
It will the lines of care erase,
  And spots of beauty bring."

INCONSIDERATE DEFIANCE.

"They may turn me out of the church if they please," said a rumselling Methodist Protestant some time since, when expostulated with upon the crime of trafficing in ardent spirits—"they may turn me out if they will; there are plenty of other churches that will be glad to receive me."

So there may be, brother. But have you ever thought to ask yourself, what if your love of gain should cause God to cast you out of heaven? Are there plenty of other heavens where you will be received gladly? What, if at the judgment day, when your trial shall come up before the Judge, there should be gathered about you a crowd of witnesses, testifying against you and your nefarious traffic—charging you with beggary in this life, and their condemnation in the life to come? What then? Ah! my brother, you do not consider what you are doing. Gold has dazzled you, but depend upon it, it will one day become dim. In your grasp after it, take care that your hand fasten not upon a serpent that shall sting endlessly. Beware! lest there be

"Some chosen curse,
Some secret vengeance in the store of Heaven,
Red with uncommon wrath, to blast the wretch
Who makes his fortune on the wreck of souls!"

[Methodist Protestant.

Temperance.—An incident, at one of the dinners of the Evangelical Alliance in London, may serve to keep before our minds the duties which we owe to our English brethren, of which we spoke a few weeks ago. An American member of the Alliance chanced to sit at the dinner table between two Englishmen, strangers to him. When the dinner was about half through, these two Englishmen seemed to be requiring the wine bottle, but were under some embarrassment. So one of them put out a feeler, and said to the American—"The temperance cause has made great progress in America, we hear." The other replied—"Yes, but there is much yet to be done there." The first remarked, "We in England have a difficulty, from not finding in the Bible a warrant for this doctrine of total abstinence." The American replied—"We in America feel sure that it would not be displeasing to God to have drunkenness cease; and as this is the only way to cause it to cease, we think he will not be displeased with us, if we abstain from intoxicating drinks." Silence was here resumed, and the wine bottle left untouched. [Puritan.

Eggs in Wafers.—The New York Observer quotes from a Roman Catholic paper of Paris, a statement that an English vessel lately arrived at Gigon, a Spanish port in the principality of Astarias, with a quantity of consecrated wafers, large and small, which were immediately offered cheap for sale to all the curates of the diocese. The bishop of Oviedo having had some of these wafers analyzed, because they were manufactured by Protestant speculators, the chemist found them to contain a little wheat flour, some potato, chalk, and the whites of eggs to give them consistence and glossiness. The presence of animal matter rendered these wafers improper for the holy sacrifice. The prelate complained to the magistrate; but when an officer came to seize this new contraband article, the whole was already sold. The bishop then sent a circular to all curates of his diocese, forbidding them, under pain of sacrilege, to use these wafers. He attributes this fraud less to the avarice of the perpetrators than to the hatred of Protestants against the mysteries of the Romish church.

The Preparation.—It is sixth-day evening. The labors of the week are past. They have engaged our thoughts and our hands. But now we approach the day of rest. Let us prepare our hearts. The world recedes. Its din is hushed. Its schemes have vanished away. Father of our spirits, may we not rest in thee. May our thoughts be of thee. And wilt thou so fill our souls with thy presence, that we may worship thee in that perfect peace which thou alone canst give. May the coming day be a Sabbath day to us and to all thy children. And having now some foretaste of thy goodness, may we be prepared for a nearer communion with thyself, an eternal Sabbath, in thy kingdom above, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 12, 1846.

CIRCULAR,

To the churches of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination.

Dear Brethren—At the late meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, the undersigned were appointed a Committee to address you in reference to the location of our Foreign Mission. A series of articles prepared by a member of the Board had served to create an interest in the people of Abyssinia, and it was expected by many of our denomination that our first efforts would be directed to that country. It was ascertained, that the inhabitants were nominally Christians, but so much under the influence of the superstitions of Paganism and Popery, as to be fit subjects for missionary labor. At the same time their adherence to the Sabbath of the Bible naturally excited our denominational sympathy, and created a desire to become connected with them by firmer bonds than their present degraded state would permit. It was a field, too, which had been neglected by other denominations of Christians, and it was quite easy to draw the inference that the providence of God had reserved it for us.

But desirable as it was to become connected with such a people, and to be the instruments of raising them from their state of spiritual death into communion with God, it was found that such was the situation of the country as to render it impenetrable except at the greatest hazards. Girt about on all sides with hordes of fierce and savage Arabs, it is inaccessible except to large caravans that force their way at the point of the bayonet. Aiming at the country under such circumstances, not only must missionaries be filled with the constraining love of Christ to an eminent degree, but they must possess a firmness of nerve and hardiness of constitution to endure the severest trials. Besides, from the best information at our command it appears, that the king of that country requires every foreigner to leave at the expiration of the first year, or else embrace the religion of the kingdom. It could not reasonably be expected that within so short a period, missionaries would acquire that influence which would prevail against so arbitrary a regulation.

These considerations determined the Board not to undertake a mission into that country immediately, but to begin their operations at Zanzibar, and from thence extend to the mainland as the providence of God might lead the way. Subsequent developments, however, have shown that the climate of Zanzibar is extremely fatal to foreigners. Indeed, so far as known, the whole circumference of the globe under that parallel of latitude is extremely unhealthy, with the exception of the west coast of South America, where the unhealthiness is counteracted by the mountainous regions of the Andes. Not wishing to place their missionaries in a climate which would be almost certain death to them, the Board, at their last regular meeting, solemnly and prayerfully reconsidered the whole subject. The result of their deliberation has already been briefly announced to the readers of the Recorder.

It may be well to state, that our accepted missionaries, brethren Carpenter and Wardner, were present at the meeting, as also brother N. V. Hull, of the Western Association, providentially on a visit to the place at the time. In the decision of the Board these brethren cordially acquiesced. All the circumstances, which could have any probable bearing on the case, were brought under review. The fact that the denomination already had their minds somewhat settled upon Eastern Africa, and in view of it had made a portion of their contributions, was a serious consideration. It was submitted as a question, whether the interest in favor of the Abyssinians had not already reached such a point, that any sudden change on the part of the Board would not be endured by the brethren, and so would operate disastrously on the missionary spirit already excited amongst them. On the other hand, it was considered that some of the denomination were from the beginning in favor of another field, and that with very many it was a matter of indifference what country was selected for our first experiment, provided we did but engage in the work. It was also considered, that even should our missionaries be successful in penetrating into Abyssinia, and be permitted to rumain there in the undisturbed prosecution of their work, their communications with us would be very uncertain. It might be many long years before we could receive any tidings from them at all. We could not know whether they were dead or alive; and all remittances for their support would have to be made at great risk and uncertainty. In view of such gloomy prospects, it was thought that an adherence to the original plan would in the end prove more disastrous to the missionary spirit of the denomination, than any sudden change possibly could. It was therefore determined that we should for the present direct our attention to some field more accessible, and promising more immediate results.

Among the different fields brought under consideration, the vast and populous territory of China was regarded as equal in importance to any of them. By the late treaties, five ports on the coast are made accessible to foreigners. Missionaries at these stations would have command of a population as large as that of the whole United States, reckoning with the permanent inhabitants others who would be accessible. Of these five ports, the city of Fuhchau fú, in the province of Fuhkien, containing half a million of inhabitants or more, is destitute of any Protestant missionary, while in other stations the proportion of evangelical laborers is but as "a drop in the bucket." At any of the five free cities our brethren might labor advantageously, although Fuhchau fú, being entirely destitute, seems to present paramount claims. The Board, confident that one person on the ground can judge of the most suitable place better than fifty persons can on this side of the ocean, have simply designated China as the field, leaving it discretionary with the missionaries to occupy Fuhchau fú or any other place as they shall see fit after their arrival in the country.

China is therefore to be regarded as the field of our incipient missionary undertakings abroad. It must not, however, be supposed that the Board have abandoned all idea of occupying Abyssinia at some future day. On the contrary, we still cherish the hope that the providence of God will open our way into that region. No doubt that, and all other countries which are now closed against us, will be open, when we as a people are prepared, by strong faith and entire consecration to God, to enter in and possess them. In the present distracted and wretched state of the Christian world, it may be even a mercy that so much of the world is shut up against the Gospel, as the extension of missionary labors under such circumstances would only extend the darkness and confusion which now, alas! rest upon the Church. May He, to whom all things are placed in subjection, speedily apply the desired remedy.

Our missionaries will be ready to sail for China as soon as their outfit is completed, and the necessary amount of funds shall be secured.

A ROMISH JESUIT OUTDONE BY A BAPTIST MISSIONARY.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In the Philadelphia Christian Chronicle of September 30th, I find a letter from Rev. Mr. Kincaid, late Baptist Missionary to Burmah, giving some account of a conversation between him and a French Jesuit priest, while on board a steamer passing down the Ohio River. The following is an extract from the letter:—

Jesuit—"Is it not a little remarkable, that the only two dogmas in the support of which the Catholic Church depends entirely on tradition, the Protestants have adopted—the change of the Sabbath, and the baptism of infants. Now you cannot prove from your Bible, that the Sabbath was changed, or that infants were to be baptized."

Kincaid—"Very well; I hold to nothing but what is clearly taught in the Bible. I keep the first day of the week because the first Christians observed it, and there is no evidence that they met together on any other day for Christian worship. That the disciples met together on the first day of the week to engage in acts of Christian worship, and that they designed to meet on the first in preference to any other day, and that it was sanctioned by Paul, is a recorded fact. Here then I stand on Apostolic ground."

Jesuit—"You must prove then that the command in the Decalogue is repealed."

Kincaid—"No—that command is as binding on me as it was on the primitive Christians. 'Six days shalt thou labor; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God.' The disciples, in the days of Paul, labored six days in the week—but not more. On the first day in the week, they met together in their Christian assemblies. Here, then, is divine authority for meeting together on the first day of the week in Christian worship."

Mr. Kincaid's letter shows that he has exceeded the Jesuit in two things—first, in his effrontery to affirm what is not true, and, secondly, in his ignorance of the Scriptures respecting Sabbath-keeping, or his duplicity to represent them as teaching what it is well known they do not teach. I do not say which, but I see not how he can escape one or the other of these charges. Whether we accuse him justly or not, let the following facts decide:

Mr. K. says, "There is no evidence that they (i. e. the first Christians,) met together on any other day (than the first day of the week) for Christian worship." Now the Scriptures say, in Acts 2: 46, 47, "They continued DAILY with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the Church DAILY such as should be saved." Acts 16: 5 says, "So were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number DAILY." Luke 4: 16 says, that Christ "came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and as his custom was, he entered into the Synagogue and stood up for to read." Luke 23: 56 says, that the women "rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment." Acts 13: 14 says, Paul and his company "came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day." After the reading of the law and the prophets, Paul stood up and preached. "And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached unto them the next Sabbath." "And the next Sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God." Similar facts are affirmed in Acts 16: 13, and 18: 4. Did Mr. Kincaid know these facts of Scripture? If he did know them, how could he say that there is no evidence that the first Christians met together for Christian worship on any other day but the first day of the week? Will he answer these questions?

Farther, Mr. K. says, "That they designed to meet on the first in preference to any other day, and that it was sanctioned by Paul, is a recorded fact." Will Mr. Kincaid tell us where this fact, or rather these two affirmations of his, are recorded? Until he does this, we shall believe his assertion to be a grosser pretence than any of which he has accused the Jesuit. Where is it recorded, Mr. K., that the first Christians designed to meet on the first in preference to any other day? Where is it recorded that such a preference was sanctioned by Paul?

Mr. Kincaid says that the fourth commandment of the Decalogue "is as binding on me as it was on the primitive Christians. Six days shalt thou labor, but the SEVENTH is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Why then does Mr. K. affirm that the first Christians preferred the FIRST day to any other day for Christian worship? The Jesuit had the candor to acknowledge that the Catholic Church depends entirely upon tradition for the observance of the first day. Mr. Kincaid has the effrontery to affirm his positions to be clearly taught in the Scriptures, and his practice authorized by apostolic authority, without giving us a single proof. Verily he has cast Jesuitism into the shade. S. D.

MISSIONARIES FOR INDIA.

Eleven missionaries of the American Board for Foreign Missions are to sail from Boston for India on the 16th inst. Four of this number—Mr. Spaulding and his wife and Dr. Scudder and his wife—have been missionaries to that field for some twenty-five years. They came to this country on account of ill health, and now that health is restored to them again, they return to their field of labor with the desire and expectation of passing the remainder of their lives on missionary ground. On third-day evening of last week, a sort of farewell meeting was held in New York, at which one of the Secretaries of the Board read the instructions to the missionaries, and Dr. Hutton addressed them on behalf of the churches. In the course of the instructions, it was stated, that this mission commenced thirty-four years ago, when infidelity had the controlling influence in India. Recently, however, the Government has been gradually disconnecting itself from Paganism, and soon its priesthood and its temples will have nothing to sustain them but their own merits. According to a law of caste, if a heathen renounces his religion he is considered as legally dead, and his property is disposed of as if he were really dead. This law has been a formidable barrier to the progress of the Gospel, by preventing men of wealth from giving their attention to it. But within a year or two a decree has been issued forbidding the enforcement of this law. Until 1835 the Government upheld pagan learning, by permitting none to hold offices except those who were educated pagans. But it is now the practice of Government to select for public offices those best fitted for them by their education and character, thus holding out to young men a strong inducement to acquire a thorough European education. These facts are regarded as indicating the favor of God toward missions to India, and as furnishing a strong incentive to labor in that country. The time has come, in the estimation of the Board, to seek not only to convert the heathen, but also to render the church indigenous to the soil. Hence the missionaries were advised to establish churches on the outskirts of their missions, and ordain pastors over them, assured that although they may sometimes have occasion to lament failures, they will in this way most effectually promote the cause of religion.

A TOUCHING CASE OF INSANITY.

The editor of the Baptist Register, referring to Mr. Van Heusen, who returned from the mission to the Teloogoos last year on account of mental aberration, says:—"This poor brother, recently a devoted missionary with bro. Day among the Teloogoos, was at Elbridge with his wife during the session of the Convention. The apprehension extensively entertained in regard to his idiocy is incorrect. He is a deranged man, but by no means an idiot. His mind has become shattered by excessive mental action, or some physical disease, and we should not be at all surprised, if, under the proper treatment of the Vermont Asylum, to which he was going, he should again be restored to sanity.

"His great desire and expectation is to resume his labors among the Teloogoos, and under the apprehension that he may lose the Teloogoo language while in this country, he is incessantly engaged, wherever he may be, in talking to himself in this foreign tongue. If the Bible is handed to him he immediately begins to translate it into the Teloogoo, and even when eating there is no cessation. While in the public house at which he was, we were witness of this; overhearing some persons seemingly in earnest conversation in an adjoining room, in a language entirely new to us, we listened some time, and then we ventured to approach the door of access, which was open, and there was a man at breakfast alone, soliloquizing in this tongue during the whole of his repast. Having previously learnt that bro. Van Heusen was in this constant exercise, we concluded at once it must be him, though we had never before seen him. It was a melancholy spectacle—one that would have touched the sensibility of any heart.

"What is very remarkable, if he is asked to pray, he will kneel and make as regular and able a prayer as any person—indeed, a prayer of uncommon power and fervor, without the least derangement about it. If any brother claims the special consideration and sympathy of the disciples of Christ, it is of one in their afflicting circumstances, and we really hope that he and his poor wife and family may not be forgotten in the donations of brethren and sisters."

Insubordination among the Presbyterians.—The case of Rev. Mr. Graham has served to develop a spirit of insubordination among the judicatories of the Presbyterian Church, which is quite uncommon and noteworthy. It will be remembered, that some time ago, the New School Synod of Cincinnati, suspended the ministerial functions of Rev. Wm. Graham, a member of that body, for heresy, in teaching that slavery is in accordance with the Bible. The case went up to the General Assembly on an appeal, and that body pronounced the action of the Synod irregular and unconstitutional, and sent down its injunction accordingly. The case came up again at a recent meeting of the Synod, but the body refused, by a vote of 36 to 11, to comply with the requisition of the Assembly, and asked the latter to reconsider their action. The ground of this refusal is a rule lately adopted by which, according to the opinion of the majority, the Synods, and not the Assembly, are the courts of ultimate appeal and final authoritative jurisdiction. The Synod at the same time censured the Ripley Presbytery for having adopted resolutions disrespectful to the Assembly on the subject of slavery, whereupon that Presbytery seceded from the church.

The Greek Church.—Mr. H. Newton is writing from Smyrna a series of letters, in which he takes the position, that "the Greek Church is to the full as idolatrous and as apostate as the Romish Church." In support of this position, he says that the heads of the Greek Church have issued an order that no school shall be tolerated in which the Greek National Catechism is not taught. This Catechism teaches the doctrines of transubstantiation, a mixed justification by faith and works, the use of pictures in religious worship, &c. From Mr. Newton's account of the matter, it would seem that there is but little in the condition of the Greek Church to encourage the Christian. Who can look upon the downward course of these great religious and ecclesiastical bodies, without trembling for the fate of those now in the ascendant?

The German Seventh-day Baptists.—A letter from Samuel Snowberger, dated Snowhill, Pa., Nov. 5th, says: "The suits of Andrew Monn, David Monn, John Burger, and Jacob Specht, were brought before Court on Monday last. The judge decided against them, considering himself bound to do so by the Act of 1794, although he is a strong advocate for liberty of conscience. The suit is now appealed to the Supreme Court, which will commence its sittings on the second Monday of next May. If we should be defeated there, we are determined to proceed to the Supreme Court of the United States, hoping to obtain the aid of Sabbath-keepers in other States."

"Shut on the Seventh Day."—In a recent number of the Advent Herald, we find a letter from a Mr. Hutchinson, who is now on a second-advent mission to England and Scotland. He says that on "Saturday, Sept. 5," he "went to Glasgow with the intention of seeing Mr. Begg, a pre-millennial advent believer, and a publisher; found his store closed, with the following inscription—'Shut on the Seventh Day.'" Mr. Begg's example, in giving due notice of his regard for the Sabbath, is worthy of al lpraise. We trust that of the many who read it some may be excited to inquiry thereby.

New Tract.—The American Sabbath Tract Society has recently published the Address upon the subject of Sunday Legislation, read before the General Conference at Shiloh, N. J. It is entitled—"Religious Liberty endangered by Legislative Enactments: An Appeal to the Friends of Equal Rights and Religious Freedom in the United States, from the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference." It makes a tract of sixteen pages, and is well adapted to circulation at the present time. We hope our friends will see that it is sown broadcast.

Minutes of the General Conference.—The publication of the Minutes of the General Conference has been delayed in order to obtain as complete statistics as possible. They are now out, however, and ready for distribution. According to them the present number of churches is 63; ordained ministers 58; licentiates 24; communicants 5943.

New Agents.—We have this week added several new names to our list of Local Agents, in hope that they will accept the appointment, and serve us in that capacity. They are as follows: James H. Cochran, Clarence; Andrew Babcock, Brookfield; Reuben W. Utter, Friendship; E. D. Barker, Newport, R. I.; Wm. M. Clarke, Walworth, W. T.

A Gift-Book for the Young.—We have repeatedly commended the Youth's Cabinet to our readers as standing at the head of juvenile magazines. The first volume of it is just completed, and may now be obtained in a book form. We do not know of a more attractive and appropriate holiday gift for young people. Read the advertisement in another column, and if you question our judgment of its merits call at 135 Nassau street and examine for yourselves.

Education in the Ministry.—Eld. E. O. Morrill, an aged and laborious preacher of the Christian connection, is writing in their publications in favor of their young men who are called to the ministry obtaining a theological education at some institution.

Religious Customs of New England fifty years ago.—A Jubilee was held in New Braintree, Mass., to celebrate the completion of fifty years since the Rev. Dr. Fiske became pastor of the Congregational Church in that place. In the course of a sermon preached on the occasion by Dr. Fiske, he spoke as follows:—

"One remark is, that fifty years ago, it was a very unusual thing, that any religious duty of a devotional character, was performed even by professors of religion, except in the family, especially in the presence of their pastor. It was not till I had been here more than 11 years, that I was permitted to hear a sentence of prayer offered by one of my people. The reason was, not that there were no Christians, but it was considered the special duty of the minister to do all the praying as well as all the preaching when he was present, and it was designed as a mark of respect to the Christian ministry. During all this time, and so far as I learned, under the ministry of my predecessor, there was not a social prayer meeting in this place. It was much after this sort in most of the churches.

"Another remark is, that the church at the time here spoken of, consisted almost entirely of persons in married life, and most of them far advanced in years. At the time of my settlement there was not a young person to be seen at the table of the Lord when his people sat down to commemorate the love he manifested in giving his life a ransom for all. It seemed to be the general understanding, that the better sort of persons, when they settled down in the married state, and children were born to them, should connect themselves with the church. The neglect to dedicate children in baptism, was justly viewed as an implied renunciation of the gospel and an approximation towards heathenism."

China.—The Rev. Mr. Smith, of the Episcopal mission, says, in an animating letter: "China wants missionaries of a peculiar order. Piety, however genuine, and zeal, however fervent, unless tempered by practical judgment, and accompanied by vigorous activity of mind and body, will be only a partial qualification for entering on a field abounding with gigantic difficulties. The difficulties, however, are intermingled with much encouragement. The Chinese need only the transforming influence of Christianity to raise them almost immeasurably above the rest of Asiatic nations. They are a quiet, kind, and inquiring race; wedded by custom to foolish idolatry, but never willing seriously to defend it. Present appearances lead me to coincide with the general opinion of the missionaries, that no where in the heathen world can a congregation of attentive hearers be more easily obtained than in China. A person of quick perception, retentive memory, and habits of method and analysis, may, in one year, with good health, begin to feel some satisfactory indications of his speedy progress toward eminent usefulness."

Poor Encouragement.—It appears that apostate ministers from several denominations, on their way to papacy, have long been in the habit of making the Episcopal church a temporary stopping place. Bishop De Lancey, who has taken pains to examine the subject, says, "It is a curious fact, that as far as I can learn, almost all the clerical seceders in this country, from the church to Romanism, have been originally educated and trained in bodies not Protestant Episcopal." He then goes on to give the names of twelve ministers who have thus seceded, after a short stop with Episcopacy, of whom five were Congregationalists, four were Presbyterians, two were Methodists, and one an Episcopalian. So says the Christian Watchman.

Declining the Honor.—Rev. Joseph C. Styles, of Richmond, a man of great intellectual ability, Pastor of the United Presbyterian Church, (N. S.) has declined the title of D. D. conferred by the Transylvania University, considering it a bauble unworthy the dignity of a servant of Christ, and the acceptance of it countenancing artificial distinctions among ministerial brethren, often unjustly made, and always contrary to the Spirit of the Gospel.

Semi-Centennial Convention.—The Rev. Dr. Fiske, of New Braintree, closed the fiftieth year of his pastorate on the twenty-sixth day of the last month; on which day he expected to preach a semi-centennial sermon, and to dedicate a new house of worship. His children, all of whom, but one, have for years been absent from the paternal mansion, were expected to be present on this occasion.

PROCLAMATION,

By Silas Wright, Governor of the State of New York.

The year eighteen hundred and forty-six draws to a close. Its seasons have been uncommonly propitious, and its harvests are realized. Unusual health has blessed our State and the teeming earth has yielded its abundance to supply our necessities and minister to our comforts.

The wave of passion, which, during the past year, rolled over some of our Counties, has subsided, and internal peace is restored to our citizens, and tranquility to our firesides.

The most sublime spectacle connected with Civil Government is now exhibiting before us. The Representatives of the Sovereignty of our People, assembled to take in pieces and re-construct the frame-work of the State Government, have discharged the high trust and returned to their constituents, and to their private duties, without having excited passions, alarm or apprehension in the community; and our Freeman are examining their labors, and preparing to pass a verdict of approbation or rejection upon their work, with a vigilance inspired by a pervading patriotism, and with a calmness and confidence which Free Institutions can alone impart. Not an individual in the State apprehends an encroachment upon his just rights, or an abridgment of his civil and religious privileges, from this peaceful and voluntary revolution of his Government. Stronger evidence of high intelligence and sound morality in a People cannot be afforded.

These, and innumerable other temporal blessings of a kindred character, constantly flowing upon our State and its citizens, call for continued thankfulness to the bountiful Giver of every blessing.

The gift of a Saviour, and the full light of Divine Revelation, are spiritual blessings which should awaken to expressions of devout thankfulness the hearts and the voices of a Christian People.

I respectfully recommend Thursday, the twenty-sixth day of November next, to be observed as a Day of Public Thanksgiving; that the People of the State, abstaining from their ordinary business avocations, may assemble at their usual places of Religious Worship, and, uniting with each other, and with their fellow citizens of many of the other States, may pay their tribute of thanks to the Author of these and all temporal and spiritual good gifts; and may pour out their hearts in prayer to Him, that His rich smiles may be continued to our Country, and that the signal blessings of this year may be crowned by the termination of our existing Wars in an honorable and just Peace.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the privy seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Witness my hand, at the City of Albany, the nineteenth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-six.

[L. S.]

SILAS WRIGHT.

By order. Horace Moody, Private Secretary.

General Intelligence.

SIXTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Britannia arrived at Boston on Sabbath morning last, bringing advices from England to Oct. 20.

The news is important in a commercial point of view. Grain and Flour are on the rise. The advance in Wheat since the last arrival averages 5s. per quarter, Indian Corn 2s. Cotton has advanced full three-eights of a penny per pound. Flour has also advanced, bonded flour being at thirty-three shillings per barrel, a rise of one shilling on the highest quotation per last steamer.

A rumor has been prevalent, and seems rather to gain ground than otherwise, that the English Government has in contemplation to open the ports for the admission of all kinds of grain duty free.

The price of grain is rapidly rising in all the European ports, the best proof of scarcity; and supplies for Great Britain as well as the continent must come principally from the U. S. and Canada, where the harvest has been happily abundant.

The deplorable condition of Irelad engrosses much of the public attention. Famine, disease and riots continue to spread over that unfortunate country.

The marriage of the Duke Monpensier and the Infanta of Spain was consummated on the 10th ult.

Elihu Burritt was recently at Exeter. "One of the most respectable meetings ever held in this city, says the Western Times, took place on the 9th inst. at the subscription rooms, to welcome Elihu Burritt to this city, and to listen to an address from him on the subject of Universal Brotherhood."

Two vessels had arrived in London within three or four days from the United States, laden with ice, to the amount of several hundred tons.

The French Ministry are said to have granted Marshal Bugeaud 30,000,000f. to make a trial of military colonization.

The Bavarian Government has, it is reported, purchased corn at Odessa to the amount of 2,000,000 florins, to be distributed among the several circles.

A prison, called the Pennsylvania prison, has been built in Germany for the trial of the American system of solitary confinement.

A new comet was discovered at Rome about eight in the evening of the 23d ult. It was advancing rapidly in a western direction toward the equator, parallel with Tau in Ursa Major. It is nebulous, and throws very little light.

The Grand Council of the Swiss Canton of Berne has issued an ordinance which emancipates the Jews from several oppressive obligations previously imposed on them, as to the mode of conducting their commercial transactions.

A number of Catholic missionaries have recently been sent from France to the United States. The religious newspapers boast that the Catholics are gaining immense success in America.

A letter from Constantinople, published in one of the newspapers, states that the American missionaries have had great success in converting the people. They have already effected 6,000 conversions, 3,000 being of Americans, and the rest of Turks, Jews and Greeks. Another letter says that the Americans have no success at all, and are very unpopular.

Louis Philippe, by an ordinance of the 6th ult., has pardoned upward of 100 prisoners on the occasion of the marriage of the Duc de Montpensier. Among those whose penalties were commuted are five of the accomplices of Quenisset, who was sentenced to death by the Court of Peers in 1841, for an attempt against the lives of the Dukes of Orleans, Nemaurs and Aumale. Eight other political offenders, implicated in the insurrectionary movements of La Vendee, in 1834 and 1835; four others condemned for participation in the plot of Marseilles, in 1841; and nine galley slaves, confined in the hagnes of Rochefort, Brest and Toulon, whose good behaviour was made known to the King, have also experienced the royal clemency.

A recent letter from China says that the competition between the Americans and the British is so great, that the former are selling their cottons at a dead loss, in the hope of driving the latter out of the market; but it is said there is little chance of that, as the British have the advantage of drawing their cotton from India, the nearest market.

There has been another skirmish at Aden, the British post in Arabia. A body of 5,000 Arabs attacked the town in broad daylight, but being repulsed they were soon compelled to retire with a severe loss in killed and wounded.

Fugitive Slaves.—In Boston there is a 'Vigilance Committee' appointed for the purpose of protecting runaway slaves. This Committee was appointed by the meeting at Faneuil Hall, on the evening of the 24th of September last. John Quincy Adams in the chair. They offer a reward of One Hundred Dollars to be paid to any person who shall give the earliest information to either of the Committee concerning any alledged slave held secreted there for the purpose of being carried away from the State against his will.

They also offer to pay to every one who shall have endeavored to give them the earliest information, and to render aid, though unsuccessfully, whatever his services shall be fairly worth, to which also they will add a farther sum in the way of reward, according to the circumstances of the case.

At Chicago, a few days since, two negroes claimed as slaves, while undergoing an examination before a magistrate, were forcibly rescued by a body of citizens, and hurried beyond the jurisdiction of the Court.

The St. Louis New Era of the 29th ult. thus alludes to the insecurity of slave property in that vicinity!

"Negro property in this State has become very insecure by reason of the operations of the negro stealers. This state of insecurity is becoming greater every day by reason of the settlement of Iowa on our north with an anti-slavery population, and on account of the more perfect organization and concerted action of the anti-slavery men in Illinois. The temptations and inducements held out to cause slaves to elope, are becoming more common—and the aid and facilities furnished for the escape of slaves more effectual than formerly. The difficulties, risks, and heavy expenses that attend the recapture of a slave when he has once entered Illinois, render an escape almost equal to a total loss."

New Route to Oregon.—Mr. Jesse Applegate addresses a letter to the editors of the Western States with regard to a discovery which admits emigrants to the valley of the Willamette by a southern route.

The new route follows the road to California about three hundred and twenty miles from Fort Hall, and enters the Oregon territory by the way of the Klamet Lake, passes through the splendid valleys of the Rogue and Umpqua rivers, and enters the valley of the Willamette near its southern extremity.

The advantage gained to the emigrant by this route is of the greatest importance. The distance is considerably shortened, the grass and water plenty, and the sterile regions and the dangerous crossings of the Snake and Columbia rivers avoided, as well as the Cascade mountains. This road has been explored, and will be opened at the expense of the citizens of Oregon, and nothing whatever is demanded of the emigrants.

Breadstuffs.—Extraordinary efforts are being made along the line of the Erie Canal and the Lakes to push to market the flour and grain of the West before the close of navigation. In the port of New York there are now twenty-one of the largest class vessels loading with breadstuffs for Great Britain. The entire receipts of wheat and flour at tide-water, by way of the Erie canal, from the commencement of navigation this season up to the 17th ult., were 1,878,326 bushels of the former, and 2,178,241 barrels of the latter. The increase in the receipts of the article this year, so far, compared with the corresponding period last year, is equal to 776,408 barrels of flour; and the aggregate of flour and wheat received is equal to 2,573,906 barrels of flour.

SUMMARY.

A striking instance of economic talent, says a writer in the British Quarterly Review, came to our knowledge in the district of Alston Moor. From the smelting earths of one "house," an arched tunnel conducts the smoke to an outlet at a distance from the works, in a waste spot, where no one can complain of it. The gathering matter or "fume" resulting from the passage of the smoke, is annually submitted to a process by which at that time it yielded enough of lead to pay for the construction of a chimney. A similar tunnel-chimney, three miles in length, has been erected at Allendale. Its "fumes" will yield thousands of pounds sterling per annum. Truly, here it may be said that smoke does not end in smoke.

An accident was almost miraculously prevented on the Camden and Amboy Railroad one day last week. While crossing the bridge over the Rancocus Creek, it was discovered that the "draw" was not let completely down. The danger was imminent, as there was not sufficient time to prevent the train from reaching the open draw, such was the headway of the locomotive. The conductor, brakeman, and engineer, behaved with the utmost coolness, and contrived to detach the cars just at the very moment that the engine touched the edge of the aperture or chasm. Another instant and the locomotive was plunged into the creek, which is broad and deep, and disappeared beneath the waters—the cars remaining, and the numerous passengers saved as if by a providential forethought and coolness on the part of the individuals we have named—from frightful danger, injury, wounds, and death.

A letter dated Milwaukie, Wisconsin, Oct. 16th, says:—"Our friends are very well here, but about three in five of the people of the City are blue about the gills, and the chief article of consumption is quinine. I was in a store a few minutes to-day, and while there four men came in, their teeth chattering, and bought each a dose of that article. I never knew the fever and ague so prevalent any where before. It is owing to the extremely dry season. The marshes around town are stagnant and emit an offensive vapor, which is the cause of its being so extensive here."

Mr. Irvin, consignee of the Great Britain steamer, contradicts in the most positive terms the story that the commander of that steamer was intoxicated when the disaster occurred. On the contrary, says Mr. Irvin, "I have seen him in public and in private, in hours of business and hours of relaxation, on board his ship and ashore, entertaining and being entertained, and I never saw a man more manifestly superior to the vicious propensity referred to, or of whom it might be more safely asserted that the charge in question is utterly and in all it parts untrue."

Eleven States have appointed the 26th inst. as the day of annual Thanksgiving, viz: New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Maryland, Kentucky. Maine is the only Northern State that has failed to unite in the observance of this day. Her Thanksgiving will occur Dec. 5th, a week later, as will also that of South Carolinia and Georgia.

The house of Mr. Strout, who had informed against certain liquor dealers of Portland, was attacked by a party of men on Friday night, who threw stones and brickbats at the doors and windows. Mr. Strout fired off a musket at the assailants, and it is supposed wounded one of them, as traces of blood were seen for some distance.

A Worcester paper says: There was at least 10,000 people from the neighboring towns thronging our streets, beside our own populace, on the day of the annual agricultural exhibition and cattle show; and yet we have not been able to learn that a single person was seen intoxicated. Surely this speaks well for the recent action of our citizens in regard to the enforcement of the no-license law of the State.

A sad accident occurred in Sept. last at a fort occupied by the Russians, but assailed by the Circassians. A lighted match fell upon the powder magazine and caused its explosion, by which 33 Russian officers and 200 men were killed.

Rooms heated with anthracite coal, and rooms heated with close stoves in which wood is burnt, have a very dry atmosphere. The use of water in such rooms is very congenial to health, but the water should not be placed in an iron or tin vessel upon the stove, for the reason that it will undergo that degree of heat which will make its vapor offensive and injurious to breathe. It is as injurious to the human system to breathe putrid water vapors of this kind, as it is to breathe the vapors from stagnant ponds in hot weather. If water is used upon a stove, an iron pan should be made use of, and this filled with dry sand, in the sand set an earthen bowl filled with clean water, should be changed twice a day, and the bowl washed and kept as clean as if used for a drinking vessel.

Brick back-logs to fire places where wood is burnt are very useful and economical. The brick takes up the heat slowly and retains it, whereas iron backs take up the heat quick and lose it as rapidly, and besides, become very hot and buru up the wood, thereby producing a loss. Persons who use bricks and common flat irons heated to place to the feet of sick persons, will notice how much sooner iron loses the heat and becomes cold than brick.

The Manchester Democrat gives a case in point to show that employers are no losers by adopting the ten hour system. It says that a railroad contractor in that place, whose hands work only ten hours a day, has a job of grading beside another, whose hands work on the old plan, the pay of the hands being equal, the ten hour contractor will have his job done in one hundred days' work less than the other. A similar result is spoken of in one of the Rhode Island papers.

A New Hampshire man came to Boston with 500 dozen pairs of knit stockings, being half his fall supply. He has a yarn factory, and he sends the material into all the farmers' families, far and near, and it is made into stockings, and then the farmers' wives, daughters, and children, are paid for their labor in money or goods from the store.

It is said that it was the destructive effects of the mortar that first determined Ampudia to capitulate. If was towards evening on the 23d, when the mortar, with much labor, had been planted in the cemetry, near the cathedral, and within reach of the Piazza. The first shell, discharged about 7 P. M., fell close to the entrance of the cathedral, where the priest was performing mass, and its explosion spread such destruction around, that Ampudia, being entreated by the priest and others, immediately wrote his letter to General Taylor, asking terms.

Two brothers, of Bucks, England, with a couple of companions, were drinking late one night at a public house and quarreled about some gin. A fight ensued between the brothers, and they fought for about one hour and a half, and about 70 rounds. In the last round John, the younger brother, struck Thomas and knocked him down; he lay insensible; a looker-on carried him home. On his being taken to his father's cottage he was found to be dead. The father had only these two sons.

Two members of the Indiana Legislature have died since the late election in that State—one at his residence in De Kalb and Steuben District, and the other (Lt. Eller, of Monroe Co.,) at Brasos St. Iago.

The steamship Great Britain had not been removed from her unfortunate position when the last steamer left. Machinery is in course of preparation, by which it is hoped that she may be relieved.

Some one of the light-fingered gentry had the politeness to take from the packet of Rev. Dr. Miles, of Lowell, Mass., as he was passing over the East Boston ferry, six new termons—quite a loss to the owner, as he had never preached them, but no very usable commodity in the hands of a thief.

Three thousand three hundred and eighty-five persons were arrested in New York, in a state of intoxication, from the first of May last to the first of August inclusive. This fact is verified by a reference to the records of the Chief of Police.

The Presbyterian Synod of Alabama and Mississippi have purchased the freedom of a negro man named Ellis, in Green County, Ala., for the purpose of sending him as a missionary to Africa.

The Hon. Nathaniel White and Hon. Nelson Richmond, Associate Judges of McKean Co., Pa., departed this life, the one on the 12th and the other on the 13th ult., thus creating two vacancies in one county.

The Baltimore Patriot says that a lady lost a purse containing $125, and after advertising in that paper but two hours, it was returned to her. A gentleman lost a purse with $240, and in about the same time, through the same medium he recovered it.

One farmer, says a Wisconsin paper, in the vicinity of Michigan city, raised twenty thousand bushels of wheat this year. In New England such a crop would be a fortune.

Wise, the æronaut, proposes to take the Castle of San Juan by the means of a balloon loaded with bomb-shells and torpedoes.

The Supreme Court of Louisiana has decided that a wife cannot enter into any private contract with her husband beyond her paraphernalia. This decision reverses others in the inferior Courts.

The Government of Austria, with a wise provision against accidents incurred on railways, has issued an ordinance declaring that every engine driver on the rail road of the State who shall have for the space of one year, performed his duties without any accident, shall be entitled to a reward of 100 florins, and that every engine driver whose trains have met with no accident for ten consecutive years, shall receive 1,000 florins and a gold medal.

In a descriptive article, now going the rounds, the following high flown sentence occurs: "Through the mountain gorges stray the sullen bear and tawny moose, while the beautiful deer feeds along the solitary waters, and the treacherous panther screams in the tangled thicket."

The new steamer Isaac Newton, made the run from Four-Mile Point to Poughkeepsie—distance 54 miles—in two hours and eight minutes.

In the vicinity of Independence, Texas, pieces of wood, petrified, are found in great quantities. In some localities, stumps of trees of the same size, and from two to three and twenty feet long, cover the whole face of the ground. Magnificent specimens might be obtained there for cabinets.

The Reformation by Martin Luther, commenced in Germany, in 1519; in France, by John Calvin, in 1530; in Switzerland, by Zuinglius, in 1519, and in Scotland, by John Knox, in 1560. The name of Protestant was given to the Reformed, at the Diet of Spire, in 1529.

The aggregate value of the wood ashes made by the combustion of wood for fuel, is very great. Ashes of good hard wood will yield five pounds of good potash to the bushel. Ashes should be kept dry. There is ashes enough made in this State to pay the entire State tax.

Grates for burning coal should be set as near the hearth as possible, and a depression should be made in the rear part of the hearth for the cinders and ashes. A grate set in this way will give out heat to warm the feet, whereas in a grate set 8 or 10 inches from the hearth, the fire heats the limbs higher up.

Large waves proceed at the rate of about 35 miles an hour. Many suppose that the water advances with the speed of the wave, but it is not so; the form of the wave only advances, excepting a little spray, while the water remains rising and falling in the same place.

Dobbs, the portrait painter, on being asked what was true virtue, replied, "any thing that you would approve at midnight, with a thunder storm raging over your head.

There were two hundred and seventy-five cases on the docket of the Court of Common Pleas at Worcester, at the recent term, of which two hundred and thirty-one were for offences begun in liquor.

DIED,

In Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 23d of October, 1846, Lucinda Whitford, wife of Barton Whitford, aged 66 years and 2 days. Mrs. Whitford made a profession of religion in early life, and joined the church at Waterford, Ct., whence she removed her standing to the church in Adams, of which she was a member at her death. To give up her family was a hard struggle, but she was enabled by divine grace to do it, and to resign both them and herself into the hands of the Lord. In her death, her husband has lost an affectionate companion, her children a tender mother, and the church a worthy member. Her funeral was attended by a large concourse of people, when a sermon was preached by Eld. G. M. Langworthy, from Job 7: 16—"I would not live always."

"Why do we mourn departed friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

In Plainfield, N. J., on the 29th ult., Charles Albert, son of Augustus M. Dunham, aged 1 year and 9 months.

He left us, our "infant of days,"
And we marveled why He who had given
Should call him so soon from our yearning embrace;
But He spake, and our mourning was turned into praise—
"Of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

At Sag Harbor, L. I., on the 2d inst., of consumption and dropsy, Frances Amanda, only child of George D. and Charlotte S. Chester, aged one year and twenty-six days.

In East Greenwich, R. I., Oct. 29th, Edgar Alonzo, son of Horatio A. Stone, of Warwick, R. I., aged 9 months.

In Verona, N. Y., on the 30th ult., of inflammation in the head, George Oscar, son of Henry S. and Martha A. Burdick, aged 18 months and 27 days.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

THE WEEKLY CHRONOTYPE,

IS published weekly by White, Potter & Wright, at No. 2 Devonshire Street, near State Street, Boston. Terms—$2 a year, in advance. For $5 three copies will be sent to one address. A liberal discount will be made to Agents who pay for a larger number of copies. Edited by

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

This paper is not bound to the creed or cause of any clique, association, party, sect or set of men, but expresses freely the opinions of its editor at the time, and of such contributors as may honor it with their thoughts, or be supposed by the editor to do so. It will be his endeavor to give such a variety and quantity of matter as to meet the wants of every enlightened family, and especially of those which seek more light. He will not only give the daguerreotype likeness of Time as he passes, but will examine every new thing that he meets, and some things that are old, without fear or favor. Where he cannot convince, he will try to be good-natured. Where he cannot satisfy himself of the truth, he will be contented to confess his ignorance. In short, he will endeavor to help forward, in a neighborly way, every thing but Humbug. That he will endeavor to knock down and drag out, even if it should cling to the throne of political power or the horns of the sacred altar.

He will not take an oath never to be wiser. He will not scorn truth, though it may come from an enemy. He will not flatter the poor because he is one of them. He will not hate and abuse the rich because he is not one of them. But he will endeavor to establish a better understanding between the extremes of society—showing both ends that happiness is most likely to be found between them—consisting in a great measure in a mutual endeavor to abolish idleness, disease, poverty and roguery.

With these general purposes, it is the prime object of the editor of this paper to get an honest living.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

Elihu Burritt, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in Advance.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER.

This paper, being made up of such portions of the contents of the National Intelligencer proper as can be compressed within the compass of a single newspaper, continues to be issued and mailed to subscribers on Saturday, at two dollars a year, payable in advance in all cases—no account being opened with subscribers to the weekly paper.

To bring this paper yet more nearly within the reach of such as desire to take by the year a cheap paper from the seat of General Government, a reduction will be made in the price of it where a number of copies are ordered and paid for by any person or association at the following rates:

For Ten Dollars six copies will be sent.
For Twenty Dollars thirteen copies; and
For each sum of Ten Dollars, above twenty, [illegible] copies will be forwarded; so that a remittance of Fifty Dollars will command thirty-seven copies.

Miscellaneous.

"AT EVENTIDE IT SHALL BE LIGHT."

BY N. P. WILLIS.

Storm has been on the hills. The day has worn,
As if a sleep upon the hours had crept;
And the dark clouds that gathered at the morn
In dull, impenetrable masses slept,
And the wet leaves hung droopingly, and all
Was like the mournful aspect of a pall.
Suddenly, on th' horizon's edge, a blue
And delicate hue, as of a pencil, lay,
And, as it wider and intenser grew,
The darkness faded silently away,
And, with the splendor of a God, broke through
The perfect glory of departing day;
So, when his stormy pilgrimage is o'er,
Will light upon the dying Christian pour.

THE GOSPEL.

Not in the regal halls
Of power and wealth, the Undefiled was born,
But in the manger of a lowly inn;
Not by the glare of day, the heavenly host
Their anthem sang, but in the solitude
Of solemn night; nor in the gorgeous fane
Which crowned Moriah's mount, but in the fields
Of peaceful Bethlehem. Not upon the ear
Of God's anointed priesthood, fell that strain
Of precious promise to the sons of men,
But of the humble shepherds of the plain.
Thus makes the Gospel in the lowliest heart
Its favorite shrine, while to the poor, the meek,
The afflicted, comes its voice to soothe the soul
With its unutterable wealth of love.

ESCAPING FROM SLAVERY.

The following account of the escape of a slave is copied from the New Nork Commercial Advertiser of 1822. It shows how contented and happy the slaves were in those days:—

"The captain of a vessel from North Carolina called upon the Police for advisement respecting a slave he had unconsciously brought away in his vessel, under the following curious circumstances: Three or four days after he had got to sea, he began to be haunted every hour with tones of distress, seemingly proceeding from a human voice, in the very lowest part of the vessel. A particular scrutiny was finally instituted, and it was concluded that the creature, whatever or whoever it might be, must be confined down in the run, under the cabin floor; and on boring a hole with an auger, and demanding 'Who's there?' a feeble voice responded, 'Poor negro, Massa!' It was clear enough, then, that some runaway negro had hid himself there before they sailed, trusting to Providence for his ultimate escape. Having discovered him, however, it was impossible to give him relief, for the captain had stowed even the cabin so completely full with cotton, as but just to leave room for himself and the mate to eat; and as for unloading at sea, that was pretty much out of the question. Accordingly, there he had to lie, stretched at full length, for a tedious interval of thirteen days, till the vessel arrived in port and unloaded, receiving his food and drink through the auger hole."

"The fellow's story is, now he is released, that being determined to get away from slavery, he supplied himself with eggs and biscuit, and some jugs of water; which latter he was just on the point of depositing in his lurking-place, when he discovered the captain at a distance, coming on board, and had to hurry down as fast as possible, and leave them; that he lived on nothing but his eggs and biscuit, till discovered by the captain; not even getting a drop of water, except what he had the good fortune to catch in his hand one day, when a vessel of water in the cabin was upset during a squall, and some of it ran down through the cracks of the floor, over him."

WESTERN LIFE.

The following is an amusing extract from Hoffman's 'Wild sports in the West,' illustrative of the scenes which chequer the life of a hunter.

'Well,' said Cheny, after he had cooked the trout to a turn, and placed a plump, red, juicy fellow upon a clean cedar chip before each of us, with an accompaniment of roast potatoes, and capital wheaten bread, 'now isn't this better than taking your dinner shut up in a close room?' 'Certainly, John,' said I. 'A man ought never to go into a house except he is ill, and wishes to use it for a hospital.' 'Well now, I don't know whether you are in airnest in saying that but that's jist my way of thinking. Twice I have given up hunting and taken to a farm; but I get sick after living long in houses. I don't sleep well in them; and some times when I go to see my friends, not wishing to seem particular-like, I first let them go quietly to bed, and then slip out of the window with my blanket, and get a good nap under a tree in the open air. A man wants nothing but a tree above him to keep off the dew, and make him feel kind of home-like, and then he can enjoy a real sleep.' 'But are you never disturbed by any wild animal when sleeping without fire or camp?' one of us asked. 'Well, I remember once being awaken by a creter. The dumb thing was standing right over me, looking in my face. It was so dark, that neither, of us I suppose, could see what the other was; but he was more frightened than I was, for when I raised myself a little, he run off so fast that I couldn't make out what it was; and seeing that it was so dark, that to follow him would be of no account, I laid down again and slept till morning without his disturbing me again.' 'Suppose it had been a bear?' 'Well a bear isn't exactly the varmint to buckle with so off hand, though lying on your back is about as good a way as any to receive him if your knife be long and sharp, but before now I've treed a bear at night-fall, and sitting by the tree until he should come down, have fallen asleep, from being too tired to keep watch, and let the fellow escape before morning.'

RAPIDITY OF IDEAS IN DREAMS.

Two friends agreed to go on a walking expedition, one of whom proposed to call on the other at an early hour the following morning. He did so, and waked his friend, but in vain, as he went to sleep again. He then dreamed that his father put several questions to him as to the state of his health, was alarmed at his replies, and sent for a surgeon; that two medical gentlemen attended him, put the usual questions, and ordered him a cold shower bath. He awoke with the shock, and found that his friend, tired with waiting, had dashed a basin full of cold water in his face. It was evident that what the dreamer deemed the concluding circumstance, was in truth the suggester of the whole series of ideal events. The mind had called up all this train of thought to account for the sensation produced by the water. Several dreams illustrative of this point were related. There is something analogous to this in our waking hours. A single word will call up instantaneously a long series of by-gone events, and in a revery our fancies are often as ridiculous and rapid in their passage through the mind as in a dream. Generally speaking, however, our waking thoughts succeed each other less rapidly than the ideas which make up our dreams. These might be accounted for in the first place by the absence of sensations, and secondly, by the absence of that 'regulative faculty' which, when awake, we exercise over our thoughts. In sleep, the flow of thoughts is as rapid and irregular as the motion of a machine without a regulator.

WANDERINGS OF THE DESERT TRIBES.

Almost all of the Sahara tribes are accustomed to a system of annual peregrination, which must have existed from time immemorial, inasmuch as it is based upon the nature of the climate and the produce, and the primary wants of their existence. This general movement is commonly performed in the following manner. During the winter and spring the tribes are collected in the waste tracts of the Sahara, which at this season of the year, supply water to fresh vegetation, but they never remain more than three or four days on any one spot; and when the pasture is exhausted, they strike their tents, and go to establish themselves elsewhere.

Towards the end of the spring they pass through the towns of Sahara, where their merchandize is deposited. They load their camels with dates and dye stuffs, and then turn their steps towards the north, taking with them their whole wandering city—women, dogs, herds, and tents—for it is at this season that the springs begin to dry, and the plants to wither, on the Sahara, at the same time that the corn is ripe in the Tell. They arrive at the moment of the harvest, when corn is abundant and cheap, and thus they take a double advantage of the season, by abandoning the waste as it becomes arid, and seeking their fresh store of provisions at the north when the markets are overstocked with grain. The summer they pass in this country, in commercial activity, exchanging their dates and woollen manufactured goods, for corn, row wool, sheep, and butter; whilst their herds are allowed to browse freely upon the lands, which lie fallow after the gathering of the harvest. The signal for the return homewards is given at the end of the summer, the camels are reloaded, the tents again struck, and the wandering city goes forth, as it came, in short days' journey's towards the south. The Sahara is regained about the middle of October, the period when the dates are ripe. A month is passed in gathering and storing this fruit; another is devoted to the exchange of the wheat and barley and raw wool for the years' dates, and the woollen stuffs, the produce of the yearly labor of the women. When all this business is concluded, and the merchandize stored away, the tribes quit the towns, and lead their flocks and herds from pasture land to pasture land among the waste tracts of the Sahara, until the following summer calls for a renewal of the same journey, the same system of trade.

THE REGALIA OF THE BRITISH CROWN.

The Regalia deposited in a room recently appropriated for that purpose, presents a magnificent spectacle. Here is the ancient Imperial Crown of Charles the Second; the Prince of Wales's Crown; the ancient Queen's Crown; but the most magnificent display of England's Regalia is the Crown of her present Majesty. The cap is of purple velvet, with silver hoops covered with diamonds; on the top of these hoops is a ball covered with smaller diamonds, with a cross of brilliants, containing a remarkable central Sapphire. On the front is a heart-shaped ruby, said to have been worn by Edward the Black Prince. This diamond weighs 1 1-4 lbs., and is valued at one million pounds. The Baptismal Font with stand, of silver gilt, which was used at the baptism of her present Majesty and the Prince of Wales, is four feet high, and cost £40,000. A large silver Wine Fountain is also exhibited, weighing 66 lbs., and which cost £50,000. There are various other paraphernalia belonging to the Regalia, such as Edward's Staff, of pure gold, four feet seven inches in length; the Royal Sceptre, of gold, two feet nine inches long; the Rod of Iniquity, of gold, three feet seven inches long; the Queen's Ivory Sceptre, mounted in gold with a dove of White Onyx; the Orb, six inches in diameter, edged with pearls, and surmounted with most splendidly wrought roses of diamonds. The sovereign holds this Orb in the left hand at Coronation; the Swords of Justice, temporal and ecclesiastical; and numerous other articles which we cannot mention. The value of the whole Regalia is estimated at £3,000,000, equal to $12,520,000,

PETION'S DAUGHTER.

While Petion administered the government of the Island of Hayti, some distinguished foreigner sent his daughter a beautiful bird in a very handsome cage. The child was delighted, and with great exultation exhibited the present to her father. "It is indeed very beantiful, my daughter," said he, "but it makes my heart ache to look at it, I hope you will never show it to me again."

With great astonishment, she enquired his reasons.

He replied: "When the island was called St. Domingo, we were all slaves. It makes me think of it to look at that bird, for he is a slave."

The little girl's eyes filled with tears, and her lips quivered as she exclaimed,—"Why, father! he has such a large handsome cage, and as much food as ever he can eat and drink."

"And would you be a slave," said he, "if you could live in a great house and be fed on frosted cake?"

After a moment's thought, the child began to say, half reluctantly, "Would he be happier if I opened the door of his cage?" He would be free! was the emphatic reply.

Without another word, she took the cage to the open window, a moment after—she saw her prisoner playing with the humming birds among the honey-suckles.

A colporteur in Missouri during the last year traveled about 3,400 miles, and was not charged a cent for lodging and horse feed.

Hens.—We have frequently seen it asserted in our agricultural papers, that hens are the most profitable fowl that a farmer can raise. We are inclined to believe the statement substantially true. The only requisite is, to keep them well and see that they are constantly and liberally fed with meat, grain, lime, gravel, and, indeed, all those substances which they naturally require to preserve them in a state of health. Hen-keeping has now come to be properly regarded as an essential branch of farming, and as competition increases, improved breeds and modes of management will be indispensable to success. The egg market is at present, in this State, very abundantly supplied; but the price for good eggs is yet remunerating, and probably will remain so for years to come.

We think that by judicious management, the net profit of hens may be made to exceed that of any fowls usually kept on the farm. They devour large quantities of rubbish, and are serviceable in thus converting much that would otherwise come nnder the denomination of refuse to a profitable use. [Maine Cultivator.

Literary Style.—On style, Milton holds this language:—"For me, readers, although I cannot say I am utterly untrained in those rules which the best rhetoricians have written in any learned language, yet true eloquence I find to be none but the serious and hearty love of truth; and that whose mind soever is fully possessed with the dearest charity to infuse the knowledge of them into others—when such a man would speak, his words, by what I can express, like so many mirable and airy servitors trip about him at command, and in well ordered files as he could wish, fall aptly into their own places."

Foster, in his inimitable essays observes, "False eloquence is like a false alarm at thunder, where a sober man that is not apt to startle at sounds, looks out to see if it be not the rumbling of a cart." And again,—"Eloquence resides in the thought, and no words can make that eloquent which will not be so in the plainest that could possibly express the sense."

Influence of Cold on Longevity.—Cold climates appear to be favorable to longevity. In Norway, of 6,927, who were buried in 1761, sixty-three had lived to the age of a hundred, and in Russia, out of 726,278 souls who died in 1801, two hundred and eighteen were a hundred years of age, and two huudred and twenty above it, of whom four are said to have been above a hundred and thirty years old. In the diocese of Aggherus, in Norway, there existed, in the year 1763, a hundred and fifty couples who had lived together upwards of eighty years. Excessive cold, however, is prejudicial to long life; in Iceland and Siberia, men attain at the utmost to the ages of only sixty or seventy. Temperate climates are, however, most conducive to health and long life. There the human frame is more complete, the body more vigorous, the mind best formed, the passions best regulated, and man in every respect reaches when well governed, the highest amount of perfection. The districts of Arcadia, Ætolia, and other parts of Greece, were celebrated for longevity. More old men are to be found in mountainous and elevated situations than in plains and low countries.

Fossil Remains of Man.—According to the United States Gazette, a very remarkable discovery has recently been made of fossil remains of the human species. They consist of the bones and pelvis, and were discovered by Dr. M. W. Dickerson, in the mammoth ravine, near Natchez, Mississippi, in the same stratification with the bones of the megatherium, milodon, megalonyx, the tapi, castroides, zebra, bison, elk, a gigantic horse, and a nondescript animal, discovered also by Dr. Dickerson, and below those of the mastodon, and a stratum containing marine shells. The discovery is perhaps the most remarkable one that has lately characterized the progress of modern geology. These curiosities have been deposited in the rooms of the Academy of Natural Science in Philadelphia.

Calamities of Genius.—"Milton, proscribed and poor, descended in utter blindness to the tomb. Dryden, towards the close of his life, was compelled to sell his talent piece-meal to support existence. 'Little cause have I,' said he, 'to bless my stars for being born an Englishman. It is quite enough for one century that it neglected a Cowley, and saw Butler starved to death.' Otway, at a later period, choked himself with a piece of bread thrown to relieve his hunger. What were not the sufferings of Savage, composing at street corners, writing his verses on scraps of paper picked out of the kennel, expiring in prison, and leaving his corpse to the gaoler, who defrayed the expense of his interment! Chatterton, after being many days without food, destroyed himself by poison."

Singular Test.—A Flemish painter, entertaining some doubt of the affection of his wife, and being anxious to ascertain if she really loved him, one day stripped his breast naked, and painted the appearance of a mortal wound on his skin; his lips and cheeks he painted of a livid color, and on his pallette near him he placed his knife, painted on the blade with a blood-like color; he then shrieked out as if had been instantly killed, and lay motionless. His wife hearing the noise, ran into his study, was horror-struck at the appalling spectacle, uttered an involuntary scream, fell down in a swoon, and in a few minutes became a lifeless corpse.

Anecdote of Wm. Jay.—Not many years since, when the Edward Irving mania raged, a man calling himself an "Angel of the Church," proceeded from Bristol to Bath, on a special mission to Wm. Jay. The grave, thinking old man was in his study, and when the "Angel," a man with a dismal countenance, a white cravat, and rusty black trousers, appeared, Mr. Jay asked him his business.

"I'm the 'Angel of the Church,'" said the man.

"What Church?" asked Mr. Jay.

"The Irvingite church at Bristol," replied the angel.

"Take off your coat," said Mr. Jay.

The angel took off his coat, and Mr. Jay quietly rubbed his shoulder blades.

"What are you doing?" asked the angel.

"Looking for your wings," was the cool answer of William Jay. [Atlas.

VARIETY.

A traveler says that, during his long residence in Malta, and constant course of commercial transactions with the professors of the Mahomedan creed, he never heard of an unpaid debt or violated obligation; and that it is a usual mode of traffic in the market towns, throughout Turkey, for the farmers and hucksters to leave their fowls, eggs, butter, &c., in baskets, with the prices affixed, and to return in the evening in perfect security of finding the article as they left it, or the exact price deposited in the place of just so much of it as had found a purchaser.

Among the most important and useful articles at the Fair was Morse's Patent Stove for burning Tan, Saw-dust, and Peat, exhibited by Newcomb & Dixie, of Worcester, Mass. This Stove has a horizontal plate at the bottom perforated with holes, simply to let the ashes through, and upon the centre of this plate, over a hole four or five inches in diameter, stands a hollow cane some 12 or 15 inches in height, which cane is also perforated, and serves to drive the flame or heat from the centre to the outer surface of the Stove. It is said, and believed, that one cord of tan in this stove will give out as much heat as two cords of wood in the common draught stove.

One of the "handiest" things, as a Yankee would say, in the swill-cooking business, is Mott's Agricultural Furnace. It consists of a neat, compact stove, to which is attached a kettle, which makes a part of the stove, and which is therefore readily heated by the fire built within. They are of different sizes. These can be placed any where you wish to have them—in the house, barn, hog-pen, or out doors. As they can be shut up tight after being used, there is little or no danger from fire.

James I. of England, went out of his way to hear a noted preacher. The clergyman seeing the king enter, left his text to declaim against swearing, for which the king was notorious. When done, James thanked him for his sermon; but asked him what connection swearing had with his text. He answered, "Since your majesty came out of your way through curiosity to meet me, I could not, in complaisance, do less than to go out of mine to meet you."

The new steamboat Isaac Newton, just come out at New York, is spoken of as the largest steamboat in the world. She is 340 feet long, 40 feet wide. Her engine is 1374 horse power, and has a 12 foot stroke. The shafts and cranks each weigh 32,000 pounds. Twelve tons of white lead, and twenty tons of paint, were used in painting her; 2344 yards of carpeting were used, with 500 mattresses, 500 pillows, and other bed fixings to match.

The captain of a sloop plying between New London and Sag Harbor, was lately sued by the Post Master General, on $100 penalty demanded, because he was kind enough to carry a letter for a neighbor. He was put to great expense for his kindness, and the District Court upheld the law; but the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

A FARM FOR SALE,

IN the township of Piscataway, State of New Jersey, lying north-east from New Brunswick, half a mile from the Bridge, half a mile from Snyder's Mills, and in full view of the railroad car-house. Said farm consists of about ninety-five acres of land, in a good state of cultivation, and well adapted to raising grain and vegetables. It has a good variety of fruit trees, considerable wood, and five acres of salt meadow. The house is in good repair, and has a well of water at the door. There is also a new barn, sheds, &c. For farther particulars call on Dr. Nelson Stelle, No. 146 Grand-st., N. Y.—Mr. Burris, No. 1 Oliver-st.—or on the premises of JONATHAN S. DUNHAM.

THE ORIGINAL SABBATH UNCHANGED.

BY JAMES A. BEGG.

The Observance of the Weekly Sabbath enjoined upon the Israelites.

To those who speak not only of the Sabbath as having been given solely to the Israelites, but who imagine also that by the death of Christ its obligation was cancelled even as regarded them, the fact deserves attention, that here it is commanded expressly that "the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant"—and that it is "for ever"—that not only in the present day, but so long at least as this people shall have existence, "throughout their generations," God's command is imperative upon them individually and as a nation, and that certainly not affected by their becoming Christians.

But I have quoted the text especially for the consideration of an objection which has been urged from it. The Lord here says of the Sabbath, "It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever," and it has been argued that these words limit the authority of the commandment to those between whom and the Lord it is thus said to be "a sign." I would, therefore, thus seek to direct attention to the reason even here assigned for its observance—"It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day He rested and was refreshed." Whatever therefore is implied in its being a sign, God's creating work and resting after, is the ground of it—and as the very reason extends to all men, this proves that the sign is not necessarily of more limited application.

Observe, again, it is not that the Sabbath was given as a sign between the Israelites and other nations—it was a sign between the Lord and them, that He sanctifieth them. And in what outward form is attachment to the Lord, and dependence upon Him, more truly evidenced, than in the real sanctification of the Sabbath! It has ever been so regarded, even where a Sabbath of man's making has been made the test by which the possession of love to the Lord was determined. How much more, then, is this manifested by keeping God's own institution!

But was it, let me ask farther, that the observance by the Israelites of the seventh day, rather than the first, or any other day, was to be a sign between them and Gentile nations?—that they should keep one day, and thereby be distinguished from those who should keep another? Or rather, is it not that their observance of the Sabbath—for it is their observance of it, and not the Sabbath itself, which constitutes the sign—should be an evidence, not of their peculiarity as a nation, distinguishing them from all other nations, but distinguishing them as the worshipers of the living God, who created the heavens and the earth, from those who bow before false gods and powerless idols—that "it is a sign between me and you, throughout your generations, that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you." God's design was that they should be a holy people—that they should know their holiness to be derived from Him, the Creator of heaven and earth, the Lord of the Sabbath. In order to their sanctification, He enjoins their observance of the Sabbath, as a fitting means to promote it; and, being as a city set on a hill to give light concerning the great Creator and the gracious Sanctifier, He urges this the more forcibly upon them. "Behold!" exclaims Moses, on another occasion, "I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it. Keep, therefore, and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people. For what nation is there as great, who hath God so nigh unto them as the Lord our God is, in all things that we call upon Him for? And what nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law which I set before you this day." Deut. iv. 5—8.

Let it be observed, that the declaration that Israel's sanctification of God's Sabbath shall be a sign, was uttered subsequently to the promulgation of His law from Sinai, in which the only reason assigned for the command is, the Lord's own rest on the seventh day; and, farther, that this same reason is here repeated, in the very text on which the objection to its more general observance is founded—for, having made all things in six days, "He rested and was refreshed."

As respects Israel themselves, the sign—that of their sanctification—was never fully realized, and the Sabbaths of the Lord, which should have witnessed for Him as the Sanctifying One, were polluted by His people. Hear how the Lord speaks of this matter when they were cast out of the land, and while they were captives in Babylon because of their transgressions: "I gave them my statutes and shewed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them. Moreover, also, I gave them my Sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them. But the house of Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness; they walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; and my Sabbaths they greatly polluted; then I said, I will pour out my fury upon them in the wilderness, to consume them. But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, in whose sight I brought them out." And to their children, also, He said, "Hallow my Sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God." Ezek. xx. 5—20.

The very end, then, for which the Lord gave His Sabbaths, as also His other statutes and judgments, unto the house of Israel, was that they might be sanctified, and that they might know him as the Lord their God. This is the nature of the "sign"—it is not a sign peculiar to them, but belongs to all His sanctified ones. What Christian would be content to be without it? It is an intimation that God is the source of sanctifying grace, and that the Sabbath is one of the special means through which this is communicated. "I gave them my Sabbaths to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them." Earnestly desiring that all might perceive how good His statutes and judgments are, the Lord says and repeats, "I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen among whom they were." But they rebelled, and His Sabbaths "they greatly polluted," so that it was no longer a sign between a holy people and a holy God. They refused to cast away their idols, and submit themselves to the God of righteousness, and judgment overtook them. They polluted the Sabbaths of the Lord, and He gave them over into the hands of a cruel foe, who carried them away captives from the goodly land which their God had given them; and now He sends his prophet to recount unto them the evil of their doings, while in Babylon they were reaping its bitter fruits.

It is not, then, that the Sabbath was appointed specially for the Israelites, or that it is a sign distinguishing merely Jew from Gentile. Its observance by either would indeed be a sign of their being a people sanctified by the living God, as it would also tend to promote that sactification; but the Lord promulgated to Israel His statutes, at this time grievously forgotten or despised in the world, but which before had existence; and He "made them to know His judgments," (ver. 11, marg.) according to which righteous men in earlier ages had walked. They indeed had gone after their idols, and the Sabbath they polluted; God again made it known to them, saying, "I am the Lord your God, walk in my statutes and keep my judgments, and do them; and hallow my Sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God."

This, therefore, in no way interferes with God's original design in the sanctifying and blessing of the Sabbath in memory of His finished work; still less, does it prove that it was now for the first time revealed unto the sons of men. Its observance was a sign or token worthy of the God by whom it was originally appointed—honoring to Him, as it is, when duly sanctified by any of His children. What a testimony did it afford to other nations, to behold this people in the regular return of the Sabbath rest, from week to week, laying aside all concern about earthly cares, that they might commune with the Father of their spirits—to see the trust which thus they reposed in His paternal provision for their needs, when labor and business of every kind was thus continually interrupted, and for them to learn that this was done in obedience to the great Creator, and appointed by Him in commemoration of that stupendous work in which His power, His wisdom, and His love, are so conspicuously manifested. To every stranger brought on any occasion to visit "the land of Immanuel," it could not fail to be a very striking circumstance, a sign worthy of his deep regard. And now, whilst their own land is lying waste, enjoying its Sabbaths, when her sons and daughters are scattered into their enemies' lands, dispersed amongst Gentile nations, the Sabbath, wherever truly observed to the Lord, is no less calculated to awaken profound attention and encourage trust. It still remains God's "sign." It is a solemn thing for any to stand forth as God's witnesses among the nations; not only from week to week resting from labor on the day commanded of God, but doing this on that very soil from whose produce these nations are themselves supported, and interrupting their pursuits in those avocations at which others also are engaged—and to trust that the great God whose day they so hallowed will impart His promised blessing. But our faith and obedience are glorifying to His name; and none have ever trusted Him and had reason to be ashamed.

All this, in regard to the Israelites, is indeed a sign worthy of Him who wrought that His holy name might not be polluted among the heathen—and so in like manner does its observance continue a sign, in so far as the Sabbath is sanctified by any. Soon the Gentile church not only themselves deliberately departed from their duty, polluting the Sabbath of the Lord, but succeeded also in leading the believing Jews from theirs. And so the sign has, since the earlier ages of Christianity, been almost entirely confined to the Jews, who reject Jesus as their promised Messiah; but they, in some measure at least, have remained as God's witnesses to His creation work, a sign even to those on whom the name of Christ is called. Oh that they were more faithful in spirit to the "perpetual covenant," witnessing more perfectly for God in this, and in other forms, "throughout all their generations."

POETRY OF JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

In the Summer of 1800, Mr. John Quincy Adams, then minister at Berlin, made an excursion through Silesia, and visited the Giant Mountain, the highest land in Germany. It was the custom of the travelers, after they had visited it, to write their names and some sentiment in a book kept at a cottage on the side of the mountain. Mr. Adams was the first that had ascended this mountain, and he thus describes his sensations:—

"Sentiments of devotion I have always found the first to take possession of the mind on ascending lofty mountains. At the summit of Giant's head, my first thought was turned to the supreme Creator, who gave existence to an immensity of objects that expand before the view. The transition from this idea to that of my own relation, as an immortal soul, with the author of our nature, was natural and immediate; from this to my native country, my parents and friends, there was but a single and a sudden step. On returning to the hut, where we had lodged, I wrote the following lines in the book:

"From lands beyond the vast Atlantic tide,
Celestial freedom's most beloved abode,
Panting, I climb'd the mountain's craggy side,
And view'd the wondrous works of nature's God.

"Where yonder summit, peering to the skies,
Beholds the earth beneath it with disdain,
O'er all the regions round I cast my eyes,
And anxious sought my native home—in vain.

"As to that native home, which still infolds
Those youthful friendships to my soul so dear—
Still you, my parents, in its bosom holds—
My fancy flew, I felt the starting tear.

"Then, in the rustling of the morning wind,
Methought I heard a spirit whisper fair:
Pilgrim, forbear, still upward raise the mind,
'Look to the skies, thy native home is there.' "

PAYSON A MAN OF PRAYER.

As a preacher, Payson was eminently prayerful. It was manifest in private intercourse with his Divine Master. "Payson," said an elderly minister of Christ respecting him, "Payson does not need to go to the throne of grace, for he is always there." About the time I was licensed, and was leaving for the field where I labored sixteen years, he said to me—"Brother M., I would never leave my study without having first prayed." And he seemed to read the holy Word with much prayer. He studied, he planned, he wrote, he pronounced his sermons, in prayer. He seemed to be habitually sensible that God only could give his words success; and such was his faith in the efficacy of prayer, that he once said to the writer, "If I really knew I needed two such worlds as this for my own private accommodation, I should no more hesitate to ask for them, than I should hesitate to ask for my daily bread." And exercising this faith in the efficacy of prayer, it is not strange that he should be much in prayer for the Holy Spirit to accompany his efforts in the ministry. Here was his chief dependence for success. For though his powers of oratory were far above most in the holy office—though his imagination was most inventive and brilliant—seldom surpassed—his memory remarkably tenacious, and his reading extensive, yet his dependence for success, I repeat it, was on the promised assistance of the Holy Spirit. This was seen in his sermons. It was especially seen in his addresses at the throne of grace. The assembly to whom he ministered were, by his manner in prayer, made to feel that their minister leaned upon an Almighty arm, in his great work. They heard him address the Saviour in such humble confidence, as to convince them that there was his only hope. [Christian Mirror.

NEGLECT OF FAMILY PRAYER.

Prof. Ten Brook, of Michigan University, writing in the Christian Herald, from Central New York, thus describes a home scene. Let the sketch be read and pondered by all heads of families to whom it applies.

My father was one of those still men who, much as he thought of company, carried on his part of conversation in brief questions and monosyllabic answers. He had deceived himself into the belief that his talents were not such as to make it his duty to conduct family worship. With this view, he had lived for more than forty years, in every other respect, a consistent Christian. A son, who, at the time referred to, was preparing for the ministry, and already licensed to preach, was spending a vacation at home—the last evening of his stay had arrived—the family Bible, as usual, is placed before him on the stand, with a request to lead in prayer. The thought occurred, that now for a year or more, whatever devotion might be felt, no voice of prayer could be heard in the family, except from the lips of strangers who should turn in for the night. The thought affected him, and endeavoring to use such a manner as would become him in addressing a father almost threescore years and ten, he said—"Father, I delight to lead in this exercise when at home, but I am affected with the thought that there is to be no more prayer here until I shall return. How is it that you have never established family prayer? I know the diffidence of your nature—I know that it would be hard to overcome it—but would it not have been attended with satisfaction to yourself, and a blessing to the family, worth a far greater sacrifice. You can ask a favor of a neighbor—to do the same thing with God, is prayer; and he greatly mistakes, who thinks that the best prayer is that clothed in the most fluent language." The old man was affected—said he knew that it was so—and then gave an account of his feelings and practice in this respect since the commencement of his Christian course. Tears glistened in the eyes of some unaccustomed to weep for sin, and the father's expressions gave encouragement to hope that the suggestion would not be in vain, and that an altar would still be erected, whence incense and a pure offering should daily rise to heaven. On the following day, before leaving, the son mentioned the scene of the previous evening to the minister of the place, who took an opportunity to add his influence to what had been said, and it proved effectual. The man whose voice, though for forty years a professed Christian and a father, had never been heard in prayer by his children, at the age of threescore years and ten, commences the discharge of that duty in his family, and so far as I know, never ceases until the infirmities of age render it impossible. His children, ten in number, who had not before, have since professed the religion of Christ, though I cannot say how much the father's prayers had to do with this result.

I have digressed to mention this scene, thinking that it might perhaps meet the eye of some father in the same situation, and encourage him to adopt the same course.

VISITING THE POOR.

I cannot imagine hardly any thing more useful to a young man of an active and powerful mind, advancing rapidly in knowledge, and with high distinction either actually obtained or close in prospect, than to take him—or, much better, that he should go of himself—to the abodes of poverty, and sickness, and old age. Every thing there is a lesson; in every thing Christ speaks, and the Spirit of Christ is ready to convey to his heart all that he witnesses. Accustomed to the comforts of life, and hardly ever thinking what it would be to want them, he sees poverty, and all its evils; scanty room, and, too often, scanty fuel, scanty clothing, and scanty food. Instead of the quiet and neatness of his own chamber, he finds, very often, a noise and a confusion which would render deep thought impossible; instead of the stores of knowledge with which his own study is filled, he finds, perhaps, only a prayer-book and a Bible. Then let him see—and it is no fancied picture, for he will see it often if he looks for it—how Christ is to them who serve him, wisdom at once, and sanctification and blessing. He will find, amidst all this poverty, in those narrow, close, and crowded rooms—amidst noise and disorder, and sometimes want of cleanliness also—he will see old age, and sickness, and labor, borne not only with patience, but with thankfulness through the aid of that Bible, and the grace of that Holy Spirit who is its author. He will find that while his language and studies would be utterly unintelligible to the ears of those whom he is visiting, yet that they, in their turn, have a language and feelings to which he is no less a stranger. And he may think, too—and, if he does, he may forever bless the hour that took him there—that in fifty years or less, his studies and all concerned with them will have perished for ever, whilst their language and their feelings, only perfected in the putting off their mortal bodies, will be those of all-glorified and all-wise spirits in the presence of God and of Christ. [Arnold.

A TOUCHING SCENE.

A French paper says, Lucilla Romee, a pretty little girl, with blue eyes and fair hair, poorly, but neatly clothed, was brought before the Sixth Court of Correction, under a charge of vagrancy. 'Does any one claim you?' said the magistrate. 'Ah! my good sir,' she replied, 'I have no longer any friends; my father and mother are dead. I have only my brother James, but he is as young as I am. Oh, dear! what could he do for me?' 'The court must send you to the house of correction.' 'Here I am, sister. Here I am; do not fear,' cried a childish voice from the other end of the court. And at the same instant, a little boy with a sparkling countenance started forth from amid the crowd, and stood before the magistrate. 'Who are you?' said he. 'James Romee, the brother of this poor little girl.' 'Your age?' 'Thirteen.' 'And what do you want?' 'I come to claim Lucilla.' 'But have you then the means of providing for her?' 'Yesterday I had not, but now I have. Don't be afraid, Lucilla.' Lucilla: 'Oh! how good you are, James!' Magistrate to James: 'But let us see, my boy, the court is disposed to do all it can for your sister. However, you must give us some explanation.' James: 'About a fortnight ago my poor mother died of a bad cough, for it was very cold at home. We were in great trouble. Then I said to myself, I will become an artizan, and when I know a good trade I will support my sister. I went an apprentice to a brush maker. Every day I used to carry her half my dinner, and at night I took her secretly to my room, and she slept in my bed while I slept on the floor wrapped up in my blouse. But it appeared the poor little thing had not enough to eat, for one day she unfortunately begged on the boulevard. When I heard she was taken up, I said to myself, come, my boy, things cannot last so; you must find something better. I very much wished to become an artizan, but at last I decided to look for a place; and I have found a very good one, where I am lodged, fed, and clothed, and have 20 francs a month. I have also found a good woman, who for these 20 francs will take care of Lucilla, and teach her needlework. I claim my sister.' Lucilla, clasping her hands, 'Oh, how good you are, James!' Magistrate to James: 'My boy, your conduct is very honorable. The court encourage you to persevere in this course, and you will prosper.' The court then decided to render up Lucilla to James, and she was going from the bar to join her brother, when the magistrate, smiling, said: 'You cannot be set at liberty till to-morrow.' James said to the magistrate: 'I may kiss her, may I not, sir?' He then threw himself into the arms of his sister, and both wept warm tears of affection.

PATIENCE.—One of the most important requisites of a holy life is patience. And by this we do not mean merely a meek and quiet temper when one is personally assulted and injured; but a like meekness and quietness of temper in relation to the moral and religious progress of the world. We may be deeply afflicted in view of the desolations of Zion; but let us ever remember and rejoice, that the cause of truth and holiness is lodged safely in the hands of God. With him, a thousand years are as one day; and in the darkest moments, when Satan seems to be let loose with tenfold fury, let us thank God and take courage, because the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. MARRIED LIFE.

The following beautiful and true sentiments are from the pen of that charming writer, Fredrika Bremer, whose observations might well become the rules of life, so appropriate are they to many of its phases:—'Deceive not one another in small things, nor in great. One little single lie has, before now, disturbed a whole married life. A small cause has often great consequences. Fold not the arms together and sit idle. 'Laziness is the devil's cushion.' Do not run much from home. One's health is of more worth than gold. Many a marriage, my friends, begins like the rosy morning, then falls away like a snow wreath. And why? Because the married pair neglect to be as well pleasing to each other after marriage as before. Endeavor always, my children, to please one another, but at the same time keep God in your thoughts. Lavish not all your love on to-day, for remember that marriage has its to-morrow likewise, and its day after to-morrow, too. 'Spare, as one may say, fuel for the winter.' Consider, my daughters, what the word, wife, expresses. The married woman is the husband's domestic faith; in her hand, he must be able to confide house and family; be able to entrust her with the key of his heart, as well as the key of his eating-room. His honor and his home are under her keeping; his well being is in her hand. Think of this! And you sons, be faithful husbands, and good fathers of your families. Act so that your wives shall esteem and love you.'

ONE DROP AT A TIME.

"Life," says the ~~late~~ John Foster, "is expenditure; we have it, but are continually losing it; we have the use of it, but are continually wasting it. Suppose a man confined in some fortress, under the doom to stay there till his death; and suppose there is there for his use a dark reservoir of water, to which it is certain none can ever be added. He knows, suppose, that the quantity is not very great; he cannot penetrate to ascertain how much, but it may be very little. He has drawn from it, by means of a fountain, a good while already, and draws from it every day. But how would he feel each time of drawing, and each time of thinking of it? Not as if he had a perennial spring to go to; not, 'I have a reservoir, I may be at ease.' No! but, 'I had water yesterday—I have water to-day; but my having had it, and my having it to-day, is the very cause that I shall not have it on some day that is approaching. And at the same time I am compelled to this fatal expenditure!' So of our mortal, transient life! And yet, men are very indisposed to admit the plain truth, that life is a thing which they are in no other way possessing than as necessarily consuming; and that even in this imperfect sense of possession, it becomes every day less a possession!"

GOOD INDESTRUCTIBLE.—The Rev. John Newton was one day called to visit a family that had suffered the loss of all they possessed by fire. He found the pious mistress, and saluted her with—

"I give you joy, madam!"

Surprised, and ready to be offended, she exclaimed—

"What! joy that all my property is consumed!"

"Oh, no!" he answered, "but joy that you have so much property that fire cannot touch."

This happy allusion checked her grief—and wiping her tears, she smiled like the sun shining after an April shower.

"For where the treasure is, there will the heart be also."

TOO LATE AT MEETING.—In Mr. Dean's History of Scituate, there is the life and character of the Rev. Mr. Witherell, who died there in 1684. The following anecdote is given to "illustrate the prevailing manners in those times:" Mr. Bryant entered the church after the services had commenced, and Mr. Witherell, at the close of his prayer, thus addressed him: "Neighhor Bryant, it is to your reproach that you have disturbed the worship by entering late, living as you do within a mile of this place; and especially so since here is Goody Barstow, who has milked seven cows, made a cheese, and walked to the house of God in good season."

WORSHIP OF THE VIRGIN.—Rev. Dr. Cheever, in his "Wanderings" in Switzerland, speaks of visiting Einsiedeln, "the very head quarters of the worship of the Virgin Mary." An average of more than 150,000 pilgrims annually visit this celebrated shrine of the Virgin. "It makes one's heart ache to see the mournful superstition of the people," says Dr. C. "Indeed the whole establishment of the Virgin in the Romish worship is one of the most prodigions transactions of spiritual fraud, one of the vastest pieces of forgery and speculation in the history of our race. By it thousands make a fortune in this world, but millions make shipwreck of their souls for ever."

DESCENDANTS OF LUTHER.—Amongst the delegates to the Evangelical Alliance was Dr. Von Reinthaler, a German nobleman, from Erfurth, the place where Luther first opened his eyes on the light of truth. And he is not only from the same town, but has charge of the very building where Luther experienced those severe trials and triumphs. He is a gentleman of fortune, who has expended his property in the establishment of an institution for the education of vagrant boys. And here the only five lineal descendants of Luther now living are to be found under his care and tuition.

LEGALIZED SABBATH-BREAKING.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

A great pressure of engagements has prevented me from adding a few remarks to your comments on the article from the Syracuse "Recorder" on "Sabbath-Breaking Canal Boats," and particularly on the assumed "legalized Sabbath-breaking" connected therewith.

It is somewhat amusing, although on a serious subject, to witness the turns and shifts of men, who have a zeal, not according to knowledge, when thrown on their backs and made to eat their own words, by their own forwardness and over-anxiety to become prominent in works of supererogation. It is not long since, as you have already intimated in your remarks, that public sympathy was invoked on behalf of the poor oppressed boatmen and forwarders on our canals; who, it was represented, were "robbed of their rights to the Sabbath," by being compelled to labor on first day "in opposition to their inclinations and the dictates of their consciences;" and vociferous appeals were made to our legislatures, to have the locks on the canals closed on that day, that these "oppressed" individuals might enjoy their Sabbath. Scarcely have their clamors for the sanctification of Sunday ceased to din our ears, than we have quite as dolorous accounts, from the same sources, complaining of these refractory reprobates, for existing this meddling sympathy on their behalf, and persisting in, voluntarily, following their calling, despite the privileges afforded them of resting on the first day of the week.

The article referred to above closes with the following remark: "As sure as the laws of cause and effect remain unchanged, the people of this State (N. Y.) will yet experience a terrible retribution, unless there is a speedy reformation and an entire putting away of this legalized Sabbath-breaking." Now, if I understand the purpose of the writer, his aim is to have the State authorities interpose and close the locks of the canals, absolutely, on Sunday, that the "worthy boatmen and forwarders" shall be compelled to rest on that day, nolens volens. Presuming that the writer is strictly conscientious in this matter, and entertains a holy horror against Sabbath-breaking, it becomes us to inquire: What is Sabbath-breaking, and wherein is Sabbath-breaking "legalized?" Presuming, also, that the writer is a Protestant, and recognizes the Holy Scriptures as the only rule of faith; that he is willing to go "to the law and the testimony," to establish all religious truth, I wish to reason with him a few moments on this subject; professing, myself, to have respect to the day of the Lord, that we may search out HIS will in the matter, to the end that we may honor his statutes and keep his covenant.

The Scriptures teach us, that "God rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." Gen. 2. This is the first notice of the Sabbath in the Bible. The rest are all like unto it. During the sojourn of the children of Israel in the wilderness, the Lord, to supply their necessities, sent manna daily, save on the seventh day; thus strictly recognizing his Holy Sabbath, by affording them a double portion on sixth day, and requiring them to secure it at that time for the seventh day. (Exod. 16: 21—30.) This was before the giving of the law, and is evidence of respect for the Sabbath before the law was declared. When the Decalogue, written on stone by the finger of God, was committed to the Israelites, the obligation to honor the Sabbath (the seventh day) was emphatically renewed, and most explicitly defined and enjoined. (Exod. 20: 8—11. Lev. 23: 3. Neh. 13: 16—22.) Our blessed Redeemer proclaimed himself Lord of the Sabbath, and declared that he did not come to destroy but fulfil the law; that not one jot or tittle should pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. (Matt. 5: 17, 18.) Luke distinctly affirms, that they "rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment." (Luke 23: 56.) This was after Christ, himself, declared that all his work was finished—the new covenant perfected, and he had been nailed to the tree. This doubtless refers to the command to observe the seventh day—no one disputes it, as no other command was given to observe any other day. And from the Acts of the apostles, we find that they made it the day of their special ministrations, as their Lord and Master had done before them. (Acts. 13: 14, 15, 42—44.) Paul reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks. (Id. 18: 4.) All the promises and all the penalties connected with the observance or the desecration of the Sabbath, refer to the seventh-day Sabbath, and to no other in future. (Isaiah 56: 2. Id. 58: 13. Jer. 17: 21—27.) No where in the Inspired Word have we any other weekly Sabbath appointed. No where has that Sabbath ever been abrogated. No where in the Scriptures is any other day called the Sabbath day—no where any other required to be observed as the Sabbath. The Lord is lawgiver in Zion. If, then, HE gave the seventh day, and sanctified it and hallowed it as his Sabbath, and has not abrogated it, has not absolved us from its duties, nor delegated authority to others to do so—it remains in full force as when given amid the thunders of mount Sinai, and will stand in the judgment against all the crafty and puny coercions of man.

Finding, then, in the Bible, no other Holy Sabbath, to be honored throughout the ages of time, there can, legitimately, be no restrictions put on man to prevent him from laboring on the other six days of the week. And if the seventh day is the true and the only weekly Sabbath, there is no offence against the Most High for laboring on the first and the other five succeeding days. Where, then, is Sabbath-breaking for laboring on first day? Where is "legalized Sabbath-breaking" in keeping open the locks of the canals on that day? If then the first day of the week is not the truth Sabbath—"the Sabbath of the Lord thy God"—if it is not any Sabbath at all, and, being no where in the Scriptures so called, there is no infringement on holy time in employing its hours in the pursuits of life. But there is certainly a Sabbath, and "legalized Sabbath-breaking" to a fearful extent throughout the land. That legalized Sabbath-breaking is confined to the statutes of the several States recognizing the Sabbath of the Lord—the seventh day—as a working day—as a legal day for the transaction of secular business—a judicial day for the execution of worldly affairs; in defiance of the imperative law of our Maker. This is legalizing Sabbath-breaking with a vengeance; and I repeat, that it is the only "legalized Sabbath-breaking" in the land. I challenge the writer to advance any statute enforcing labor to be performed on Sunday; and if performed, I challenge him, with the Bible as his rule of faith and practice, to prove that it is Sabbath-breaking at all.

If men would call things by their right names it would save a deal of error and confusion. Individuals may desecrate the Sabbath, but that does not make it "legalized Sabbath-breaking"—to make any thing "legalized" requires special legislation thereon. If then there is no law expressly permitting or compelling the "boatmen and forwarders" to pursue their business on Sunday, it is not "legalized." Many things are tolerated by common consent, but that does not legalize them. It requires the express authority of law to legalize an act; but if there are laws compelling men to attend to secular and judicial concerns on the seventh day, that is "legalized Sabbath-breaking"—God being the Lord of the Sabbath.

Believing the writer of the article on "Sabbath-breaking Canal Boats" to be sincere in his profession, yet mistaken in his position, I have made this effort to direct his attention to the fountain of truth. The fear of the Lord, says Solomon, is to hate evil. Through thy precepts, says David, I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way; and although he may have "become like a bottle in the smoke," I trust the Lord will incline his heart to his testimonies and to come at once to the law and the testimony to prove himself—not to man's standard, or to a church creed, but to the Word of God.

The Editor of the Religious Recorder, whose remarks I have been criticising, has made three very sad mistakes: 1st. That the State of New York, in not closing the locks of canals on Sunday, does "legalize" Sabbath-breaking. 2d. That Sunday is not the Sabbath of the Bible; therefore any law enforcing labor on that day is not "legalized Sabbath-breaking." 3d. That neither the Bible requires any coercion to enforce the first day of the week, nor is there any authority in the Constitution of any of the States or of the Federal Government, to make any distinction in days, or to interfere with the religious rights of any individual; that all human legislation, in the premises, is unconstitutional, and an unwarrantable usurpation of power.

So long as men think that they have the right to make or impose a Sabbath on man, by fines and penalties, men will disregard it and openly break the workmanship of their own hands. A religious institution, to have any sacredness, must have GOD, the mighty Jehovah, for its author—must have the clear, unequivocal, "thus saith the Lord" for its claims to credibility. It then behooves all the friends of the Sabbath, to cast the Sabbath of CONSTANTINE to the moles and the bats, and to return unto the Lord and receive the law at his mouth. A Sabbath from the Lord will not require human legislation and coercion laws to enforce it; but all human device and coercion laws, with fines and penalties, rack and stake, can never command the respect and observance of mankind. A divine institution must have a divine origin, and the Divine approbation will prove the greatest and the best incentive to its observance. Any system of religion requiring coercion to enforce it, must be defective. Force may make hypocrites, but never makes true, devout believers.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., Nov. 16th, 1846.

THE FETE OF THE NATIVITY.—Letters from Rome state that the fete of the Nativity was never celebrated with so much pomp as it has been this year. For three days all the roads leading to Rome were thronged with vehicles of every description, bringing visitors to witness the triumph of the new Pope. On one evening the city was illuminated, and a grand triumphal arch was erected, while at almost all the windows were seen transparencies and inscriptions in honor of the Holy Virgin and the Pope. When the carriage of the Pope appeared, a shower of flowers and garlands fell upon it, and he was saluted from all quarters with shouts of the warmest admiration. He passed under the triumphal arch, heard mass at the church of St. Mary, retired to his palace amidst the increased plaudits of the multitude, and closed the ceremony by thanking his children for he enthusiastic reception they had given him. Such is a passage in the history of a successor of St. Peter. Surely the day must be past for treating the servant as his master.

SUNDAY LAWS INHERENTLY WRONG, AND THEREFORE NULL AND VOID.

The right to worship God according to the dictates of our own consciences, is an inherent and consequently an inalienable right, growing out of our relation to God, entirely above and beyond all human interference. Between our conscience and our God, the puny arm of the highest constituted power on earth may not interfere but with insult to Heaven. When individuals or governments assume to take in charge men's consciences in matters of religion, they aspire to the throne of God. The legitimate result of all such action, is nothing less than the dethronement of the Almighty. If legislatures may prescribe the time, they may the manner of worship. If then they may define the manner of worship, by virtue of the same authority they may prohibit it, thus countermanding that great universal, self-existing law, which demands adoration from all intelligent beings. I look upon the attempts of legislators in some of our States to abridge the rights of certain citizens, as no less heaven-daring than those of former times which have called forth such tremendous displays of God's displeasure. Place civil enactments beside the immutable decrees of Heaven, stamped on all nature in living characters, and written out amid the thunders of omnipotence, and choose ye this day whom ye will serve. If to serve God in his own appointed way be a duty as well as right, then all attempts to circumscribe, abridge or destroy such service, must be wrong.

To prove that all laws opposed to the universal law of right are null and void, a definition of the term law may be necessary. What then is the origin, nature, and end of law—such, I mean, as judicial tribunals are morally bound to establish and maintain? Law, in general terms, is an intelligible principle of right, originating in the nature of man. Any rule not originating in the nature of man, is no law. Law, then, or that natural, universal, impartial, inflexible principle, which necessarily fixes and defines the civil rights of men, is simply "the rule, principle, obligation or requirement of natural justice"—not the arbitrary will of numbers or power, but the necessary result of natural relationship; and natural right keeps pace with them, secures their enjoyment, and forbids their violation. No standard can be reared by which to measure civil law, except that of natural right. This standard is politically and judicially recognized in the administration of law, and necessarily so, for special laws could not be passed to meet the hundredth part of the cases that arise; hence the application of that natural law resulting from the nature of man, and as unchangable and inflexible as that nature. This principle, then, must be of higher and more universal obligation than any arbitrary rule which man or any body of men may attempt to establish and enforce. Natural law being the paramount law, and applicable to all possible cases involving the rights of men, is necessarily the only law; for any other rule arbitrarily applied to those rights, must of necessity conflict with it. When then an arbitrary, partial, and temporary rule, conflicts with a natural, permanent, equal, and universal one, the arbitrary one becomes in reality of no obligation—null and void. Natural rights being inalienable, and attributes of man's nature, can no more be surrendered to governments than man's nature can. Governments then can no more lawfully destroy men's rights, than they can destroy men's natures. They can enact no standing rule conflicting with men's rights, for the reason that they have no power to do so; the legitimate end of government being the protection of rights existing in nature. Whenever it steps out of this sphere, it ceases to be a government, and becomes an organized piracy. Its acts are no more binding than would be the acts of an individual, who should arrogate the throne of God, and bid all creation worship him. Our government is an association of individuals, by contract, for certain specified objects. When so administered as to secure those objects, it is binding on all who are parties to that contract. But when, through mal-administration, those specified objects are perverted, and others foreign to the contract instituted, then it is no longer a government, for the contract which made it a government is broken. All its acts then are piratical and deserving only of contempt. And all judicial tribunals sitting as umpires for that government, are morally and legally bound to declare all acts passed by it null and void. But suppose that the contract which makes us a government (viz. our Constitution) was entered into for the express purpose of destroying rights; all acts passed in accordance with it are as void as in the first case, for contracts by a majority to do wrong are no more binding than between two persons to murder, rob, and steal. The only duty any one can owe to such authority, is disobedience and speedy destruction. Citizens of New Jersey and Pennsylvania have an inherent right to labor on Sunday. All acts to abridge that right are wrong, and therefore null and void. They are mere vapory shadows, blotted effusions of lying sycophants and aspiring demagogues, to crush the struggling energies of down-trodden truth and as such deserves only contempt and annihilation.

MYSTIC BRIDGE, CONN.

THE JEWS IN BAVARIA.—We have had occasion in months past to speak of the disabilities of the Jews in Bavaria, which were rapidly driving them to this country. There is but little prospect that their condition will be much improved at present. It seems that there are 95,000 Jews in the kingdom of Bavaria, who are in many respects much oppressed. They are prohibited from residing in several parts of the kingdom; for instance, no Jew can reside in Protostant Nuremburg. In 1813, a law was passed which fixed the number of families, and no Jew can now marry until the head of a Jewish family dies at the place where he is residing. Thus, for example, if in a certain city sixty Jewish families are permitted to reside, and a Jew wishes to marry, he must wait until the head of one of those families dies. It is on this account that so many Jews have emigrated to America. Not far from my brother's parish there is a place called Tigersfeld, and a great number of Jews formerly resided there, but they have now all left for America, except those who were too old and feeble to undertake the journey. But on the 7th of May last Baron Gumpenberg brought the condition of the Jews before the Chambers then assembled at Munich, and expressed a desire for their emancipation. Many spoke in favor of the relief of some of the restrictions under which the Jews labored, but few advocated their entire emancipation.

A SLAVE-HUNT AND ESCAPE.—On the 28th of October, there arrived at the city of Chicago, Ill., in an open wagon, four colored men. They were left on one of the principal corners of the main street, from which they strolled about to view the town. It was not long, however, before an officer arrested them as runaway slaves from Missouri, and brought them before a Justice of the Peace. After their arrival at the office, a warrant was issued for their apprehension as runaways. But this was quashed, on motion of their counsel, for want of authority in the magistrate to issue it. Hereupon the Justice decided that the claimants might proceed to prove the colored men slaves, and to establish their authority to demand them. In order to do this, it was necessary to look up the laws of Missouri on the subject. But while the counsel for the slave-hunters were busily engaged in searching the statute-books, a great crowd collected around the office, and the door being accidentally thrown open, the colored men walked into the street, where they were received and spirited away amid the acclamations of thousands of congregated citizens, of all parties, sects, and conditions.

EXTENT OF ROMANISM IN EUROPE.—An impression prevails somewhat extensively, that Romanism has a very strong hold upon the minds of the people of Europe generally. But facts show that this impression is altogether erroneous. The Rev. Dr. Baird, who has given much attention to this subject, in a recent letter from St. Petersburgh, Russia, says that in Denmark, with a population of 2,250,000, there are 1,800 Protestant ministers, and but four Catholic priests. In Norway, among a population of 1,250,000, there are between 350 and 400 Protestant ministers, and not one Roman Catholic Church. In Sweden, whose population is 3,250,000, there are 2,500 Protestant ministers, one Roman Catholic Church, and two priests. So that in these Scandinavian countries, whose united population surpasses eight millions, there are about 5,775 ministers, and only six Roman Catholic Churches, and seven priests.

POWER OF THE PRESS.—Somebody, in speaking of the power of the press, says he has often thought of a sentiment uttered by Napoleon when he found his schemes of ambition and conquest baffled by the indignant rebukes of those who aimed to protect the interests of the people by exposing the arts and duplicity of the ruthless invader. The press was then less fearless and independent than it is at the present time. It rebuked vice in softer tones, and cowered before the edicts of tyrants in their gigantic strides of oppression. But even then the mighty conqueror felt its power. Conversing with a friend on the obstacles that hedged up his way, he said, 'a journalist is a grumbler, a censurer, a giver of advice, a regent of sovereigns, a tutor of nations. Four hostile newspapers are more to be feared than a hundred thousand bayonets!'

DECLINE OF UNITARIANISM.—The evidences of decline among the Unitarians can scarcely be mistaken. Even their own papers are beginning to acknowledge and lament it. One of them complains that the number of their theological students is diminishing; another, that it is not with them as it was twenty years ago, "when the literature, intelligence, public spirit, wealth, and social influence, were entirely on their side"—that now "the tendency is elsewhere, and the fashion, at least, if not the intelligence of the community, is setting decidedly in another direction."

MISSIONARY MARRIED.—We learn from the New York Recorder, that J. Lewis Shuck, Pastor of the First Baptist Church, Canton, China, and Miss Eliza G. Sexton, teacher of drawing and painting in Judson Female Institute, and daughter of S. M. Sexton, Esq., late of Philadelphia, were married on the 14th of October, at Marion, Ala., by the Rev. M. P. Jewett.

HINTS ABOUT OUR OWN AFFAIRS.

Within a few months past, we have received many letters from our friends in different sections expressing their entire satisfaction with the general character of the Recorder, and their growing interest in its welfare. These assurances of confidence, it is scarcely necessary to say, have greatly cheered us amid the exhausting toils and cares incident to publishing a denominational paper. When we engaged in the enterprise, it was from a sense of duty, and with no other aim than to advance the cause of God and truth among the people with whom our labors are identified. Any evidence that this object is being attained, from whatever quarter derived, cannot fail to be a source of high gratification and a rich reward. But there are two or three things which yet trouble us, and with which we beg leave to trouble our friends. The publication of the Recorder was commenced with a list of subscribers altogether too small to defray its expenses. Our list has gradually increased, however, until we have now subscribers enough to support the paper, provided that they are all prompt in making their payments—not otherwise. Yet we are not satisfied with simply a support for the paper; we want to be able to circulate hundreds of copies gratuitously in places where there is reason to hope that they will do good. This we are not only desirous of doing, but are determined to do, just as soon as our income will warrant it. As a means of enabling us to do it, we have two requests to make, which we trust will not be forgotten. In the first place, we request every subscriber who is in arrears for the present or past volumes of the paper to foward us immediately the amount due, that we may be saved the embarrassment of having to do without means. In the second place, we request every friend of the paper to look about him for one or more new subscribers, that our list may be so increased as to furnish us with the means of circulating many more gratuitous papers throughout the country. The present seems to us a favorable season for giving attention to both of these requests; and we hope, before the opening of the new year, to have substantial proof that it is so. Shall we be disappointed?

LIBERALITY OF THE JEWS.—An agent of one of the Jewish Missionary Societies, writing from Gibralter, in illustration of the charitable feeling of the Jewish inhabitants, mentions the fact that the amount collected on Purim day in the synagogues, and by the collection from private houses, was no less than 4,000 dollars, for distribution among poor families, resident in the garrison; and this is besides gifts to 104 poor persons from various parts of Barbary! These last had a free passage to their homes at the expense of the congregation. This charity is indeed munificent, even for a Jewish community.

MORE MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.—We learn from the Alabama Baptist, that Rev. J. L. Shuck, and the Chinese convert Yong Seen Sang, who have been visiting the Baptists in the Southern States for several months past, are now on their way to the North. They are expected to embark from New York for Canton, about the 25th of December, with a large reinforcement of missionaries.

A TIME OF COMMOTION AT HAND.—The Rev. Dr. Baird, in one of his letters from Europe, says that "the times are ominous of great evil in Germany. A storm is gathering which will sweep over that country. There is need, therefore, that all that can be done should be, to scatter the seeds of truth, for it alone can save the horrors of a bloody revolution. Indeed, I think all continental Europe is going to be shaken to its very centre before many years pass away."

BAPTISTS IN SCOTLAND.—The Baptist Union of Scotland held an annual meeting in August last, at which rather an encouraging report of the state of things was given. Three new churches were added to the Union. It was resolved to engage more evangelists as soon as suitable persons could be found. A plan was devised for aiding young men preparing for the ministry. A magazine has recently been commenced for circulation among the Scotch Baptists, which has thus far been quite successful.

THE ELECTIONS.—An account of the recent elections, prepared for our last, was omitted by oversight. It was there stated, that the election in New York had resulted in the choice of John Young, the Whig candidate for Governor, by some 10,000 majority. The Democratic candidate for Lieut. Governor was elected. The New Constitution was adopted by a majority of probably 100,000. The popular vote was against Free Suffrage.——In New Jersey, 3 Whigs and 1 Democrat were elected to Congress; the State Senate stands 12 Whigs to 7 Democrats, and the Assembly 46 Whigs to 12 Democrats.——In Massachusetts, the Whig Governor, Briggs, was elected, by about 12,000 majority, and the same party secured a majority in the State Legislature.

THE YOUTH'S CABINET for December is not inferior to the previous numbers. The second volume commences with January, when a good opportunity offers to subscribe. D. A. Woodworth, 135 Nassau-st.

RENOVATION.—The Olive Branch, printed at Boston, comes to us this week in an entire new dress, and otherwise greatly improved.

General Intelligence.

TWELVE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Great Western reached New York on Monday evening last, bringing English papers to Oct. 30.

The price of American Cotton had advanced 1-8d.

There is also a farther rise in the price of provisions.

Social Life in Matamoros.—The American Flag, printed at Matamoros, has the following domestic picture:—

"When we first entered Matamoros, and the services of a Mexican were needed, application had to be made to their masters, who hired them out from ten, fifteen, to twenty dollars. The sums which they owed their masters were various, but whatever they might be under their own government and laws, it would have been sufficient to have held them in bondage through life, and entailed like bondage upon their children—the offspring being always held for the debts of the parents. A debt once contracted it was impossible ever to repay. No means were afforded them to cancel it. Two or three dollars per month was the extent at which their services were valued. Every thing they received from their masters was charged to their account. If sick, the loss of service and medical attendance was added on. If plate, cup, spoon, chair, table, or any other article belonging to the master's house was broken or lost, no matter if the master or his wife or children broke or lost it, to the servant's indebtedness it was placed. When he or she died, the funeral expenses were likewise added to the indebtedness and carried forward to the account of their children. Thus were they held in endless slavery, unless by theft or murder they could possess themselves of sufficient money to purchase their freedom. The opportunities afforded them to acquire money since the occupation of this city by the Americans have enabled slaves to cancel all their obligations to their masters, and with few exceptions, all are now free. Much of the ill-feeling that exists against us on the part of the wealtheir portion of the inhabitants, has been engendered by the loss of their slaves. Their former servants will no longer work for them. They will not or cannot come up to the rate of wages offered by the Americans, and even if they did, their former slaves would prefer working for their new employers."

The Magnetic Telegraph.—The Union publishes a letter from Amos Kendall in regard to the telegraphic lines already built and in progress, in which he urges the propriety and necessity of the General Government's building a line between Washington and New Orleans, for the purpose of communicating with the army. The letter adds:—

A line is in progress from Boston to Portland. Preliminary steps have been taken for the construction of a line from Buffalo to Detroit, and thence through Chicago to Milwaukie, a distance of about 800 miles, to be finished in fifteen months. The New York and Washington company, having obtained the right of way along the railroads through New Jersey, are re-building their line on the route, and expect in two months to have up two good iron wires from New York to Baltimore.

A line will be immediately put up from Washington to Petersburg, Va., if there be no difficulty about the right of way; and none is apprehended. An effort will be made immediately to raise the necessary funds to carry the Southern line through to New Orleans next season.

The people of the West are becoming zealous in favor of the Telegraph, and another season will not pass before it will reach Cincinnati, and be on its way to St. Louis. A line from New Orleans to connect with this at Louisville, and a line to connect both with the Lake Telegraph, will be very valuable, and will complete the main sinews of the system of Telegraph for these United States.

SUMMARY.

At Cincinnati, on Saturday last, the immense fly wheel of a rolling mill flew to pieces, scattering the fragments in all directions, for the space of one hundred feet; one piece went over the canal a much greater distance; another piece high in the air, and came down through the roof of a house, striking the stove, at which a woman was standing, demolishing it, and knocking a bucket out of her hand. The fly wheel was very large, and in rapid motion when the accident occurred, and although the fragments of iron and wood flew in every direction, to the great danger of numerous persons, not one was injured.

A soldier at Monterey writes to the Baltimore Sun:—"You may, probably, wish to know how a young soldier feels when he smells powder for the first time—I will tell you. At first I felt as though I should like to have been out of the party—I felt decidedly 'mean,' and looked from one end of the line to the other, to see if I could see any one run. Yes, I felt like running, I must acknowledge, but all stood like men, and I could not bear the idea to be the first to run, and, therefore, kept on with the rest."

A home has recently been provided for the indigent colored population in the city of New York. It consists of three buildings. The principal one is occupied by the women, the second by the men, the third by little children and their unhappy mothers. The present number of occupants is 193, exclusive of children, of whom there are nine. It was founded by a number of benevolent ladies, of whom the most conspicuous was Mary Shortwell, of the Society of Friends.

In Madison County, Illinois, there is considerable excitement growing out of the indictment of a large number of persons for the murder of James Duncan. More than thirty persons have already been indicted. There were nearly a hundred persons in the mob when he was killed, and, so far as known, about equally guilty. It is reported that the Judge of the Circuit Court has decided that the cases are not bailable, and has accordingly refused to admit them to bail; and the consequence of the decision will probably be that a large number of persons will be compelled to remain in custody till next Spring.

Intelligence has been received that General Kearney left Santa Fe for California on the 25th of September, with 400 mounted mules in his train. PROCLAMATION,

By Silas Wright, Governor of the State of New York.

The year eighteen hundred and forty-six draws to a close. Its seasons have been uncommonly propitious, and its harvests are realized. Unusual health has blessed our State and the teeming earth has yielded its abundance to supply our necessities and minister to our comforts.

The wave of passion, which, during the past year, rolled over some of our Counties, has subsided, and internal peace is restored to our citizens, and tranquility to our firesides.

The most sublime spectacle connected with Civil Government is now exhibiting before us. The Representatives of the Sovereignty of our People, assembled to take in pieces and re-construct the frame-work of the State Government. have discharged the high trust and returned to their constituents, and to their private duties, without having excited passions, alarm or apprehension in the community; and our Freeman are examining their labors, and preparing to pass a verdict of approbation or rejection upon their work, with a vigilance inspired by a pervading patriotism, and with a calmness and confidence which Free Institutions can alone impart. Not an individual in the State apprehends an encroachment upon his just rights, or an abridgment of his civil and religious privileges, from this peaceful and voluntary revolution of his Government. Stronger evidence of high intelligence and sound morality in a People cannot be afforded.

These, and innumerable other temporal blessings of a kindred character, constantly flowing upon our State and its citizens, call for continued thankfulness to the bountiful Giver of every blessing.

The gift of a Saviour, and the full light of Divine Revelation, are spiritual blessings which should awaken to expressions of devout thankfulness the hearts and the voices of a Christian People.

I respectfully recommend Thursday, the twenty-sixth day of November next, to be observed as a Day of Public Thanksgiving; that the People of the State, abstaining from their ordinary business avocations, may assemble at their usual places of Religious Worship, and, uniting with each other, and with their fellow citizens of many of the other States, may pay their tribute of thanks to the Author of these and all temporal and spiritual good gifts; and may pour out their hearts in prayer to Him, that His rich smiles may be continued to our Country, and that the signal blessings of this year may be crowned by the termination of our existing Wars in an honorable and just Peace.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the privy seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Witness my hand, at the City of Albany, the nineteenth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-six.

[L. S.] SILAS WRIGHT.

By order. Horace Moody, Private Secretary.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

THE WEEKLY CHRONOTYPE,

IS published weekly by White, Potter & Wright, at No. 2 Devonshire Street, near State Street, Boston. Terms—$2 a year, in advance. For $5 three copies will be sent to one address. A liberal discount will be made to Agents who pay for a larger number of copies. Edited by

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

This paper is not bound to the creed or cause of any clique, association, party, sect or set of men, but expresses freely the opinions of its editor at the time, and of such contributors as may honor it with their thoughts, or be supposed by the editor to do so. It will be his endeavor to give such a variety and quantity of matter as to meet the wants of every enlightened family, and especially of those which seek more light. He will not only give the daguerreotype likeness of Time as he passes, but will examine every new thing that he meets, and some things that are old, without fear or favor. Where he cannot convince, he will try to be good-natured. Where he cannot satisfy himself of the truth, he will be contented to confess his ignorance. In short, he will endeavor to help forward, in a neighborly way, every thing but Humbug. That he will endeavor to knock down and drag out, even if it should cling to the throne of political power or the horns of the sacred altar.

He will not take an oath never to be wiser. He will not scorn truth, though it may come from an enemy. He will not flatter the poor because he is one of them. He will not hate and abuse the rich because he is not one of them. But he will endeavor to establish a better understanding between the extremes of society—showing both ends that happiness is most likely to be found between them—consisting in a great measure in a mutual endeavor to abolish idleness, disease, poverty and roguery.

With these general purposes, it is the prime object of the editor of this paper to get an honest living.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

Elihu Burritt, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in Advance.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER.

This paper, being made up of such portions of the contents of the National Intelligencer proper as can be compressed within the compass of a single newspaper, continues to be issued and mailed to subscribers on Saturday, at two dollars a year, payable in advance in all cases—no account being opened with subscribers to the weekly paper.

To bring this paper yet more nearly within the reach of such as desire to take by the year a cheap paper from the seat of General Government, a reduction will be made in the price of it where a number of copies are ordered and paid for by any person or association at the following rates:

For Ten Dollars six copies will be sent.
For Twenty Dollars thirteen copies: and
For each sum of Ten Dollars, above twenty-eight copies will be forwarded; so that a remittance of Fifty Dollars will command thirty-seven copies.

Miscellaneous.

THE ANGEL'S VISIT.

The earth was at rest, and the evening air
  Seemed like the breath of an infant sleeping,
And the stars stole forth, like fancies fair,
That come in the light of the mother's prayer,
  When love is her vigils keeping.

But the mother felt in her trembling breast,
  That the angel's presence was o'er her;
And she shook with a nameless fear distressed,
As she bowed like a reed by the dews oppressed,
  To guard the dear babe before her.

The clouds gathered as dark as the funeral pall,
  The midnight winds were sighing,
And the mother's tears like rain-drops fell,
She hath heard the soft notes of the angel's call,
  And she knows that her babe is dying.

The sun was bright as the morning sky,
  As when the first smile was given,
And the angel soars to his home on high,
While faith reveals to the mother's eye,
  That he bears her sweet child to Heaven.

EXPLOSIVE COTTON.

Among the wonderful discoveries of this inventive age, there is no one that surpasses in character that which has been lately made of the combustibility of prepared cotton. A correspondent of the Washington Union, writing from Frankfort-on-the-Maine, gives a detailed account of the invention, from which we extract the following items:

The discovery that cotton could be prepared to act as a substitute for gunpowder, was simultaneously made by two German chemists, Prof. Baltger of Frankfort, and Prof. Schonbein of Basle. At a dinner party at Frankfort, Prof. B., says the correspondent of the Union, "took from each of his waistcoat pockets a paper containing some raw cotton; a small portion of that which was in one he placed upon a sheet of white paper, and near it some gunpowder upon another sheet. He touched them at the same moment with the burning end of a cigar, and with the quickness of the lightning's blast, the cotton was consumed without smoke, or odor, or ashes, or even the slightest stain upon the snow-white sheet of foolscap; while the ignition of the gunpowder seemed to be slow, although of the best quality, by which the paper was burnt and colored, and the room filled with smoke. He then took a small quantity of gunpowder, and placing it upon paper, entirely covered it with prepared cotton from the other paper. Touching the cotton with the blaze of a match, it exploded without burning the gunpowder! Subsequently, at my apartments, he exploded cotton upon the palm of my hand, without my feeling the sensation of heat, such was the remarkable rapidity of its igniting."

Some of the qualities of cotton prepared in this manner, which is superior as a detonant to gunpowder, are that it requires but a short time for its preparation; it can be manufactured by common laborers, and without any danger of combustion. It can be fitted for use in a few hours after the cotton is taken from the bale, and without the aid of machinery; and it may be thoroughly saturated with water without affecting its properties permanently, as when dried it becomes as explosive as ever. No danger is to be apprehended from its spontaneous combustion, nor will it become ignited by friction in the process of transportation, or otherwise. It will catch fire from either a blaze or a spark.

In strength it is far superior to the best gunpowder, as the experiment above related sufficiently proves. It has, however, been also ascertained, by actual experiment, that "the forty-eighth part of an ounce of the prepared cotton will propel a bullet from an American rifle as far and as fast as the twelfth part of an ounce of gunpowder. The sixteenth part of an ounce will drive a three-quarter of an ounce ball a distance of sixteen hundred paces."

In blasting rocks the experiments have been eminently successful. A large block of granite at Basle, measuring 240 cubic feet, was blown up by four ounces of cotton, a process which could not have been effected by less than two pounds of the best gunpowder.

Another advantage possessed by the cotton is, that fire arms in which it is used, never require cleaning. Forty shots have been made without intermission, without any accumulation of filth; nor is it liable to the objection which exists against gunpowder, that repeated explosions heat the barrel of the gun, so as to require a suspension of firing, the barrel remaining, after the forty explosions, entirely free from heat.

It is also much cheaper than gunpowder, nearly one-third less. It is said that 125 lbs., cotton, when prepared, will weigh 165 lbs., which, according to the opinion of Mr. Grove, an able chemist of England, will be equivalent to 330 lbs. of superior gunpowder.

At a meeting of the British Association in September, where the article was tested under the direction of Professor Schonbein, Sir John Herschel remarked, that "the discovery, in the next generation, might arm mankind with the wildest powers. The inventor was a Titan who could tear up rocks, and almost call down lightnings."

What the materials are, with which the cotton is prepared, are of course unknown to any but the inventors, who are about to secure patents among the various nations of Europe. The first step has already been taken to obtain a patent-right in the United States. One has been taken out for Great Britain, and the States of the Germanic Confederation have consented to give 100,000 florins, merely for the right of preparing it for the army, provided a commission that has been appointed to test its qualities, shall make a favorable report.

Buckwheat.—The English people know nothing of "Buckwheat Cakes," that favorite delicacy of American winter breakfast tables. Nor is it used there in any form as food for man. A recent letter from England to the Courier and Enquirer, states that it is consumed in England as food for animals alone. The writer had heard it mentioned but once; and then by a sporting man, who stated, that many land owners sow an occasional acre of it, to keep their pheasants from more valuable crops and to induce their neighbor's pheasants to come to their preserves! It is recommended to be sown in gardens around bee hives, for the sake of the honey which the bees extract from its flowers; and the people of the county of Norfolk are, to some degree, growers of it.

The Blowing Spring.—A few days ago we attended the "Blowing Spring" Camp meeting in Anderson county, some twenty-one miles Northwest of Knoxville, and while there, curiosity prompted us to visit the Spring after which the Camp Ground takes its name. The Spring is a fine and bold current of pure lime-stone water, coming out of the earth at the foot of a small mountain. At the head of the spring is the mouth of a small cave, the entrance of which is low, and the passage narrow. The only thing remarkable about the place is, a strong current of air is constantly pouring out, sufficient to shake the weeds and grass around, and to chill a man completely, in the shortest imaginable time, in the heat of summer.

These holes and fissures of the earth, abounding more or less in every section of the country, we know have been occasioned by different causes: confined air, water, vapors, gases, volcanoes, and earthquakes, have all contributed to produce them. The earth is known to be composed of substances, which, when mingled with water, are calculated, to produce vapors, gases, and explosions, so it must, of necessity, be rent, from time to time into chasms and fissures of different depths. But this blowing, we do not so well understand. The presumption, however, with us, is that it is caused by a water-fall, upon the principle of the water blast, at our furnaces and forges. This opinion is strengthened, moreover, from the fact, that as the stream is increased or diminished by wet or dry weather, the blast from the mouth of the cave is increased or diminished. However, this natural curiosity, like many others, may have been formed, when, at the command of God, "the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the windows of Heaven opened." The Coolies in Trinidad.—In the last number of the Anti-Slavery Reporter, we find a number of regulations prescribed by the Governor of the Island, concerning these unfortunate and involuntary immigrants from India, which the English government, to gratify the cupidity of the planters, has been transporting into the West Indies. These regulations, descending to the most minute affairs, of employment and wages, establish a system of subjection of laborers to capitalists, scarcely less despotic or cruel, than that which exists between the relation of absolute property. They are to be divided into gangs of 25 or 50; wages partly in money, and partly in food, are to be given according to specifications; the kinds and quantities of clothing and the hours of labor are fixed; none are to be employed, except such as have a prescribed certificate from a former employer, and none are allowed the right of locomotion, except under the protection of a pass, specifying the name, the period of leave, and the locality to be visited. Whatever may have been the ostensible reason for the project, its direct and palpable effect is the protection of the rich planter and capitalist, and the oppression of the poor and ignorant laborer. The true results of emancipation cannot be understood and will not be developed unless it is left to itself. Such unnatural and hostile interference by legislation cannot fail to be productive of the worst consequences.

Keep Moving.—Don't stand there, young man, with your fingers in your mouth, moping over your bad luck, but hold up your head like a man, kick dull care to the winds, and show that you are not made for a prop to hold up the buildings. What if your last copper has burnt a hole through your pocket, and you know not where your next meal is coming from, remember you cannot recommend yourself to the notice of those who need your labor by wearing a downcast look and biting your finger nails. Kick up a dust and you may be something yet. If you are disposed to work you cannot long remain idle. Be not too particular. If you can't get high wages take the best offer you can get, and don't stand around the street like a very loafer, a single moment longer. If nobody will hire you, shove off into the country, work for your board and go to school through the fall and winter, and when spring comes, may be you will be prepared to cut a figure in the world. By all means keep moving. [Me. Inquirer.

Anecdote of the Twin Sisters.—We know of a farmer in Connecticut who has a pair of twin daughters, of whom a capital anecdote is told. They both attended the same school, and not long since one of them was called up by the master to recite a lesson in geography, which she had learned very imperfectly, and in fact could not go on at all. The teacher, who was getting quite out of patience, was called to another part of the room, and just at that moment the twin sister sprang on the floor unobserved, and pushing the delinquent scholar to her seat took her place. The master proceeded with the questions, which were answered with a degree of promptness and accuracy which, at the close, drew forth from him a few words of commendation. The joke was not discovered by the teacher until some days after. Of course it was too good and successful to occasion any offence.

Potato Jelly.—The potato may with ease be made into a rich and nutritious jelly, and the process should be generally known. It is as follows: Let a couple of good sized, mealy potatoes be washed, peeled, and grated; throw the pulp thus procured in a basin of water and stir it well; let it stand a few minutes, and a sufficient quantity of starch will have fallen for the purpose required; pour off the water, and pour on boiling water, stirring the starch the while; and it will soon and suddenly pass to the state of jelly. The only nicety required is to be careful that the water is absolutely boiling, otherwise the change will not take place. On comparing this jelly with that obtained from Bermuda, a difficulty in discriminating between the two will be apparent. The difficulty, however, becomes more obvious on applying sugar to sweeten the jellies, for then the superior flavor of the potato jelly is at once perceived, and it is equal, if not superior, also, to arrow root in its nutritious properties.

A man with a red face, and looking rather shabby, called at a house in the country on Sunday, and asked for a drink of cider. The good lady of the house told him she would not give him any. He urged, telling her that she had better, for some persons had entertained angels unawares. "Yes," said she, "I know that, but angels don't go about drinking cider on Sunday."

Tallow Candles.—This is the season of the year in which farmer's wives make up the stock of candles for family use. We give the following directions for making candles. Melt the tallow over a moderate fire—let the vessels into which the wicks are dipped be nearly full, so that the wick will take up the tallow nearly to the top—when the wick is lowered into the melted tallow, let the operation be performed slowly; when the wicks are raised out of the tallow, the operation should consume nearly a minute, in order that the tallow may cool on the wick in lifting. In this way the candles will be of the same size throughout, and there will be no waste or butt-ends left below the wick when the candle is burned for light. It is the practice of persons unaccustomed to make candles to have the tallow made boiling hot, not to keep the dripping vessels filled, and to raise the wick quickly out of the melted tallow; the consequence is, the candle has a long slender neck, with but little tallow on that part of it, and a stream of hot tallow will run off the candle and leave the lower end almost a bell shape. If the wick is raised slowly out of the melted tallow not a drop of tallow will fall from the candle. An experiment of five minutes will be most convincing. The melted tallow should be in that state that the fingers can be dipped in it without burning—in this state the wick will take up the tallow rapidly. [Farmer & Mechanic.

To Make Home Happy.—Nature is industrious in adorning her dominions; and man, to whom this bounty is addressed, should feel and obey the lesson. Let him, too, be industrious in adorning his domain—in making his home, the dwelling of his wife and children, not only convenient and comfortable, but pleasant. Let him, as far as circumstances will permit, be industrious in surrounding it with pleasant objects—in decorating it, within and without, with things that tend to make it agreeable and attractive. Let industry make home the abode of neatness and order—a place which brings satisfaction to every inmate, and which, in absence, draws back the heart by the fond associations of comfort and content. Let this be done, and this sacred spot will become more surely the scene of cheerfulness and peace. Ye parents, who would have your children happy, be industrious to bring them up in the midst of a pleasant, a cheerful, and a happy home. Waste not your time in accumulating wealth for them; but plant in their minds and souls, in the way proposed, the seeds of virtue and prosperity.

Suicide Prevented.—Father Taylor related an anecdote of a man who met another on London Bridge, in the night. "What are you here for, at this late and gloomy hour?" "Why, I am so poor and distressed for a morsel of bread to eat, and for a starving family, that I determined to come here and destroy myself." "Well," said the interrogator, "I am here for the same purpose, but from a directly opposite cause. I have so much wealth, so many cares and perplexities in taking care of it, that I wish to be delivered from the troubles of this world. And now I will give you a check, that I may be relieved a little." He signed the check, and a great burden was off his mind—he signed another, and another, and finally he was so relieved, that he concluded to live—and the other man came to the same conclusion. Such is the operation of relieving and being relieved.

Cure for Croup.—We find in the Journal of Health the following simple remedy for this dangerous disease. Those who have passed nights of almost agony at the bedsides of loved children will treasure it up as an invaluable piece of information: "If a child is taken with the croup, instantly apply cold water, ice water if possible, suddenly and freely to the neck and chest, with a sponge. The breathing will almost instantly be relieved. So soon as possible, let the sufferer drink as much as it can; then wipe it dry, cover it up warm, and soon a quiet slumber will relieve the parent's anxiety and lead the heart in thankfulness to the power which has given to the pure gushing fountain, such medical qualities."

Cultivation of Orchards.—At a late agricultural meeting at the State House, Boston, Mass., Mr. Porter, of Danvers, stated that a few years ago, he had an old orchard of four or five acres, which had not been ploughed for thirty years, which his neighbors said was worthless. He ploughed it, manured it well, and he took off a good crop of oats. He pursued the same course the two following years. The third year, he had seven tons of oats, cut before ripe for fodder, and two hundred and eighty barrels of apples. Previous to ploughing he did not get more than eight barrels a year.

Grouty.—Poor fool! grunt away—who cares? If Cole could paint you as you look, grouty and mopish, we'll be bound to say you would never lose your self-respect, again. We can put up with a man of quick passion, who will call another a liar one moment and beg his pardon the next, when he has cooled off; but, hang us, if we do not detest a grouty, hoggish disposition. No one can get a decent answer from you—not even your old mother, or your pretty sweetheart. Away with such a disposition, or take a trip to Botany Bay, where you can live and make mouths at those who would not suffer by you—who have the disposition to return like favors.

A lad of about twelve years of age, by the name of E. O. Knowles, of Surry, Me., was killed in the blacksmith shop of Stephen Pillsbury, South Boston. He was standing about ten or twelve feet from an anvil, where two men were forging, when a small piece of steel flew from one of the sledge-hammers, and struck him in the thigh, severing the main artery, in consequence of which, he bled to death in about five minutes. The splinter was very small, not more than the fiftieth part of an inch wide; the persons present were not aware that he was hurt until he turned to leave the shop, when he staggered, and they then perceived the blood flowing down his leg. They immediately went to his assistance, but before they could get him into the house near by, he bled to death. He was on a visit, together with his mother and sister, at South Boston.

VARIETY.

An exchange says:—A few days ago a gentleman (?) came into our sanctum and took off his hat, and picking up a piece of manuscript commenced reading it very closely. We reached over and took a letter out of his hat, unfolded and commenced reading it. He was so busy that he did not discover how we were paying him in his own coin, until we asked him what it was his correspondent was writing to him about a woman? "Why, look here 'Squire," says he, "you surely are not reading my private letters?" "Certainly, sir," said we, "you are reading our private manuscripts." He was plagued, begged us not to mention his name, promised to do so no more, and we quit even.

A colored fireman, on board a steamboat running between St. Louis and New Orleans, having lost all his money at poker with his companions, staked his clothing, and being still unfortunate, pledged his own freedom for a small amount. Losing this, the bets were doubled, and he finally, at one desperate hazard, ventured his full value as a slave, and laid down his free papers to represent the stake. He lost, suffered his certificates to be destroyed, and was actually sold by the winner to a slave dealer, who hesitated not to take him at a small discount upon his assessed value.

It has recently been discovered that kreosote, already employed as a remedy for the tooth ache, is the best of preservatives against sea sickness. It appears that when the sea is in a normal state, out of ten persons who would be sick without the aid of kreosote, nine experience no inconvenience if they have recourse thereto. It is employed nearly as ether, that is, in putting a few drops in a glass of water or a lump of sugar. The stomach is not at all inconveniently affected by its use.

The bones of a human skeleton, enclosed in a curiously-wrought earthen vase, were found recently near Tuscaloosa, Alabama, by a farm hand, who turned them up with his plough. The vase was of fine clay, mixed with brilliant particles, like our white pebbles crushed and sifted. It was about eighteen or twenty inches in diameter, divided in the middle, and twelve in depth. The border of the lower half was handsomely flowered.

An interesting case has been decided in Baltimore city, by which a woman with a large family of children and grand-children, were freed from slavery. Forty-two years ago, when she was a child, her mother was sold for a term of years, the child to remain with the master, until he is remunerated for the trouble of supporting it. She grew up, was married, and the suit arose from an attempt to sell one of the children.

An agent of the Foreign Evangelical Society lately stated that the society contemplates sending a colporteur to Rome the coming year. One object of the measure is, to ascertain whether Rome will admit our missionaries as freely as we do theirs. This will be a capital test question for deciding how much liberality fills the heart of the new Pope.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, }
IRA SAYLES, } Principals,

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1347.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

President of the Board of Trustees.

A FARM FOR SALE,

IN the township of Piscataway, State of New Jersey, lying north-east from New Brunswick, half a mile from the Bridge, half a mile from Snyder's Mills, and in full view of the railroad car-house. Said farm consists of about ninety five acres of land, in a good state of cultivation, and well adapted to raising grain and vegetables. It has a good variety of fruit trees, considerable wood, and five acres of salt meadow. The house is in good repair, and has a well of water at the door. There is also a new barn, sheds, &c. For farther particulars call on Dr. NELSON STELLE, No. 146 Grand-st., N. Y.—Mr. Burris, No. 1 Oliver-st.—or on the premises of JONATHAN S. DUNHAM.

SUNDAY LEGISLATION:

A Candid Statement of Grievances and Demands.

Where any important reform or change is proposed in long-established customs of society, or forms of law regulating the usages of society, it is right that the whole matter should be submitted to the severest scrutiny. We blame no man for questioning the propriety of our proposals; we censure those only who bigotedly refuse to entertain or investigate claims which are made in the fear of God, with the sanction of his Word, and with the firm belief that they are guaranteed by the National and State Constitutions. The first attempts at the most important reforms ever effected in human society, have always been misunderstood and opposed by persons of otherwise truly estimable characters. It is only by giving line upon line, here a little and there a little, that persons unaccustomed to reflect thereon, can see the true bearing of any proposal to change standing usages of society. A regulation of society, venerable for age, and revered for its associations, is usually guarded by so many considerations sacred to its observers, that any attempt to show its incorrectness, or to invalidate its pretensions, is repulsive to their feelings. Such persons ought, however, to remember, that this has attended every reform which has been attempted among men. It attended the labors of Christ and his Apostles, the Protestant Reformers of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, and all of the reform societies of the present age. The efforts at reforming Sunday laws are not singular in this respect. If the friends of truth and righteousness will call to rememberance these things, they will surely allow us to bespeak their earnest attention while we candidly state our grievances and demands. We have so often been misrepresented by clamor, prejudice, and ignorance, that it is necessary to present our case in all the various phases that it wears, and to repeat it with every recurring effort that is made to obtain our rights. As another appeal is about to be made to the ensuing sessions of the State Legislatures, we deem it seasonable to make this candid statement at the present time.

The ancestors and predecessors in faith and religious observances of those who keep the seventh day of the week for the Sabbath, have resided in several of the States of this Union from the earliest settlement of the same, and have ever religiously observed that day of the week—the ancient Sabbath of Jehovah. They were parties to the Congress of the States, to the Declaration of Independence, and the National and State Constitutions, and their rights were included in those instruments. But they have never been adequately protected by the State Statutes. For the most part, their fellow citizens in the several towns in which they reside have respected their principles and their persons, and have voluntarily connived at their business transactions and secular labors on the first day of the week. But there have been some grievous instances of persecution, injustice, oppression, and injury. And recent occurrences make them keenly sensible, that while their constitutional rights are wrested from them by State Statutes, it is not safe to trust to popular feeling for the enjoyment of security, even in a peaceable pursuit of their own interests. From their growing numbers, they are now found in nearly all the trades, arts, and professions practiced in the nation, rendering their legal protection increasingly important. The Constitution of the United States, and most of the State Constitutions, have ever guaranteed all that they desire; but the Laws have never been in accordance therewith, in those particulars which relate to the observance of a weekly Sabbath. The Constitution of the United States says, (Amendments, Article 1st,) "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Article 6th says, "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, shall be the supreme law of the land; and all the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." "The members of the several State Legislatures, and Executive and Judicial Officers, both of the United States, and of the several States, shall be bound, by oath or affirmation, to support this Constitution." The Constitution of Pennsylvania decrees, "that no preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishment or modes of worship." The Constitution of New York says, "The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed to all mankind." The Constitution of New Jersey says, "There shall be no establishment of any one religious sect in this State in preference to another"—"no person shall be denied the enjoyment of any civil right merely on account of his religious principles." Each of these Constitutions likewise provides for its state officers taking oath or affirmation to support the National and State Constitutions. Notwithstanding these solemn guarantees and legal safeguards, the legislatures of each of these States have passed laws to establish the first day of the week as a Sabbath; and to enforce uniformity in its observance, have enacted severe penalties to be inflicted upon all who pursue any secular labor on that day. In Pennsylvania there is no exception whatever for Jews or Seventh-day Baptists. In New Jersey, the law of 1798, entitled "An Act for the suppression of Vice and Immorality," restrains them in the following particulars, viz: 1st. From traveling on that day either upon land or water. 2d. From hunting, gunning, and fishing, under a penalty of two dollars and cost. 3d. Their children above fourteen years of age, and even invalids, from all recreations or diversions, under a penalty of one dollar for each offence. 4th. From all labor, except upon their own farms and in their own workshops. 5th. It prohibits every stageman, wagoner, drayman, drover, and butcher, and his or their servants, from driving any stage, wagon, cart, or dray, or loading or unloading any goods, wares, merchandize, or produce, on that day, under a penalty of two dollars and costs of detention and prosecution. 6th. It prohibits the driving of cattle, sheep, or swine, under similar penalties. 7th. It makes all legal, judicial, and commercial transactions, if had or performed on that day, null and void; and subjects the parties to onerous prosecution. 8th. The title of the Act is a misnomer, and calculated to fix a stigma upon the sentiments of all who do not hold the first day of the week to be "the Christian Sabbath," being entitled, "An Act for the suppression of Vice and Immorality," while in fact its chief design is to enforce uniformity in the observance of the first day as a Sabbath. 9th. Its arbitrary character is completed by the fourteenth section, which declares that such convictions as are had under it, shall not be liable to be removed by certiorari into the Supreme Court.

We are aggrieved with these laws, because they impose oppressive restrictions upon many upright, religious and conscientious inhabitants of these States. They deprive conscientious men, who religiously observe the seventh day—the Sabbath of the Decalogue—of their civil right to perform legal, judicial, and commercial transactions, upon one-sixth of their time, and also to pursue other public business and professions. They deprive our children and invalids of their opportunities for recreation and diversion. They contravene the official oaths of statesmen and jurists. They usurp the rights of conscience, establish a mode or form of religion, and favor certain religious sects in preference to others, contrary to the express guarantees of the National and State Constitutions. They favor idleness, and suppress virtuous industry.

Farther, the inconsistency of these restraints may be seen, in that the law constantly excepts the carriers of the United States Mail. They may run steamboats, railway trains, wagons, and stages, and carry hundreds of passengers, without interruption or fine. But if a stageman runs his stage one mile, without the mail, he is liable to a fine of eight dollars, and costs of detention and prosecution. Any citizen may travel throughout the State in any vehicle carrying the mail, without interruption; but if he drive his own carriage a mile, he is liable to a fine. If a person attend a place of worship once during the day, he may visit all his friends within twenty miles of home; but if he disbelieves in the Christian Sabbath, and drives out as on a secular day, he is liable to a fine for going a single mile. Under the above religious pretences, Sunday is made the best day in the week for all livery stables, while the poor unbeliever in the Christian Sabbath MUST rest, himself and his beast!

Laws which are so manifestly unconstitutional, and operate with so much vexatious partiality and injustice, ought to be repealed. We therefore ask it, as our right, that they should be repealed. We do not, however, ask that there should be no Sunday laws, as has been represented. We ask the repeal of all laws which interfere with the rights of conscience; whether of first-day people or seventh-day people. We ask for the separation of the subject of Sabbath-keeping from the subject of vice and immorality; and that all regulations for the peaceable observance of a weekly Sabbath, whether on the first day or the seventh day, should be special enactments placed in the statute book under the running title of "Religious Societies." Were we called upon to draft a law for the purpose, we would propose the following, viz:—

An Act for the protection of all persons religiously observing a weekly Sabbath.

Be it enacted, that every inhabitant of this State, who shall give satisfactory proof that he religiously observes the first day of the week as a Sabbath, shall on that day be exempt from answering to any process in law or equity, either as defendant, witness, or juror, except in criminal cases; likewise from discharging, on said day, the duties of any post or office to which he may be appointed or commissioned, except when the peace or protection of the State shall absolutely require it; and shall also be exempt from working on the highways, and from doing any military duty, except when in actual service.

And every inhabitant of this State, who shall give satisfactory proof that he religiously observes the seventh day of the week as a Sabbath, shall be exempt on that day from answering to any process in law or equity, either as defendant, witness, or juror, except in criminal cases; likewise from performing the duties of any post or office to which he may be appointed or commissioned, except when the peace or protection of the State shall absolutely require it; and shall also be exempt from working on the highways, and from doing any military duty on the said day, except when in actual service.

And all and several of these exemptions, shall extend to and include all persons belonging to or usually assembling with any Society of Friends, usually called Quakers, during those hours, or days, or parts of days, which such Society does set apart for a stated weekly season of public religious worship, including the hours necessary for going to and returning from their usual places of religious worship, with the exceptions before named.

And the same exceptions shall extend to the day usually called Christmas, when religiously observed by any other Society, with the exceptions before mentioned.

If this were attached to the acts for the protection of religious worship, it would be all-sufficient for every righteous purpose, and would secure for all Equal Rights. S. D.

JEWISH PRAYER AGAINST FAMINE.

In view of the apprehensions of famine which have prevailed so extensively in England, the Chief Rabbi of the members of the Jewish persuasion in Great Britain and Ireland issued the following form of prayer, which was ordered to be offered up in all the German synagogues of the British empire, on Sabbath, October 17, 5607, 1846, and the two following Sabbaths:—

"Most High God, whose throne is in the heavens; in thy hand is the life of every being; thou feedest and sustainest each from the formidable beeru unto the crawling worm; the reptile of the field and the wild beast of the forest alike declare, 'We are thy creatures, gracious art thou, and compassionate toward all thy works.' Thine is the dominion of the earth, whether for mercy or for judgment; even this year thou hast visited this land and watered it. One portion thereof theu hast crowned with abundance, but from the other thou hast withheld thy blessing. Therefore has consternation seized the husbandman and the inhabitants of the land, because before their eyes food is destroyed.

"Verily thy doings are marvellous, and our soul knoweth right well that thy decrees are just; but as heaven is high above the earth, so great is thy mercy upon us. Thou extendest to us thine indulgence, for that we are also flesh; and such is thine attribute to hide thine eyes from sinners, to have compassion upon thy creatures, and to deal kindly toward them. We beseech thee, O Father, spare and have pity upon the afflicted poor; avert from them hunger and want of food; have commiseration upon our country; let a moisture ascend from the earth. Send us the rain of the season, and bid it descend plenteously, so that the floors may be full of wheat, the trees yield their fruit, and the ground its produce.

"Thou, O Lord, who hast a balm for all the wounds of this earth, who likest man to man, for we all spring from one root, inspire thy children with a spirit of benevolence and humility; let them not act harshly toward each other, but may every man be permitted to pursue his path unmolested; may every one assist his neighbor, and say to his brother, 'Be of good courage.' May peace flourish in this country, and mayest thou be nigh to redeem us. Amen."

ZEAL AND RESOLUTION IN MINISTERS.

Two things that are exceedingly needful to ministers, as they would do any great matters to advance the kingdom of Christ, are zeal and resolution. The influence and power of these things to bring to pass great effects, is greater than is commonly imagined; a man of but an ordinary capacity, will do more with them than one of ten times the parts and learning without them; more may be done with them in a few days, or at least weeks, than can be done without them in many years. Those that are possessed of these qualities, commonly carry the day in almost all affairs. Most of the great things that have been done in the world of mankind, the great revolutions that have been accomplished in the kingdoms and empires of the earth, have been chiefly owing to these things. The very sight or appearance of a thoroughly engaged spirit, together with a fearless courage and unyielding resolution, in any person that has undertaken the managing of any affair amongst mankind, goes a great way to accomplish the effect aimed at. It is evident that the appearance of these things in Alexander, did three times as much towards conquering the world, as all the blows that he struck. And how much were the great things that Oliver Cromwell did owing to these things? And the greater things that Mr. Whitefield has done every where, as he has run through the British dominions (so far as they are owing to means,) are very much owing to the appearance of these things, which he is eminently possessed of. When the people see these things in a person, and to a great degree, it awes them, and has a commanding influence upon their minds; it seems to them that they must yield; they naturally fall before them, without standing to contest or dispute the matter; they are conquered as it were by surprise. But while we are cold and heartless, and only go on in a dull manner, in an old formal round, we shall never do any great matters. Our attempts, with the appearance of such coldness and irresolution, will not so much as make persons think of yielding; they will hardly be sufficient to put it into their minds. The appearance of such indifference and cowardice does as it were call for and provoke opposition. Our misery is want of zeal and courage; for not only through want of them, does all fail that we seem to attempt, but it prevents our attempting any thing very remarkable for the kingdom of Christ. Hence, ofttimes it has been that when any thing very considerable, that is new, is proposed to be done for the advancement of religion, or the public good, many difficulties are found out, which are in the way, and a great many objections are started, and it may be, it is put off from one to another; but nobody does any thing. And after this manner good designs or proposals have oftentimes failed, and have sunk as soon as proposed. Whereas, if we had but Mr. Whitefield's zeal and courage, what could not we do with such a blessing as we might expect? [Edwards on Revivals.

LAST DAYS OF JOHN RANDOLPH.

Deeply affecting is the narrative of the last days of the celebrated John Randolph, of Roanoke. In his case conscience seemed to have triumphed over conventional forms and usages, and without fear of man he spoke as he felt. The account is from the deposition of Dr. Parish, the physician who attended him in his last moments.

"The morning of the day that John Randolph died, I received an early and earnest message to visit him. Several persons were in the room, but soon left it, except his servant John, who appeared affected at the situation of his dying master. I remarked to John, soon after I arrived, that I had seen his master very low several times before, and he had revived, and perhaps he would again. The patient directly said, 'John knows better than that.' . . . . He then said, 'John told me this morning, Master, you are dying.' I made no attempt to conceal my views. On the contrary, I assured him I would speak to him with entire candor on the occasion, and told him it had been rather a subject of surprise that he had continued to live so long.

"He now made his preparations to die. Between him and his faithful servant, there appeared to be a complete understanding. He directed John to bring his father's breast-button, which was immediately produced. He then directed him to place it in the bosom of his shirt. It was an old-fashioned, large size, gold stud. John placed it in the button-hole of the shirt-bosom; but to fix it completely required a hole in the opposite side. When this was announced to his master, he quickly said, 'Get a knife and cut one.' I handed my penknife to John, who cut the hole, and fixed the valuable relic to the satisfaction of the expiring patient. A napkin was also called for, and was placed over the breast of the patient. For a short time he lay perfectly quiet; his eyes were closod, and I concluded he was disposed to sleep.

He suddenly aroused from this state with the words, 'Remorse! Remorse!' It was twice repeated; the last time at the top of his voice, evidently with great agitation. He cried out, 'Let me see the word.' No reply followed—having learned enough of the character of my patient to ascertain, that when I did not know exactly what to say, it was best to say nothing. He then exclaimed, 'Get a dictionary; let me see the word!' I cast my eyes around, and told him that I believed there was not one in the room. 'Write it down then; let me see the word.' I picked up one of his cards from the table. 'Randolph of Roanoke!' and inquired whether I should write on that? 'Yes, nothing more proper;' then with my pencil, I wrote REMORSE. He took the card in his hand in a hurried manner, and fastened his eyes on it with intensity; 'Write it on the back,' he exclaimed. I did so, and handed it to him again. He was excessively agitated at this period; he repeated, 'Remorse! You have no idea what it is; you can form no idea whatever; it has contributed to bring me to my present situation; but I have looked on the Lord Jesus Christ, and hope I have obtained pardon.' He then said, 'Now let John take your pencil and draw a line under the word!' which was accordingly done. I inquired what was to be done with the card? He replied, 'Put it into your pocket; take care of it; when I am dead look at it.' The original is now in my possession.

"This was an impressive scene. All the plans of ambition, the honors and wealth of this world, had vanished as bubbles in the water. He knew and he felt, that his very moments were few, and even they were numbered." [Ch. Review.

THE REMOVAL OF SATAN.

A petition to Almighty God, for the removal of Satan from the earth, lies here for signatures! Such was the startling announcement which met our eye some two years ago, through a populous part of this metropolis. It was a large placard, placed conspicuously in the shop of a tradesman. We entered the house, saw the petition, examined the roll of the petitioners' names, and found that they then exceeded 24,000! We were urged to attach our signature. We inquired what use they intended to make of the petition—to whom they proposed to transmit it—by what mode they could secure its safe conveyance; and not having been satisfied on these and kindred topics, we took leave to decline the urgent request. Some days ago we revisited this house; as we had conclusive evidence that Satan had not been removed from the earth, we concluded either that the petition had failed in its prayer, or what was deemed more probable, that it had not reached its destination. We found that the worthy tradesman had removed, and having ascertained his new address, we resolved to pay him a visit. We easily found him, and were glad to perceive, that, though the petition had not been successful, he had greatly improved his situation. The petition is still there, and a placard, somewhat modified, still adorns his shop. And by how many is it signed? By more than 80,000 men and women! Such is London the metropolis of England—of Europe—of the world—in the year of grace, 1846!

THE BIBLE IN FRANCE.

A Paris correspondent of the Edinburg Review, gives the following graphic account of the difficulty he experienced in obtaining the loan of a Bible.

I happened during the week, to have need of a Bible in the French version. I asked a friend, who resided in the same house, if he had a copy. 'No, indeed, he hadn't.' The proprietor of the house—'Oh, you are joking! Really, haven't got such a thing—never had—and didn't know any body who had.' The porter and his wife—'Monsieur wanted a bible; what was a Bible?' An acquaintance in the next street—'Never saw a Bible in his life.' A circulating library—'Ha! ha! Monsieur wanted a novel of Paul de Kock, a la bonne heure; but as to the Bible, it was absurd.'

Friends and acquaintances, and friends' friends, were called upon, one after another, for the desired Bible; but each and all gave the same answer, that they had no Bible—never had a Bible—knew no one who had a Bible—and didn't know where a Bible was to be found, unless in some old corner of the library of Monseigneur the Archbishop. All the circulating libraries in the neighborhood were scoured, but without success—no Bible was to be had. I sent to several booksellers' shops to buy a copy; not one was to be had, for the moment, though it could be obtained in a day or two. At last I went to the Bibliotheque Royale—the great public, I may say national, library of France, and there, after some difficulty, succeeded in procuring the object of my search.

EFFECT OF MISSIONS.—The North American, in an able article on the late meeting of the American Board of Missions, says:—

There are features of the missionary enterprise that well deserve a record in a secular journal. Wherever missions have been planted by the Americaan Board, the influence has been most marked upon civilization, and learning, and morality, and general virtue. The same is true of other missionary enterprises, wherever they are conducted on the broad and expansive principle of Christian charity. We arrogate nothing peculiar to the American Board. It is the beneficial influence of Christian philanthropy, acting upon the friendless and forsaken, the ignorant and vicious, of which we speak. We bid all such organizations "God speed." They reflect honor upon our country, and mark the spirit and progress of the age. They are exerting a powerful influence in softening the asperities of human nature, in staying the madness of passion, and in binding nations together in the bonds of brotherhood and affection. The havoc of war, the clashing of arms, the storming of cities, and the battle field, where thousands "bite the dust in death," may well be superseded by those conquests which diffuse a tide of blessings in proportion to their extent. We feel no hesitation in expressing our conviction that the missions of modern times, in their influence and efforts, have done far more to prevent national collisions and the effusion of blood, than all the decrees of kings, and cabinets, and legislative enactments. Once reclaim men from the dominion of vindictive passions, and they will cherish a spirit of kindness and good will toward the entire race.

A SERIOUS QUESTION.—There is sometimes great power in a single word or sentence. Like a lancet, it will pierce the conscience, and leave a lasting impression on the mind. The following is a case in point:—

A number of intimate friends being at dinner on the Sabbath, one of the company, in order to prevent improper discourse, said, "It is a question whether we shall all go to heaven, or not." This plain hint occasioned a general seriousness and self-examination. One thought, "If any of this company go to hell, it must be myself;" and so thought another, and another. In short, it was afterwards found that this one sentence proved, by the special blessing of God upon it, instrumental in their conversion. What an encouragement is this to Christians, to give a serious turn to the conversation when in company!

THE CLOSET.—In the life of Philip Henry it is said, "He and his wife constantly prayed together morning and evening." He made conscience of closet worship, and abounded in it. It was the caution and advice which he frequently gave to his children and friends: "Be sure you look to your secret duty; keep that up, whatever you do; the soul cannot prosper in the neglect of it. Apostacy generally begins at the closet door." Besides these, he was uniform, steady and constant in family worship, from the time he was first called to the charge of a family, to his dying day. He would say, "If the worship of God be not in the house, write, 'Lord have mercy on us,' on the door for there is a plague, a curse upon it."

A HEATHEN'S PRAYER.—Aristotle, the most acute and laborious of all the ancient philosophers, the tutor of Alexander the Great, and the oracle of the learned through a series of ages, is said, as he expired, to have uttered this sentiment: 'Helpless I entered this world, anxious I have lived in it, and agitated with trouble I leave it—First Cause of all things, pity me!'

The chief beauty of countenance arises from the appearance in it of good temper, good nature, sagacity, virtue, modesty and other moral and intellectual virtues.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Our paper is dated on Thanksgiving Day, although it is printed and placed in the hands of many of its readers before that time. In some of the days set apart for religious purposes by civil and ecclesiastical authority, we confess that we feel but little interest; such, for instance, as Easter, Holy-Thursday, and Good-Friday, days designed to commemorate the death, resurrection, and ascension of our Lord. For aught we know, the object in setting them apart may have been good enough; but the effect of observing them has generally been to establish humanly-devised institutions at the expense of eclipsing those of divine origin. Hence we doubt the policy of their appointment, and have no sympathy with their observation. But with Thanksgiving Day it is different. This occurs only by special appointment, and has a specific and common object in view. It is a season for rendering thanks to Almighty God, the giver of all good, for the bounties of his Providence, and for the social, civil, and religious privileges which we enjoy. In such a season, what Christian can fail to feel a deep and lively interest?

A review of the past year can scarcely fail to furnish abundant incentives to thanksgiving. The cry of famine has reached us from other lands; but within our own borders there has been plenty, and our storehouses are now full to overflowing. In some portions of the earth civil discord and religious persecution have been rife; but from these our own land has been to a good degree free. There have been, it is true, some mournful exceptions—some instances in which good and upright men have suffered persecution for conscience's sake. But in general the rights of conscience have been respected by the civil authorities, and those authorities have been permitted to go forward in the discharge of their duties without opposition from an excited populace. It may be said with truth, therefore, in view of God's dealings with us, that the year has been "crowned with goodness, and the paths of the Lord have dropped fatness."

But when we turn from the dealings of God with us, to consider our dealings with others, a sad picture presents itself. Our nation, strong and rich though it is, and boasting of its liberality, is waging a cruel warfare upon a poor and almost defenceless people, sacking their cities, and laying waste their country. And for what? Not because they have invaded our territory; nor is it mainly because they refuse to pay a few paltry dollars due to our government or some of our citizens. There is reason to believe, that it is principally from a love of conquest, and a disposition to extend our borders in such a direction as to strengthen that "peculiar institution" which is now threatening our ruin. In view of such circumstances, the patriot and the Christian will see occasion to humble himself before God, and to join with his words of thanksgiving a prayer to be delivered from the consequences of oppression.

MISSIONS.

"The harvest truly is plentiful, but the laborers are few.'

When I look over the moral waste which the world presents, and consider what Christ, the great example of missionaries, has left upon record concerning the duty of his followers, I am astonished at the apathy which our denomination has so long exhibited upon this subject. The world seems to invite us in a particular manner to become a missionary people; yea, we are driven to it, for the common rights of citizens are here often denied us, and we are reminded continually of our unwelcome position among the possessors of this world's favor. Do not these circumstances conspire to point out the better path? Why then should not the whole community of Sabbath-keepers join to occupy the field already white for the harvest? Especially distinguished by our position in regard to the Pagan and Popish traditions and corruptions which more or less prevail around us, and which do so evidently trammel and enervate the enterprise of the most numerous sects on this subject, we should look with unwavering courage to the work; for truly the time seems to have arrived when, as a people, we should shake off the drowsiness of the past, and become alive to our duty. Our young men complain that the world seems closed against them for the successful prosecution of secular enterprises, because of the inconvenient truth they profess. Reason would teach, that if one path of usefulness be closed against a people, they should enter upon another, for the Word of God must not be bound. Will any one say that the missionary field is closed against the truth we profess? We say, If God be for us, who can be against us? Already is it too evident among many, that the popular and powerful sects, who seem to have their portion in the government of this world, are not anxious to undergo the hardships, and live the cross-bearing lives of primitive times; and why should they? Being rich and powerful, commercial embassies, and political protection, must be thrown around their representatives among the heathen, whose sagacity is not so small, but that they can distinguish the worldly from the heavenly minded teacher.

The Great Head of the Church will prosper the cause of missions, when his disciples go forth with the precious seeds of truth, and in his name. Let missionaries be sanctified through the truth themselves; let them go without worldly parade, and feeling that they have here no abiding city—that the wide world is their field of labor, and their object the glory of that city which, though out of sight, hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God—and having on the whole panoply of truth, go forth as the called of the Lord did in primitive times—prosperity will attend their labors, though present suffering should often result to their persons.

Would it not be a glorious distinction for the churches at home, to have their seats vacant, when their members are scattered over the whole earth on errands of mercy to a perishing world? Why should we not be distinguished as a missionary people? What have we to gain beside? What is the world, that we should love it more than the truth which makes us free in the kingdom of Christ, and offers a crown imperishable to all the saints? Let our name be, A MISSIONARY PEOPLE. The East, the West, the North, and the South, say, Come and help us. Let the PEOPLE say, We will go. NERI.

THE GERMAN SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

We have been much gratified of late, to notice increasing evidences of the fraternal feeling with which the German Seventh-day Baptists regard their English brethren of the same faith; and which, indeed, they have manifested from the earliest period of our intercourse with them. As an illustration of it, we might mention a circumstance which was told us a few days ago. When Eld. W. B. Gillett visited Ephrata, in 1844, at the invitation of Dr. Wm. M. Fahnestock, to attend a large meeting, at which a number of the members from a distance were expected, and many of whom had already arrived, Dr. F., in announcing the probability of Bro. Gillett's being there that day, and bespeaking a cordial reception for one who was an entire stranger to them all, and with whom most of them could not have any personal intercourse, or understand his preaching,—one of the plain old German members rose and said, in his vernacular tongue: "If we cannot hold intercourse with words, we can in Christian actions; we can show him much love without words." Such, we are assured, is the feeling of the members generally; and to it, doubtless, we are to attribute the following letter from our German brethren to the late General Conference, and also the letter of Dr. Fahnestock which accompanied it—both of which we have been requested by officers of the Conference to publish:—

Letter of the German Seventh-day Baptists.

EPHRATA, August 24th, 1846.

At a meeting of the German Seventh-day Baptist Society of Ephrata, held on the 23d inst., the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

Whereas, it has been intimated to us that the subject of legal coercion to sanctify the first day of the week, will attract the attention of the General Conference of our English Seventh-day Baptist brethren, about to assemble at Shiloh, or become the subject of a special convention, at the same time and place, and having received public and private invitations to that end, therefore,

Resolved, That Dr. W. M. Fahnestock is hereby appointed as visitor from this Society to the General Conference, to meet at Shiloh, on the 4th day before the 2d Sabbath in ninth month, to present our Christian greetings, and to confer with them on the subject of Sunday Legislation, coercion laws, and such other matters connected with religious freedom as may be deemed pertinent.

Resolved, That should a special convention be convened at Shiloh for the above purpose, the said Dr. W. M. Fahnestock is hereby constituted our delegate, to represent this Society in said convention.

BENJ. KONIGMACHER, Moderator.
JOS. KONIGMACHER, Secretary.

Letter of Dr. Fahnestock.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., Sept. 7, 1846.

To the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference:—

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—Having been appointed by the German Seventh-day Baptist Society of Ephrata to attend the sittings of the General Conference, at Shiloh, and confer with you on matters connected with Sunday Legislation, which it is expected will be brought under your consideration during your present session, and having received letters from the Society at Snowhill expressing much regret at not finding it practicable, at this busy season of the year, to be represented on this occasion, and being myself, most unexpectedly, disappointed in my arrangements to be with you at your convocation, by circumstances entirely beyond my control, I cannot refrain from expressing, by proxy, my unfeigned regret on this deprivation of long-anticipated gratification, and delivering a part of the commission imposed upon me by the enclosed proceedings of our Society, so consonant with my own feelings, that very agreeable part of my duty, of presenting to the General Conference, the "Christian greetings" of the German Seventh-day Baptists of Pennsylvania.

Although personally unknown to most of you, our hearts, for years, have gone out to you as to kindred in a far land, and have been knit together, in spirit, as co-workers to sanctify and restore the observance of the holy Sabbath. We have oft-times cast our eyes over the hills towards Shiloh and Piscataway—names of old association with us, and also, more recently, as we have been brought into a more intimate knowledge of each other, to the brethren of New York, and of Connecticut, and of Rhode Island—longing for a union or an approach to union.

If slight differences of belief and practice continue to mark distinct communions, still there is a community of interest on the subject of the Sabbath, which cannot and I trust will never be dissevered. If you are English and we German Sabbath-keepers, there is in that no obstacle to identity for denominational purposes, which are of like moment to both. There was the house of Israel and the house of Judah, yet one Father Abraham; and there were the Jewish disciples and the Gentile disciples, each having their own peculiarities, yet one Lord Jesus Christ, Head over all, blessed forever more. If we differ on small matters, we may agree to differ, and still unite to advance our common distinctive feature, which separates us from all other professing Christians—we may join in "Holy Alliance," to make a crusade against the desecration of God's holy Sabbath, and band together as brothers to succor and sustain each other under oppression and persecution for conscience sake. If we are not all prepared for unreserved assimilation—a coalesced fraternity—yet many of both branches of these kindred families ardently desire a closer approximation and a more intimate intercourse; and while we hold out the overture of fraternal affinity, we advert with unalloyed delight to happy intercourse with some of your number, in days past, when we had among us a Caleb Sheppard, an Amos Wells, a Walter Gillett, an Azor Estee, and a Samuel Davison. Our hearts went out spontaneously to meet them, and into our warmest affections and confidence were they most cordially received. As we received them, we have ever since cherished pleasing memories of those profitable interviews; and we are happy to acknowledge the like Christian attention to our beloved brother Charles] Hoch, while visiting some of your people, a few years since.

This interchange of kind offices, while it testifies to true discipleship, tends to develope our respective graces as followers of the Lamb, to remove sectarian tenacity, to encourage an abiding consociation, and eventually, perhaps, establish a perfect and permanent consolidation of the two orders. So, dear Christian friends, each body, for the present, retaining its own organization and its own peculiarities, our people are disposed to recognize and receive one and all of you, whenever you may afford them the happiness of extending Christian courtesies and brotherly affection. I assert the sentiment of the whole Society, when I present to you their affectionate regards and sincere wishes for your prosperity.

May our Lord and Master, the precious Redeemer, bestow his blessing upon us, draw us together with the chords of love, cement us in bonds of affection, make us one in co-operation, and one with Him in carrying out his purposes, as He was one with the Father in doing his will here below; and prosper us in all our efforts to magnify his name among men, and render honorable His law, amid a perverse and persecuting generation.

I have time only to add, that I shall be happy to co-operate with you, on behalf of the Society of Ephrata, in any measures to restrain coercive enactments and resist all encroachments on our religious rights which abridge or interfere in the least with perfect religious freedom. I commend you and all your deliberations to the Lord, wonderful in counsel, who has promised ever to be with those who keep his covenant and his testimonies. Yours fraternally,

WM. M. FAHNESTOCK.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO PERSEVERE IN TRACT CIRCULATION.

Letters recently received at the office of the American Sabbath Tract Society, give encouragement to prosecute the work with renewed energy.

Eld. VARNUM HULL writes: "I had a very interesting time on my way home from Conference, at Clifton and Greenfield, Pa. I preached twice on the Sabbath question, with the most flattering prospects I ever witnessed under like circumstances. The more I labor in support of this cause, the more I am impressed that it is our duty to put forth more vigorous efforts. I think that if our brethren could but once witness with their own eyes our influence upon this subject abroad, there would be no want of funds to circulate tracts."

Eld. SAMUEL DAVISON writes from Philadelphia, whither he had been invited by a ministering brother, who, he says, "had been wounded in his soul to the death of Sunday-keeping, saying in his invitation, 'he had contended with God his Maker, and had conferred with flesh and blood, until his mind had become filled with such darkness, and his soul with such great distress, that he could resist no more,' and that he has now become a decided Sabbatarian. He says that the Address to the Baptists hit his case exactly, and fastened all his other convictions as a nail in a sure place. Thus you see we labor not in vain."

Eld. HULL informed the agent of the Society not long ago, that he had been able to learn of about seven hundred individuals who had recently embraced the Lord's Sabbath, to the rejection of the old pagan festival of the Sun, now converted and rebaptized under the name of the Christian Sabbath.

Surely there is encouragement for all who will work to put in the sickle. God grant that all Sabbath-keepers may soon have a heart to do it. P. S.

THE INFECTION SPREADING.—Many persons seem to suppose, that opposition to the existing Sunday Laws is confined almost exclusively to the Seventh-day Baptists. This is a great mistake, as any body may learn who will take the trouble to converse with the common people upon the subject. We might state many facts to show the extent of the opposition to laws enforcing the observation of Sunday. One, however, must suffice for the present. At the recent election in New Jersey, in a town where many Quakers, but no Seventh-day Baptists, reside, a vote was cast with this heading: "FREEMEN'S TICKET: EQUAL RIGHTS, AND NO SUNDAY COERCION LAWS." When the votes were canvassed, this one was brought forth, and read aloud. It was received with enthusiastic cheers by the assembly, and the clerk was requested to write down the heading, that it might be used at the next election.

FORM OF PETITION—STATE OF NEW YORK.

To the Seventh-day Baptists in the State of New York, and especially to those belonging to the Central Association:—

DEAR BRETHREN—I was instructed by the Central Association, at its last Annual Meeting, (in case of failure of obtaining protection from the Constitutional Convention,) to prepare and publish a form of Petition to the Legislature of New York, to be circulated among the friends of civil and religious liberty for signatures, praying the Legislature to extend to the observers of the seventh day the same protection that is enjoyed by first-day keepers. In compliance with the above instructions, I hereby present the following, with a request that such as like it will copy it immediately, give it an extensive circulation, and transmit such signatures as they may obtain, free of postage, either to the Semi-Annual Meeting of the Central Association at DeRuyter, or to Ira Harris, Member of the Senate, with a request that he will present the same to the Senate. I would farther suggest, that those churches who are connected with either the Central or Western Associations, (living in the State of New York,) be requested to forward to the Semi-Annual Meeting of said Association the sums intended to be raised to defray the expense or our agent at Albany.

Yours respectfully,
ELI S. BAILEY.

To the Honorable the Legislature of New York:—

The undersigned, inhabitants of the County of ——— and vicinity, respectfully represent:

1st. That the Constitution of this State guarantees the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship to all the inhabitants of said State, without discrimination.

2d. There are within the State upwards of thirty churches of Seventh-day Baptists, numbering in their communion between four and five thousand. There is also in their societies, and other settlements where no churches are organized, a large number who observe the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, as the Sabbath. By our Statutes, these persons are liable to be called on to perform almost all civil services, and to be returned as defendants, witnesses, and jurors in civil cases, on the day they believe God requires them to dedicate to his worship. The operation of these laws has been oppressive on them for many years. Much damage and cost have been sustained by them, in addition to the vexatious harrassing of evil-disposed persons. A law was enacted May 7th, 1839, for their protection; but by a late decision of the Supreme Court in the case of MAXSON vs. ANNAS, it is found insufficient for their protection.

We therefore respectfully ask your honorable body, so to amend said Statute, that all persons who religiously observe the seventh day of the week, or Saturday, as the Sabbath, may be as fully protected in that observance as others are in the observance of the first day of the week. This your petitioners conceive to be in accordance with the design and spirit of the Constitution, and what impartial justice would award to all law-abiding citizens.

CHRISTIANITY IN THE EAST.

Letters from the East state that through the instrumentality of missionaries, teachers, and the press, much light respecting religion has spread over a continent of heathenism, and now the Spirit of God seems to be following the light in a remarkable manner. Mrs. Gutzlaff, writing from China, says:—

"I have been nearly twenty years in Asia, and have never observed so much of the divine power, and manifest influence of the Spirit of God upon the hearts of the heathen, as just now. The work is increasing, and the individuals who express their faith in the Saviour are becoming more numerous; and although their numbers is still exceedingly small compared with the millions of Chinese, still the work has commenced under the auspices of the Saviour and will continue. What rejoices us most is, that so many Chinese are coming forward to preach the Gospel, and that with effect and the assistance of the Holy Spirit. Five natives, full of energy and faith, have to-day proclaimed the Gospel to ctheir ountrymen."

Another letter, written from Arracan, June 23, 1846, by Rev. Mr. Ingalls, of the Baptist Burman Mission, says:—

"I cannot close this sheet without expressing a devout wish that this mission may be cherished by the board and the churches. Kyouk Phyoo should have one missionary at least, Ramree two, and one for Sandoway, and another for this city. The Catholic Bishop visited this place a short time since, and said, on leaving, 'that he would have a mission here, if he had to go to Rome for the priests.' Our zayat is visited by many from morning till night. Yesterday there were forty or more at one time, and hundreds during the day."

THE CHINESE.—The following paragraph occurs in an account of the last days of Rev. David Abeel, the missionary who died at Albany a few months ago:—

"Up to the closing scene of his labors on earth, Mr. Abeel expressed the strongest desire for the welfare of the Chinese. At one time, speaking of their intellectual character, he said, 'I wish I could have persuaded some young Chinese friends to come to this country. More intelligent and talented men I never met with; they would surprise you all.' At another time, speaking of the Chinese language, he said, 'there is not a word in the language that expresses the true idea of sin, and the only word which comes nearest to it is one signifying a breach of politeness.'"

SABBATH LECTURES.—A course of Lectures on the subject of the Sabbath, by Eld. THOMAS B. BROWN, is to be commenced on the evening of first day next, Nov. 29th, at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in Eleventh Street, between Bowery and Third Avenue. We do not hesitate to promise those who may attend, that they will hear the subject treated in an able and candid manner.

THE HUTCHINSON FAMILY.—These noted and favorite singers have given two concerts in New York within a week past. They were welcomed by crowded houses of enthusiastic admirers. Their popularity abroad, it seems, has not in the least diminished that noble simplicity by which they were characterized at home. They come among us not exclusively to accumulate money, but with an evident desire to make their music subserve the cause of humanity and freedom. For this reason, as well as for the intrinsic merit of their performances, they deserve success.

WHO PAYS FOR TEMPERANCE PUBLICATIONS.—It is so common for persons to receive gratuitous copies of publications devoted to temperance, and other reforms of the day, that they seem to forget that it costs money to print such things. But in order to print and circulate matter upon any subject, somebody must pay the bill. A letter from Mr. Delavan to the World's Temperance Convention, shows who pays for some of the temperance publications. He speaks thus of the establishment of the American Temperance Journal:—

"Major General Stephen Van Rensslelaer, of Albany, generously contributed the funds to distribute gratuitously the first 20,000 copies of this Journal, and subsequently several thousand dollars more for the free circulation of other temperance documents. This gratuitous distribution resulted in a subscription list of 200,000 paying subscribers."

He also states that "subsequently, fifteen gentlemen gave each 1,000 dollars for the distribution of temperance publications, and to support temperance lecturers;" and remarks that "it has been found by experience that funds thus employed by men of wealth, bring certain and speedy returns, by furthering morals among the masses, and thus increasing the security of person and property." He further says, that "on one occasion the underwriters in New York gave $1,500 to furnish every seaman belonging to our mercantile navy with a single temperance document. They did this on mercantile principles, believing it to be a very wise and profitable application of their funds."

MONUMENT TO CLINTON.—A correspondent of the New York Tribune urges the erection of a monument to the memory of DeWitt Clinton, in consideration of his efforts for the abolition of slavery. As early as 1797, he devoted his attention to this subject. In 1808—11, he introduced into the Senate of New York laws to prevent kidnapping, or the increase of slaves, and to punish those who should treat them cruelly. In his Message as Governor of the State of New York to the Legislature of 1820, alluding to the Missouri question, he says:—

"Nor can I conceal on this occasion the deep anxiety which I feel on a subject now under the consideration of the General Government, and which is unfortunately calculated to produce geographical distinctions. Highly important as it is to ally feelings so inauspicious, yet I consider the interdiction of the extension of Slavery a paramount consideration. Morally and politically speaking, Slavery is an evil of the first magnitude; and whatever may be the consequence, it is our duty to prohibit its progress in all cases where such prohibition is allowed by the Constitution. No evil can result from its inhibition more pernicious than its toleration; and I earnestly recommend the expression of your sense on this occasion, as equally due to the character of the State, and the prosperity of the Empire."

PAUL'S CRAFTINESS.—It is quite common for the advocates of what is called policy, in distinction from a course of invariable uprightness and integrity, to quote in their justification the language of the Apostle Paul. "Being crafty, I caught you with guile." To the attention of such, we commend the following paragraph from an article in the Christian Review:—

"There is one expression of the Apostle, which has been quoted, as justifying the sly, politic course on which we have been commenting. It is where, in speaking to the Corinthians, he says—'Yet being crafty, I caught you with guile.' Now any one, who will attentively consider the context, may be easily convinced that the apostle here speaks of a charge made against him by his adversaries. They accused him of using guile; but he proceeds to challenge attention to the course which he had pursued, in order to refute the charge. No, no; no man, inspired or uninspired, was more free from guile and double-dealing than the great apostle of the Gentiles."

A NOBLE EXAMPLE.—Rev. Thomas Malcomb is giving some account of the labors of colporteurs in connection with the Baptist Home Mission and Publication Societies. The following is from one of his letters:—

"The Deacon of the La Grange Church, Genesee Co., N. Y., has just gone to Wisconsin as a colporteur, supporting himself. At the age of 45, with a good farm and the comforts of life around him, he goes forth as a volunteer, not to bind around his brow laurels dipped in the gore of the battle-field, but a crown of rejoicing formed of redeemed souls. Such was the estimation in which he was held, that the churches in the vicinity raised a book fund of $200 for his use."

Ten thousand Russian Jews are expected to arrive in the Holy Land to settle there. This number will add about a third to the Jewish population in Syria and Palestine.

General Intelligence.

The Horrors of War.—The Louisville Journal publishes the following extract of a letter from Monterey, describing a most touching incident in the great battle. The poor victim should have a monument erected to her memory:

Camp Monterey, Oct. 7, 1846.

Hungry and cold, I crept to one corner of the fort to get in the sunshine, and at the same time to shelter myself from the bombs that were flying thick around me. I looked out, and, some two or three hundred yards from the fort, I saw a Mexican female carrying water and food to the wounded men of both armies. I saw her lift the head of one poor fellow—give him water, and then take the handkerchief from her own head and bind up his wounds; attending one or two others in the same way, she went back for more food and water. As she was returning, I heard the crack of one or two guns, and she, poor good creature, fell; after a few struggles all was still—she was dead. I turned my eyes to Heaven, and thought, "Oh God! and this is war!" I cannot believe but that the shot was an accidental one. The next day, passing into another fort, I passed her dead body. It was lying on its back, with the bread and broken gourd containing a few drops of water. We buried her amidst showers of grape and round shot, occasionally dodging a shell or twelve-pounder, and expecting every moment to have another grave to dig for one of ourselves.

Illness of Mr. Adams.—The Boston Daily Advertiser of Friday last, says that the venerable John Quincy Adams was on Thursday forenoon seized with a paralysis of his right side, which for a time rendered him nearly insensible. He had just left the residence of his son, Hon. Charles F. Adams, in Mount Vernon-street, in a state of health, when the gentleman with whom he was walking, suddenly perceived that he was laboring under some severe affection of his limbs, and was obliged to assist him to prevent his falling. He was conveyed back to his son's house, and received immediate medical aid. After a short time his consciousness returned, and he was subsequently much relieved, and able to converse, and we are happy to learn was not considered in immediate danger. Mr. Adams is about 80 years of age, notwithstanding which he has hitherto been able from the vigor of his constitution to endure unremitted labor like a man in the prime of life.

We are happy to state, says the Boston Daily Advertiser of Saturday, that the symptoms which existed at the time of the attack of Mr. Adams, have materially improved since our yesterday's notice. We have ascertained from his physician, Dr. Bigelow, that he has in a great degree recovered the power of articulation, and the use of the limbs of the affected side. He is free from pain, has the full use of his faculties, and though feeble, is able to sit up for short periods.

The United States and Turkey.—An English paper says that Letters from Constantinople speak of a victory which North American diplomacy has obtained in that city. Dr. Schmitt, an American missionary at Erzeroum, was lately treated in a very improper manner. Mr. Carr, Charge d'Affairs of the United States at the Porte, addressed a very energetic note to the Divan, and demanded, very categorically, and with a threat of North American cannon, immediate indemnification and satisfaction for this American citizen. The Porte seemed to have no mind to become acquainted in this manner with the American men-of-war, and ordered the Pacha of Erzeroum immediately to pay to Dr. Schmitt the required indemnity of £200 sterling, and to put in prison twelve of the rioters who had so ill-treated the missionary. Brother Jonathan has learned from his elder brother John Bull how such matters are most easily settled.

Albumen—A Cure for Dysentery.—The following is a translation of a recipe for the cure of this complaint, which was published by the physicians of Spain in the Gazettes of Madrid during 1840.

"Prepare a draught of Albumen, by taking the whites of forty eggs or more, and after whipping them well, sweeten the same, if necessary, with a small portion of the best double-refined sugar. Let the patient drink large quantities of this repeatedly, insomuch as to fill his stomach, administering clysters of the same as often as possible. The patient must maintain a total abstinence from diet of any kind. In a few hours after, the pains will abate, and in 24 hours the disease will disappear; if it do not, will be sure to disappear in 48 hours, provided the patient repeat the draughts as usual.

"The addition of a few drops of Orange flower water is highly beneficial."

Brief Enough!—The following is the body of the Proclamation of Gov. Stratton, of New Jersey, for a day of Thanksgiving:—

"Whereas the season is approaching when the people of this State are accustomed to render thanks to Almighty God for the fruits of the earth, and all the other blessings of his merciful providence, I do hereby appoint Thursday, the 26th day of November inst., to be observed as a day of thanksgiving and praise. I respectfully invite all persons to abstain from secular business, and assemble in their respective places of worship on that day."

The opinion is rapidly gaining ground in Canada (as we learn by the Kingston British Whig) that the Home Government have it in serious contemplation to unite the whole of the North American British provinces under one Government, having at its head a Viceroy, instead of a Governor General. Quebec is said to be the seat of Government, and Governors are to be appointed at Toronto, Frederickton, Halifax, St. John's, (N. F.) and Charlottestown, (P. E.) to administer the laws of each province separately, until the whole are consolidated into one statute-book, when other arrangements will be made.

It is further said that the Ministry have in contemplation to consolidate the whole of the remaining British possessions in America under another Viceroy, the seat of whose government is to be at Jamaica, with local administrators at all the other West India Islands, including the Bermudas; and some say, also, the territory on the main land, Demerara and Berbice.

SUMMARY.

The New York Tribune speaks as follows of a new way of punishing rogues:—John Brandon, a hard looking customer, was arrested in the second Ward for trying the doors in that vicinity. John was conducted to the office of the Chief of Police, and compelled to stand, pillory fashion, the gaze of the officers, who were invited to take a good look at the subject before them. This is called the 'spotting' operation, and is sure to cower the boldest thief when performed upon him. The object is to render as many of the policemen as possible familiar with the appearance of the rogues who infest the city. Pickpockets are perfectly horrified at the idea of being thus exposed, and when threatened with it, beg most piteously to be let off. A month's imprisonment is nothing, in their estimation, when compared with this newly established mode of 'spotting' cross boys.

The Granite Freeman says that there was a disgraceful fight between the Freshman and Medical Students of Old Dartmouth, on Sunday noon last, as they were coming out of the meeting-house. There was some damage of the assailable points of certain specimens of the "human face divine," such as eyes blacked, noses reddened, and teeth knocked out—but the marring of youthful beauty was stayed by the vigorous efforts of the President and Faculty, before any more serious harm resulted. The affair grew out of a most insufferable insult offered to the "Medics," by a Freshman, who had the audacity to take a seat with them in the meeting-house!

Considerable interest has lately been occasioned at Hamburgh, by the United States Consul having detected, among a number of emigrants who presented their passports for his view, previous to their departure for the United States, ten ill-looking scoundrels, all dressed alike, who on inquiry were found to be convicts from Mecklenberg, Sahuerin. What makes the matter worse is, that the Mecklenberg authorities actually gave these convicts certificates of good character. The United States Consul sent them back, with a strong remonstrance to their government against the iniquity of such a proceeding.

The Great Western brought out £30,000 in sovereigns, and the Acadia is reported to have about the same amount. This is the beginning of the stream of bullion which has been looked for, and which promises to continue until it has reached a very large amount. Even the freight money of our ships which will be sent home in bullion will amount to a large sum. It is calculated that from a million to a million and a half will be received within a month.

"Bankruptcies," says the Reforme, "are of daily occurrence in Paris. Petty merchants continue to shut up their shops; the pawnbrokers' offices are besieged with applicants; the savings banks will soon be empty, and the hospitals are crowded; 115,000 indigent depend upon public charity in Paris; the prisons are full, and the winter will throw about 100,000 workmen out of employment. Our prospects are indeed very sad."

C. M. Clay left on the 22d ult., in company with Col. Taylor, for Monterey, with an escort of 400 or 500 men—they had some $100,000, and we have had fears for their safety. Old Canales is at all times on the look out for such snaps. Col. Clay was thrown from his horse about the 15th of August, and dislocated the elbow of the right or sword arm, and was unable to drill, and by request of old Zachary, he joined the military family at Monterey

The Philadelphia Sentinel says that the work on the Illinois and Michigan Canal is now proceeding rapidly. Mr. Guthrie, the engineer of the pumping works, is now in Chicago. These works for supplying the Canal with water are to be put in operation by the 20th of June next. They consist of eight pumps, each 4 1-2 feet in diameter, six feet stroke, capable of raising 13,000 cubic feet of water per minute, worked by two steam engines of 63 horse power each.

The Buffalo Courier says that Mrs. Mary Ann Harris, wife of Dr. F. L. Harris, of this city, died on Sunday morning, under circumstances of the most painful character. On Saturday evening, as she was descending the stairs in her house, her clothes took fire from a light which she was carrying in her hand, and her person was dreadfully burned. She lingered through the night in great pain. Death at last relieved her sufferings.

Governor Chittenden, Chief Magistrate of Vermont, was of humble birth, and rose by the force of talent to his exalted station. Yet while Governor of the Green Mountain empire, he still continued to keep the same tavern, upon the steep hill-side, that he kept for many years before. One evening, a wagoner drove up and accosted him thus: "Governor Chittenden, as chief magistrate of Vermont, I render you all due homage; but as Landlord Chittenden, I'll thank you to turn out my horses."

During the week ending on Saturday, 14th inst., there were delivered from the State Canals at tide water 196,104 bbls. of flour, 211,105 bushels wheat, 34,857 do. corn, 92,302 do. barley, 781 bbls. beef, 768 do. pork, 734 do. ashes, 218,000 lbs. lard, 3,058 do. butter, and 4,254,900 do. cheese; of the gross value of two millions two hundred thousand dollars.

Miss Harriet Martineau is about to leave England again. In her last communication to a magazine to which she contributes, she says: "My Surveys have thus far been monthly. They must now intermit, and become irregular, for I am going forth on long, uncertain travel—to Egypt, and perhaps to visit some Asiatic countries. I cannot answer for what I may be able to send home some Surveys from the bosom of the Nile, or the base of the Great Pyramid.

It is stated as a remarkable fact, that the sea birds, the pulfin, guillemot, and razor-bill, cannot fly over the land at all, although they can rise from the surface of the sea with equal facility, mount to an infinite height, and fly with amazing rapidity so long as the sea is immediately beneath them, but no sooner do they fly above dry ground than they drop as if shot.

A gentleman arrived in town from the Copper Region of Lake Superior, informs us that the country was covered with about one foot of snow, and that nearly all the speculators and miners had come away for the winter.

A curious trial is going on in Washington. It seems that Gen. John P. Van Ness died in March last, leaving an estate worth $200,000. His brother, Cornelius P., administered to the estate, and calculated upon the possession of the property. But a woman has made her appearance, who claims to have been married to the General privately by a Philadelphia Alderman, who has since died. The evidence is mainly circumstantial, being in the form of letters, etc.

We learn of the decease, at Pensacola, of Foster Rhodes, Esq., U. S. Naval Constructor, in which art he is said to have been altogether unsurpassed. Mr. R. was a native of Long Island, and was, we believe, originally from Easthampton. It will be recollected that he was engaged with the celebrated Henry Eckford, while the latter was employed by the Turkish Government; and after the decease of the latter, Mr. Rhodes remained in that country for the purpose of completing the contracts which Mr. Eckford left unfinished.

A sad accident occurred on the 14th inst., about 3 miles from Geneva, on the premises of Mr. W. Dobbin. His son, Wisner Dobbin, and Thomas Gibbs, were employed in laying plank in the bottom of a well, when the earth gave way, burying them to the depth of eight feet. Assistance was procured as soon as possible, but it was near three hours before the bodies were recovered. They were found standing erect and embracing each other.

The Boston Chronotype gives an account of the organization of "the Benevolent Bacchanal Society of Free Drinkers." Among the officers are to be "The Great Grand Puncheon, Great Grand Hogshead, Great Grand Pipe, Great Grand Half-pipe, Great Grand Barrel, Great Grand Fifteen Gallon Jug, Great Grand Gallon Jug, Grand Little Quart Jug, Grand Little Glass, Great Grand Toddy Stick, Great Grand Scribe, Great Grand Advocate, Great Grand Chaplain, Great Grand Pharisee, Great Grand Hypocrite."

In Massachusetts, Mr. Buckingham of the Boston Courier, and Mr. Bryant of the Barre Patriot, will be members of the Senate, and Mr. Hayden of the Boston Atlas, Mr. Bowker, of the Boston Traveler, Col. Schouler of the Lowell Courier, Mr. Hawley of the Hampshire Gazette, and Mr. Beebe of the Westfield Standard, are elected to the House of Representatives.

The ship General Washington sailed for Brazos St. Jago, says the Alexandria Gazette, with a cargo of upwards of 30,000 bushels of oats, 380 bales of hay, and 1,000 barrels of bread, together with other 'entertainment for man and beast,' destined for the army in Mexico. The General Washington has also on board a number of kegs and jars of preserves, pickles, &c., for the invalid soldiers on the Rio Grande.

The "Church of England Quarterly Review" says, the Wesleyan Conference territorially covers every parish in England, with 1,685 ministers under its orders, 15,000 local preachers, and 30,000 leaders, stewards and trustees, with 468,313 members of society acknowledging its sway, and perhaps 2,000,000 hearers affording their countenance. The immense amount of their chapel and other real property has been estimated at more than three millions sterling; while the annual revenue of the body, from every source, is probably not much less than a million.

From 30 to 40 houses were laid in ruins, and 10 persons wounded, at St. Pierre, Newfoundland, by the explosion of a powder-magazine, which was occasioned by an incendiary, who designed to destroy the whole town. The wretch perished in the attempt.

A silk dyer in England uses 12 cwt. of soap weekly, to discharge the oily matter from the silk, and this forms about 6,000 gallons of strong soap suds, which he has used on his farm with wonderful success. It is full as good as guano.

The largest mails probably now made up in the United States, are those between New Orleans and the seat of war. The mail received here after the capture of Monterey, contained 14,000 letters, and the ordinary mail ranges from 6,000 to 8,000.

A man in St. George, N. B., by the name of Owen Boag, a Roman Catholic, was excommunicated by the priest of that parish for selling a small lot of land to the Baptists on which to build a meeting house.

In England, the distance between London and Exeter via. Bristol, 220 miles, is regularly run over in four hours and a half. The same distance, between Liverpool and London, is accomplised in six hours.

Charles Thomas, the negro convicted of the murder of Ford, was executed in New York, on sixth-day, Nov. 20. In his last moments he professed a belief in the efficacy of Christ's atonement, and declared himself ready and willing to die, believing that God had pardoned his sins.

An immense solar spot, about 30,000 miles in diameter, is now visible between the sun's center and his eastern limb. Several other spots of less magnitude, which recently crossed the sun's disk, have now disappeared.

The editor of the St. Augustine News has been presented with some fine fresh olives, the growth of that place. The soil and climate of that State are said to be well adapted to the cultivation of this fruit. The olive oil which is imported into the United States is valued at $50,000 annually.

The N. Y. Tribune says that on Tuesday last, at the Andraeum, in Nassau-street, a gentleman was suddenly taken with apoplexy, and fell senseless upon his face on the marble floor, bruising himself shockingly. Dr. Turner, the Chrono-Thermal Physician, who was passing by, was called in, and directed preparations for applying the cold dash to his head. Another Physician coming in and feeling the patient's pulse, asked Dr. T. whether it would not be better to bleed him?—to which the reply was, "Not for the world." The cold water was then applied from a pitcher, with entire success, the patient coming to his senses in less than ten minutes, to the astonishment of the surrounding crowd. This is the tenth case of recovery of the kind in this city within a short period. On inquiry, it turned out that the patient was himself a member of the medical profession.

A telegraphic dispatch from Buffalo, dated Nov. 22d, says: The steamer Helen Strong, reported ashore at Barcelona, is a total wreck. Two lives lost. Sixteen bodies have been found drowned near Barcelona. Several vessels were fallen in with on the lake, bottom upward. A schooner was beached opposite Quincy, and four lives lost. The steamers Indian Queen, New Orleans, and Madison, are all wrecked. Great fears are entertained for the safety of others.

Mr. Joseph Grenell, of Newark, N. J., has invented and patented an improvement in the method of constructing the rails of railroads, which, it is said, promises to reduce their cost, and at the same time increase their stability and security. The plan, among other advantages, allows of the same rail being used on one edge first, and when that is worn, to be reversed from side to side, and when worn on one surface to be changed top and bottom, and again reversed; by this he has four wearing sides, or surfaces, to one rail.

MEDICAL NOTICE.

DR. CHARLES H. STILLMAN takes this mode of giving notice to those who have made inquiries, that he is prepared to receive under his care a limited number of patients affected with diseases of the Eyes, particularly those requiring surgical operations, at his residence, Plainfield, N. J.

"RELIGIOUS LIBERTY ENDANGERED BY LEGISLATIVE ENACTMENTS."

The General Agent of the American Sabbath Tract Society gives notice, that he has mailed copies of the new tract with the above title to all the pastors of Sabbath-keeping churches, in hopes that they will present them to the people of their charge, and solicit subscriptions to aid in their distribution. There are reasons why efforts should be made immediately to give this a wide and general circulation, particularly in the States of Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. A little effort, if put forth now, on the part of each individual to whom this is confided, it is believed, will be sufficient to give the tract a circulation that will tell effectually against the efforts of coercionists. The trifling sum at which it is afforded ($10 per 1,000) will enable the churches in the above States at least to circulate 50,000 copies of it during the present winter. Will not our friends make the effort? If those who receive copies of it are not able personally to attend to this matter, it is hoped that they will see that it is put in good hands to urge it forward.

In addition to the above object, the Society are greatly in want of funds to enable them to publish a larger work on the same subject, for which they now have the manuscript; and also to finish the work of George Carlow now stereotyping, together with new editions of Nos. 1 and 2, of which they are now out, and for the support of an agent to distribute tracts and lecture on the question wherever an opportunity may offer. Some of the members of the Society, and also some of the auxiliary societies, are behind in giving their PROMISED support. Will not such see to it that their dues are forwarded without dealy? PAUL STILLMAN, Gen. Agent.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

THE WEEKLY CHRONOTYPE,

IS published weekly by White, Potter & Wright, at No 2 Devonshire Street, near State Street, Boston. Terms—$2 a year, in advance. For $5 three copies will be sent to one address. A liberal discount will be made to Agents who pay for a larger number of copies. Edited by

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

This paper is not bound to the creed or cause of any clique, association, party, sect or set of men, but expresses freely the opinions of its editor at the time, and of such contributors as may honor it with their thoughts, or be supposed by the editor to do so. It will be his endeavor to give such a variety and quantity of matter as to meet the wants of every enlightened family, and especially of those which seek more light. He will not only give the daguerreotype likeness of Time as he passes, but will examine every new thing that he meets, and some things that are old, without fear or favor. Where he cannot convince, he will try to be good-natured. Where he cannot satisfy himself of the truth, he will be contented to confess his ignorance. In short, he will endeavor to help forward, in a neighborly way, every thing but Humbug. That he will endeavor to knock down and drag out, even if it should cling to the throne of political power or the horns of the sacred altar.

He will not take an oath never to be wiser. He will not scorn truth, though it may come from an enemy. He will not flatter the poor because he is one of them. He will not hate and abuse the rich because he is not one of them. But he will endeavor to establish a better understanding between the extremes of society—showing both ends that happiness is most likely to be found between them—consisting in a great measure in a mutual endeavor to abolish idleness, disease, poverty and roguery.

With these general purposes, it is the prime object of the editor of this paper to get an honest living.

NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER.

This paper, being made up of such portions of the contents of the National Intelligencer proper as can be compressed within the compass of a single newspaper, continues to be issued and mailed to subscribers on Saturday, at two dollars a year, payable in advance in all cases—no account being opened with subscribers to the weekly paper.

To bring this paper yet more nearly within the reach of such as desire to take by the year a cheap paper from the seat of General Government, a reduction will be made in the price of it where a number of copies are ordered and paid for by any person or association at the following rates:

For Ten Dollars six copies will be sent.
For Twenty Dollars thirteen copies: and
For each sum of Ten Dollars, above twenty-eight copies will be forwarded; so that a remittance of Fifty Dollars will command thirty-seven copies.

Miscellaneous.

CHINESE CUSTOMS.

We have thought that some facts in relation to China and the Chinese, gleaned from various sources, might not in this connection be devoid of interest to our readers.

The women of China are degraded beings, and for the most part extremely ignorant. The greatest joy is expressed at the birth of a son, but the deepest sorrow at the birth of a daughter. Mothers frequently dash their female children against the stones and kill them. Mr. Shuck says that during his residence in China, he saw but one woman who could read in her own language, and of more than 170,000,000 of females in the country, it is not known that one has ever yet professed the Christian religion. Wives and daughters do not entertain male company, though servants do. They are not allowed to mix with the male population; and what is something remarkable, they seem contented and satisfied with their degraded condition.

In architecture, the Chinese are behind all other nations that lay claim to civilization. Their Pagodas, or houses for idol worship, are somewhat imposing, but their buildings in general are of a very inferior appearance. The usual building material is brick of a bluish color, and the walls are lined with a composition of so enduring a nature that houses are often seen two hundred years old. The common dwellings are seldom over forty feet high—few of them have windows, and generally they have but the ground floor, which is covered with the same composition as the walls, and is very hard and dry. The roof is formed of heavy tiles, and carved pillars of granite or stone are set up to aid in supporting it. The gardens are very tastefully arranged with hills and pools and bridges, having Mosaic figures on the hard pathways. The house is entered by a door that opens into a court-yard through which the visitor passes to the door of the inner house, where sits the porter ready to usher him into the audience room. Lanterns are hung up before each house with the name of the owner painted on them, so that they answer for door-plates. In each court-yard is a tank or pool of water; and within each inner house is to be found a tablet which is considered the tutelar deity of the family, and is styled the god of the threshold. In the whole country, more than 30,000 idol gods are worshiped by the natives. The houses of the lower classes of the people are formed of two or three thicknesses of matting, fastened on poles, like a tent. But boats are also much used to live in, particularly about Canton, where there are 75,000 of them, forming streets, and taking up more than half of the river. The shops are usually lighted by a skylight, and are kept very neat and clean—which is not the case with the houses generally. These shops or stores have upper rooms, which are kept for the benefit of aristocratic customers, whose dignity will not allow them to trade upon the same level with common people. Stair cases are seldom used, ladders supplying their place. The whole fronts of the shops are taken out, and two counters in each, which run at right angles, are thereby with the goods spread out upon them exposed full to view. The signs are generally placed in a perpendicular position, about one foot wide, twenty high, and painted with various colors, which gives them a gay and lively look. The streets are very narrow in the cities, few in Canton being more than eight, and most of them not over five feet wide. The doors are not numbered.

The city of Canton, said to contain a population of one million, covers an area of about ten square miles. It has 85 commercial exchanges, and about 500 temples for idol worship. The police of the city is an efficient one. On each street a high tower is erected, from the top of which an officer overlooks the thoroughfare, and by striking a gong gives notice of the occurrence of any fire or disturbance.

The beggars in the cities are by the government distributed about in various neighborhoods, each having his own bounds. They go round from shop to shop, and persist in their solicitations for alms, until they are listened to and their demands are satisfied. They cannot be thrust out until they have received something, generally a small coin equal in value to about a half-penny.

The pagodas of which so much is said, and of which there is so great a number, are seldom used. They are built for the sake of bringing good luck upon the neighborhood, and are always seven, nine, or some other odd number of stories high. The porcelain tower of Nankin is two hundred feet in height, and is the most imposing of which we have any account.

The diet of the Chinese is of a variety of kinds. Rice is the most common article. It is eaten in several forms, but is never boiled. Wheat is also used, but is not made into bread. In these, as in other respects, the people seem to act precisely contrary to the habits of other nations. The "upper ten thousand" make use of some kinds of meat that would not be very palatable to an American stomach. Dogs and puppies, cats and kittens, are raised in pens, fattened for the table, and sold alive in the markets for food; but their flesh is so expensive that none but the rich can indulge in such luxuries. Rats, horseflesh, frogs, and snakes, are also eaten with avidity, but the former are a great rarity, as their shyness makes it hard to catch them. Nothing that comes from the cow is in vogue—neither butter, milk, nor cheese, is tolerated. Vegetables of many kinds are abundant. Pickles and preserves are much used, and even Irish potatoes are preserved as fruit is preserved in this country. Cherries, strawberries, and currants, so common here, are never known there. Peas are produced plentifully, and much pork and wild game are used. Tea and a weak kind of spirits, distilled from rice, are the only beverages they drink. Men, women, and children, smoke tobacco, but chewing and snuffing are not common.

The richer classes dress in silks, fine cottons, and furs, and as they have no fires in their houses, they often put on in winter from six to ten suits, one over another. Dandies in China are as common as in other countries, and they deck themselves in the most gaudily colored clothes. The garments of the women are similar to those of the men, from whom they differ but little in their manner of dress, save in the style of their head ornaments. Yellow, blue, and purple, are the favorite colors. Shaving the front part of the head is now a universal practice among the dandies, it having existed with them about a hundred years. The origin of the custom of cramping the feet of the females is uncertain. Some attribute it to the inventive genius of husbands, who adopted it in order to keep wives at home! Bandages are applied to the child's feet when it is only fifteen months old, and so effectually is the growth prevented, that the feet of grown females measure only about three inches in length where this treatment is practiced. Neither the Tartars nor the common women adopt this strange custom, the principal evil arising from which is the indolence it produces in consequence of the inability of the female to walk with comfort. The soles of the shoes of the men are so thick, that it has been said of them that instead of having floors in their houses they carry them about with them attached to their feet.

CHINESE GRATITUDE.

An English merchant, by the name of C——, resided in Canton and Macao, where a sudden reverse of fortune reduced him from a state of affluence to the greatest necessity. A Chinese merchant, named Chinqua, to whom he had formerly rendered service, gratefully offered him an immediate loan of $10,000, which the gentleman accepted, and gave his bond for the amount. This the Chinese immediately threw into the fire, saying—'When you, my friend, first came to China, I was a poor man; you took me by the hand, and, assisting my honest endeavours, made me rich. Our destiny is now reversed; I see you poor, while I am blessed with affluence. The bystanders had snatched the bond from the flames—the gentleman, sensibly affected by such generosity, pressed his friend to take the security, which he did, and then effectually destroyed it. The disciple of Confucius, beholding the increased distress it occasioned, said he would accept of his watch, or any like valuable, as a memorial of their friendship. The gentleman immediately presented his watch, and Chinqua, in return, gave him an old iron seal, saying—'Take this seal, it is one I have long used, and possesses no intrinsic value, but as you are going to India, to look after your outstanding concerns, should fortune further persecute you, draw on me for any sum you need, sign it with your own hand, and seal it with this signet, and I will pay the money.'

THE BEGGAR.

At the time of a great famine, on a cold, disagreeable winter's day, a woman came to a village and began begging for charity. Her clothes were very clean, but torn and patched in many places. The snow was falling fast; her head was wrapped in a handkerchief; in one hand she carried a stick, in the other a basket.

From most of the houses she got only a very scanty succor; even some rich persons drove her away with harsh words.

There was but one poor peasant who invited her into his house, where there was a good fire in the grate; and his wife took a cake out of the oven and gave the woman a large slice of it.

The next day every one where this stranger had asked for charity were invited, quite unexpectedly, to sup at the castle. When all the guests were arrived, they proceeded to the dining room, where they saw two tables laid out. One was very small, but on it were many exquisite dishes. The other was large and magnificent, and a great number of plates; but they held out scanty nourishment, such as a piece of half musty bread, a couple of potatoes, a handful of bran, and some held nothing at all. While the guests were wondering what this meant, the lady of the castle spoke thus: "The beggar who passed through the village was myself; I disguised myself in order to judge for myself of your charity, in this time of need. The two poor people whom you see here, took me in and treated me as best they could. In consequence, they will eat at my table to-day, and I will give them a pension.

"As to you, regale yourselves with the offerings which you gave me yesterday, and which you see here upon your plates; I repeat to yourselves, while you do honor to the good cheer, that thus you will be treated in the next world."

This story is not fabulous. The heroine of the adventure was called Lady Gray.

ROMANCE AND REALITY.

We stated, recently, that the Sultan of Turkey had, on his return from his journey, authorized the first mixed marriage that has taken place in Turkey. The following particulars of this affair, which are of a highly romantic character, we copy from the Augsburg Gazette:

A rich Bey belonging to Constantinople, observing that this only daughter had been ill for some time, and was very evidently failing, he summoned a number of physicians, and, as their remedies did not seem to improve the condition of the young lady, he himself applied to her and questioned her. She confessed to him that she had conceived a violent passion for a young Armenian tailor, who was a Christian, and that she wished to marry him. This embarrassed the Mussulman to a great degree. He had recourse to the physicians, to learn if a malady caused by love could ever be fatal; and upon their replying in the affirmative, he thought of reconciling the wishes of his daughter with his own religious prejudices. He therefore repaired to the shop of the tailor in question, and ordered a suit of clothes, on the condition that the master of the shop, himself, should bring them. A few days after, the Armenian brought the Bey the apparel he had ordered. The latter received it, gave him his pay, and made him a present in addition, requesting him to wait a moment, as he had another order for him. The Bey withdrew, and immediately after two black slaves appeared, and invited the tailor to follow them. They conducted him to the Harem where the young daughter of the Bey resided, who, when she first saw the tailor, fainted; but soon recovering herself, she threw her arms around his neck with the warmest effusions. The same moment the Bey entered suddenly, ordered the tailor to be seized by his slaves, declared that he had profaned his Harem, and that, in virtue of the laws he must either turn Mussulman, marry his daughter, or suffer death. The Bey supposed that the young man, placed in such an alternative, would prefer marriage and the renunciation of his faith. But he was mistaken. The Armenian declared, resolutely, that he would not abjure his religion. The Bey, in hope of bending the Armenian, kept him some time a prisoner in his house; but, as the young man persisted in his resolution to remain faithful to his belief, he caused him to be arrested and handed over to the tribunal. There, the Armenian alledged in his defence, that he was strictly chargeable with no crime, because he had been compelled to act as he had done. The young lady was called as a witness, and she confirmed the allegations of the accused. After a long deliberation, the judged urged the young Christian to embrace the religion of Mahomet, in order not to expose himself to a capital condemnation. As the Armenian refused to accede to this arrangement, the judge condemned him to be beheaded. Nevertheless, in consideration of the circumstances which operated in favor of the condemned man, the magistrate ordered the sentence of death to be submitted to the Sultan in order that his highness, if he judged it proper, might pardon the culprit, or grant him a commutation of punishment. The Sultan not only gave an entire and complete pardon to the young man, but ordered the marriage to take place.

A Lady of Lions.—My friend had a visit to pay to M. L—, a French gentleman, and I accompanied him. The house was open, and on entering the inner court, we knocked at the door of a saloon; we were requested, by a female voice, to "come in." M. R— opened the door; then, with an air of consternation, shut it immediately, and told me there were two lions going about at liberty in the saloon. He had scarcely told me this, when Madame L— herself opened the door, and begged of us to enter, observing that we need be under no alarm, as the lions were perfectly tame. We followed the lady, and as soon as I sat down, the male lion came and laid his head on my knee. As for the lioness, she leaped on the divan beside Madame L—, looking at us from time to time, and sometimes giving a growl like an angry cat. These two animals were about seven years old, and were very great pets. Madame L— called away that one which seemed to have taken a liking to me, and I was not sorry to see him withdraw peaceably. We took our departure, carefully avoiding any hasty movements. When I was out of the house, I felt that I could breathe more at my ease. I was amazed to find that a lady could muster courage to trust herself with two such companions. [Algeria in 1845.

The Mother of Napoleon.—The family of Napoleon, says Allison, though noble, had not been distinguished, and had suffered severely from misfortune. The mother of the great captain, who was marked by great beauty, and no common firmness and intrepidity of mind, shared in the dangers and fatigues of her husband, at a period of great trial, and was engaged with him in some expeditions on horseback. His father died at the age of thirty-eight; but the want of paternal care was more than supplied by the mother, to whose early care and solicitude Napoleon in after life ascribed his promotion. On one occasion he expressed the opinion that the future good or bad conduct of the child depends entirely on the mother. Though left a widow in the prime of life, the mother of Napoleon had already borne thirteen children, of whom five sons and three daughters survived their father. She lived to see one of them wearing the crown of Charlemagne, and another seated on the throne of Charles X.

The 'Compensation' of Worldly Condition.—"We do not often envy any human being; but we confess to having entertained something of this feeling toward the possessor of a beautiful house and charming grounds, which we passed daily, in a fashionable quarter of the town, during the pleasant October days. But one morning we saw the owner among his grapes and flowers and fountains; a tall, care-worn, thin-visaged man, who stood trembling on 'his pins' and surveyed his beautiful possessions. Ah! thought we, there is a 'compensation' in every thing. 'What pleasure can it be to thee,' says an eloquent divine, 'to wrap the living skeleton in purple, and wither alive in cloth-of-gold, when the clothes serve only to upbraid the uselessness of thy limbs, and the rich fare only reproaches thee, and tantalizes the weakness of thy stomach.' So 'let us to our mutton,' with that good digestion which waits on an appetite that is most like a hungry anaconda's." [Knick.

Influence of Railroads on the Weather.—The German Schnellpost says, that the well-known natural philosopher, Dr. August, has made a communication in a Berlin paper, in which he states, that when an extended portion of the earth's surface is brought, by a net of railroad tracks into connection of electrical conductors, the accumulation of electricity in the lower part of the atmosphere is prevented; as the iron tracks effect a constant electrical equilibrium between remote regions. By this means a violent storm is rendered unlikely, and if one should arise, it would undergo a considerable diminution. The doctor states it as a fact, that since Berlin has become the focus of several railroads, there have been no violent storms; and all that have risen, have had a rapid and gentle termination.

"Mistaken notions," says the Literary Gazette, "respecting the different sorts of bread, have given rise to much waste. The general belief is, that the bread made of the finest flour is the best, and that whiteness is a proof of its quality; but both of these opinions are errors. The whiteness may be, and generally is, communicated by alum, to the injury of the consumer; and it is well known by men of science, that the bread of unrefined flour will sustain life, while that of refined will not. Keep a man on brown bread and water, and he will live and enjoy good health; give him white bread and water only, and he will gradually sicken and die."

The late trial of the New Bedford Bridge case, elicited some important statistical facts. One is, that the commercial tonnage of the port of New Bedford, is greater than that of any port in the kingdom of France. Another is, that the tonnage of Boston exceeded that of any port in Europe, except London. Even London is but about 15,000 tons ahead of New York—the tonnage of the former being 566,152, and that of the latter 550,856. The tonnage of Great Britain scarcely excels that of the United States, and in a few years will probably be far behind it.

VARIETY.

A real valley of death exists in Java. It is termed the Valley of Poison, and is filled to a considerable height with carbonic acid gas, which is exhaled from crevices in the ground. If a man or any animal enter it, he cannot return; and he is not sensible of his danger, until he feels himself sinking under the poisonous influence of the atmosphere which surrounds him; the carbonic acid, of which it chiefly consists, rising to the height of eighteen feet from the bottom of the valley. Birds which fly into this atmosphere drop down dead; and a living fowl thrown into it dies before reaching the bottom, which is strewed with the carcases of various animals that have perished in the deleterious gas.

There died throughout England and Wales, between the 1st of July, 1839, and 30th June, 1840, 5,247 females, aged 85 years and upwards; whereas, of the same age, there died only 3,954 gentlemen, leaving a "balance" in favor of the old ladies of 1,298. Among the females who died, 71 had passed the age of 100, but only 40 males. In the three years ending June 30th, 1840, the total number of deaths among males throughout England and Wales was 518,007, while the deaths among females were only 499,058, giving an excess of male deaths, in three years, of 18,049.

We saw recently at a Bleeker-street mansion, a house within a house—that is, a two-story baby-house of elegant gothic architecture built upon the drawing room carpet, says the New York Tribune. It contained five rooms, doors, windows and staircase complete throughout, and two little Misses of 10 and 12, after bidding us good morning, retired within their own dwelling but to repeat the adieu from a second story open window. The miniature furniture was of the richest description, and the cost of the whole plaything, which, by the by, was so constructed upon hinges that it could be turned into as compact a thing as a clothes horse, was only $750. The same gentleman paid $150 for a dog house to rest the bones of a fovorite pet Newfoundland.

Of the interesting inhabitants of Pitcairn's Island, in the Pacific, it is said that they live almost entirely on fruits and vegetables. Their diet is very simple, yams constituting their principal food. They rise early, and take much exercise. Their strength and agility is so great that the most expert English sailors cannot match them at wrestling and boxing, carrying weights, &c. Sickness of any kind is rare among them.

Talleyrand once addressed a letter of condolence to a lady who had lost her husband, in the words, 'Oh, Madam!' In less than a year the lady was married again, and then his letter of congratulation was, 'Ah, Madam!' A Quaker at Liverpool once sent a letter to a correspondent, asking the news, by a simple note of interrogation, thus '?' His friend replied in the same vein, '0.'

The late census of Boston has developed some curious facts. There is no "upper ten thousand" in that city—not if to keep servants be necessary to the distinction. Only three hundred and forty families in Boston keep more than two domestics; and but four thousand four hundred and one families keep them at all; while fifteen thousand seven hundred and seventy-four families live in household independence, doing their own work entirely.

Coffee grows in Arabia, Persia, the Indies and America. Its use as a beverage is traced to the Persians. It came into great repute in Arabia, about 1454; and passed thence into Egypt and Syria, and thence, in 1511, to Constantinople, where coffee-houses were opened in 1554. Some ascribe the discovery of coffee as a beverage to the prior of a monastery, who, being informed by a goatherd that his cattle sometimes browsed upon the tree, and that they would then wake at night, and sport and bound upon the hills, became curious to prove its virtues. He accordingly tried it on his monks to prevent their sleeping at Matins, and he found that it checked their slumbers.

A shell from Lieut. Rowland's howitzer having penetrated the roof of the Bishop's palace, buried itself in the body of a Mexican, and there exploded, tearing the poor fellow to rags. An American soldier, on viewing the scene afterwards remarked, "That man is killed very dead. I never saw a man killed so dead before."

In Lombardy there is a celebrated cedar tree, eleven Milanese cubits in circumference, the roots of which are said to extend under a great part of the town. In the sixteenth century the tree was about the same size, and it is supposed to be nearly two thousand years old.

A young lady, dressed in male apparel, lately started on foot from Vermont in order to see her uncle in Pittsburgh, Pa., for the purpose of asking his assistance for her father, who had been formerly in affluent circumstances, but who, having met with misfortune, was at the time lying in a Vermont jail, for another person's debt.

In London the people pay a penny for being shaved, and sixpence for a newspaper; but in this country they pay a sixpence for being shaved and a penny for a newspaper. This is a most barbarous way of doing business. The printers are on the wrong end of the stick.

The New London Star says that "a citron melon vine which sprung from a stray seed last spring, on the farm of Noah Chapman, Esq., grew to the enormous length of fourteen hundred and forty feet, and produced forty-two citrons."

"Represent me in my portrait," said a gentleman to his painter, "with a book in my hand, and reading aloud. Paint my servant also, in a corner, where he cannot be seen, but in such a manner that he may hear me when I call him."

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

A FARM FOR SALE,

IN the township of Piscataway, State of New Jersey, lying north-east from New Brunswick, half a mile from the Bridge, half a mile from Snyder's Mills, and in full view of the railroad car-house. Said farm consists of about ninety five acres of land, in a good state of cultivation, and well adapted to raising grain and vegetables. It has a good variety of fruit trees, considerable wood, and five acres of salt meadow. The house is in good repair, and has a well of water at the door. There is also a new barn, sheds, &c. For farther particulars call on Dr. Nelson Stelle, No. 146 Grand-st., N. Y.—Mr. Burris, No. 1 Oliver-st.—or on the premises of JONATHAN S. DUNHAM.

THE ORIGINAL SABBATH UNCHANGED.

BY JAMES A. BEGG.

The Observance of the Weekly Sabbath enjoined upon the Israelites.

Those opposed to the continuing obligation of the Sabbath, found an objection upon another text, to which we will now advert. In the land of Moab, before the children of Israel had crossed the Jordon, Moses took farewell of them with a solemn declaration of the counsel of God. In doing so, he recapitulated what God had done for them: "And Moses called all Israel, and said unto them, Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and keep, and do them. The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day. The Lord talked with you, face to face, in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, (I stood between the Lord and you at that time, to shew you the word of the Lord, for ye were afraid by reason of the fire, and went not up into the mount,) saying, I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me. Thou shalt not make thee any graven image, or likeness of any thing that is in the heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the waters beneath the earth; thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them; for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, and shewing mercy unto thousands of them that love me and keep my commandments. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh His name in vain. Keep the Sabbath day to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee. Six days thou shalt labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates; that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou. And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence, through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." The remaining six commandments follow, after which he adds, "These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly, in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice; and He added no more; and He wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me." Deut. v. 1—22.

It is obvious that the servant of God is here repeating, as he expressly declares, what God had spoken from mount Sinai; and that, therefore, there can be nothing inconsistent or contradictory between this and the former statement already cited and considered. It has, however, been argued, from the call in the 15th verse, to remember their Egyptian bondage, that the Sabbath was an institution peculiar to the Israelites, and appointed solely in consequence of their deliverance from the thraldom of Pharaoh.

On this I would remark, in the first place, that those who urge this objection overlook the fact that there was a feast appointed for the express purpose of commemorating that signal display of God's grace. "And Moses said unto the people, Remember this day in which ye came out from Egypt, out of the house of bondage; for, by strength of hand, the Lord brought you out from this place; there shall no leavened bread be eaten. This day came ye out, in the month Abib. And it shall be when the Lord shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which He swore unto thy fathers to give thee, a land flowing with milk and honey, that thou shalt keep this service in this month. Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened bread; and in the seventh day shall be a feast to the Lord. Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days; and there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee; neither shall there be leaven seen with thee, in all thy quarters. And thou shalt shew thy son in that day, saying, This is done because of that which the Lord did unto me when I came forth out of Egypt. And it shall be for a sign unto thee, upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes, that the Lord's law may be in thy mouth; for with a strong hand hath the Lord brought thee out of Egypt. Thou shalt therefore keep this ordinance in his season, from year to year." Exod. xiii. 3—10. The Passover is, therefore, a feast to the Israelites peculiarly appointed to be celebrated in commemoration of their deliverance, being a sign unto them "because of that which the Lord did when they came forth out of Egypt." It was designed to be "a memorial" unto them of the love and power which were so signally displayed for their deliverance—that, trusting in His "strong hand," His law might be in their mouth. But while the wonders of Creation, in their supreme importance, were already commemorated on the seventh-day, from week to week, the new festival which was to form the memorial of Israel's deliverance, is appointed to be only from year to year, and that at the very season of their leaving the land of Egypt.

But, farther, it is to be observed, that even in the passage cited, on which the objection is founded, (Deut. v. 15,) Moses is pressing upon the attention of the house of Israel the law given them before, at Sinai—spoken by God's own mouth, and inscribed on stone by His finger—and is recounting its precepts, and enforcing it upon their obedience, rather than altering the covenant. We are not, therefore, to lose sight of the fact, that the reason then given by God himself for the observance of the Sabbath, and which stands as a part of the Fourth Commandment, is that He rested on that day from all His work. It is worthy also of remark, by those who imagine that the Sabbath was designed only for the Israelites, and that because of their deliverance from Egypt, that there was no reference whatever to this in the giving of the law, of which Moses here only reminds them. Their exodus was, as we have seen, of an earlier date than this promulgation of the law from Sinai; yet, although the deliverance from Egyptian bondage was then so much more recent than now when Moses speaks, the creation of the world is the only reason embodied in the fourth commandment for the observance of the weekly Sabbath.

But the import of the motive so put for the sanctifying of the seventh day by all the households of Israel, seems obvious enough when taken in connection: "Keep the Sabbath day," says Moses, "to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee. Six days thou shalt labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou. And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence, through a mighty hand, and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." Ver. 12—15.

Here, then, it is to be observed, that Moses is not professing to teach them some new thing, but urging their observing what had been already received, and that, too, for the reason already assigned: "Keep the Sabbath day to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee." Now the command of God was, that the seventh day should be sanctified, because that in it He had rested after all His creation work, and Moses now enforces upon them, that they should so sanctify it in remembrance of the Creator's rest, as the Lord had previously commanded.

The full observance of the Sabbath is then enforced upon all within their gates, and an additional motive specified why liberty thereon should be granted to servants—a motive derived from what the Lord had done in working out deliverance for them when they themselves were bondmen—"and remember that thou wast a servant, in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence." This call to consideration of their having been the servants of cruel task-masters, evidently stands in connection with the demand, immediately going before, that the Sabbath should be kept by all within their gates. No feeling of avarice was to tempt to the employment of their servants on the hallowed and blessed day,—"that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou; and remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt." No service was to be exacted on that day, so that the servant might rest; and the consideration of their own servitude, enforced with Egyptian rigor, which probably had deprived them almost entirely of this privilege, was now to weigh with them as a reason for dealing more righteously with those under their control, that servants as well as masters might enjoy the refreshing which God has given. And by this they are reminded, that if they should claim for themselves God's own day, by exacting the labor of their servants, He who had spoiled the land of Egypt, and destroyed Egypt's mighty men, bringing them forth with an outstretched arm, was still the same merciful and righteous God, to avenge upon themselves, in like manner, their unrighteous demands of service on the day which had been sanctified, because on it He had rested and was refreshed. [To be Continued.

A Sabbath well spent,
Brings a week of content,
And health for the toils of to-morrow;
But a Sabbath profaned,
Whate'er may be gained,
Is a certain forerunner of sorrow.

I LOVE TO LIVE.

'I LOVE TO LIVE,' said a prattling boy,
As he gaily played with his new-bought toy;
And a merry laugh went echoing forth,
From a bosom filled with joyous mirth.

'I love to live,' said a stripling bold—
'I will seek for fame—I will toil for gold;'
And he formed in his leisure many a plan
To be carried out when he grew a man.

'I love to live,' said a lover true,
'Oh, gentle maid, I would live for you;
I have labored hard in search of fame—
I have found it but an empty name.'

'I love to live,' said a happy sire,
As his children neared the wintry fire;
For his heart was cheered to see their joy,
And he almost wished himself a boy.

'I love to live,' said an aged man,
Whose hour of life was well nigh ran—
Think you such words from him were wild?—
The old man was again a child.

And ever thus in this fallen world,
Is the banner of hope to the breeze unfurled;
And only with hope of life on high,
Can a mortal ever love to die.

I LIVE TO LOVE.

'I LIVE TO LOVE,' said a laughing girl,
As she playfully tossed each flaxen curl;
And she climbed on her loving father's knee,
And snatched a kiss in her childish glee.

'I live to love,' said a maiden fair,
As she twined a wreath in her sister's hair;
They were bound by the chords of love together,
And death alone could these sisters sever.

'I live to love,' said a gay young bride,
Her loved one standing by her side;
Her life told again what her lips had spoken,
And never was the link of affection broken.

'I live to love,' said a mother kind—
'I would live a guide to the infant mind;'
Her precepts and example given,
Guided her children home to heaven.

'I shall live to love,' said a fading form,
And her eye was bright and her cheek grew warm,
As she thought in the blissful world on high,
She would live to love and never die.

And ever thus in this lower world,
Should the Banner of Love be wide unfurled,
And when we meet in the world above,
May we love to live and live to love.

CHRISTIAN JOY.

We are not only allowed, indeed, but we are commanded to rejoice in the Lord. No joy has so good or firm a foundation as that which is to be found in the Lord, who has bought us, and in whom we are blessed with all spiritual blessings. But whoever wishes to rejoice in the blessings purchased for us by Jesus Christ, must be in him, intimately united to him by faith, renouncing sin, and all the false pleasures of the world. This true union and communion with Christ, is the source of joy, the only source. Hence will follow a willingness to love, obey, and glorify him as long as we live. But, if instead of trusting in Christ, and his consummate atonement, we rely on our own virtue, and consequently, try to stand upon our own foundation, we shall never enjoy one moment's peace of mind. Our virtue and holiness are, and ever will be, imperfect; we shall, therefore, always have reason to confess before God—'If thou wilt mark what is amiss, Lord, who shall stand before thee?' Let us therefore seek for pardon, peace, and joy, in Jesus Christ; and having found them, let us be grateful and obedient. But though we should be as holy as any of the apostles, let us beware lest we put our confidence in any thing except the sufferings and atoning death of Christ. [Swartz.

JUDSON AT BRADFORD.

It was my happiness to have an interview with this beloved missionary at Bradford. It was at the birth-place and early home of his first wife, the brilliant, the devoted Ann H. Judson. As we walked to the house, he remarked that the appearance of the town had very much changed during thirty years' absence. There was one spot, however, he knew there was one dwelling, though changed in its appearance somewhat, which had been the scene of too important and thrilling events ever to be forgotten. It was a hallowed spot, where the early partner of his toils, in solemn consecration to God, gave herself to the cause of missions.

I was desirous of seeing the portrait of this remarkable woman, which, I had learned, was sacredly kept in the family. We entered the house, and after an introduction to the sisters of Mrs. J.,—the mother had gone to rest—Judson led the way to the parlor, where hung the image of his wife, beside which was his own portrait, recently taken. Her presence seemed to fill the room, and I felt it almost sacrilegious to speak above a whisper. We stood in silence for some moments, gazing on that expressive countenance, that dark, full, liquid eye, turned upwards, as if holding converse with the heavenly world. None of the likenesses in her memoirs resemble this portrait.

At length he broke the silence, by exclaiming, in warm and impassioned language—'It look just as she did when alive—that is the very dress she used to wear—it looks just like her.' He, then, with much emotion, informed me, that when he for the first time came here, not knowing her portrait had been taken and was in the house, he went into the parlor, where he had spent so many hours with her, to reflect on the past. As he was walking the room, living over the scenes in which she had been the principal actor, he happened to lift his eyes, and lo! the image of his thoughts was before him. So unexpected was the sight, that he was overcome. Yes, there she was before him just as she looked when she returned from America, to toil with him and for him to the death.

I remarked—'those eyes wept many tears for you when in prison.' I touched a tender chord in his heart. His eyes immediately filled with tears, still gazing with the deepest earnestness on the canvass before him. Standing in the home of her youth, in the very room where they had spent hours together, how busy was memory with the past! His thoughts sped their way across the ocean—he traversed the streets of Ava—he entered the gloomy prison of Oung-pen-la—he stood beneath the Hopia tree, on the banks of the Salwen. We at length turned away; I, with such feelings as I never had before—he, to muse on the past, with such feelings as the scene and that quiet Sabbath morning would naturally call forth. [Ch. Reflector.

THE MINISTRY OF THIS AGE.

No preceding generation of ministers ever saw such a day as this! Such openings for usefulness; such calls to exertion; such multiplied and extensive fields whitening to harvest; such abundant and potent means for doing good to mankind. To live now, is a talent put into your hands for which you must give an account. Have you an ardor of piety, a tone of moral sentiment, a spirit of enterprise, corresponding with this day? If not, give yourselves no rest till you in some good measure attain them all. If an ancient heathen rhetorician, in giving directions for the attainment of the "sublime," in writing, could say—"Spare no labor to educate your soul to grandeur, and to impregnate it with great and generous ideas;" much more may the same language be addressed to a candidate for the gospel ministry, in the present stage of the Church's progress. Take unceasing pains to get large views of ministerial furniture, ministerial duty, and ministerial success. Strive to "educate your souls to grandeur" of conception, and grandeur of wishes, and hopes, and enterprise for the moral benefit of your fellow men. Aim high. Let no petty plans satisfy you, either as to acquirement or exertion. Every one of you, however humble his talents, if really disposed to make the most of what God has given him, might cause his influence to be felt to the ends of the earth. [Dr. Miller.

TOO LATE.

I once saw a man upon whose head had beaten almost eighty winters, rise in a large congregation, to request the people of God to pray for him. Never shall I forget the scene. There he stood, covered with the locks which time had whitened, leaning upon the top of his staff. He felt that he was a sinner. His locks had whitened in the service of Satan. With a trembling voice and quivering lip, he said, "I wish to go to Jesus, but I fear it is too late." A thrill ran through the assembly. Too late! An aged sinner tottering on the banks of eternity, with a world of glory yet to be lost or won.

Aged friend, is it too late for you? Has the heavenly messenger been grieved for the last time, and left you, like the shattered oak of the plain, to ripen in the sun for the consuming flames? O, turn your trembling footsteps to Calvary; peradventure, there is mercy yet in store for thee. Hasten to that fountain opened for sin and uncleanness. Linger not for a more convenient season. Fall into the hands of mercy. Then shalt thou lean upon the top of thy staff and worship; then shalt thou go down into the dark valley and shadow of death, leaning upon the arm of Jesus; then shalt thou be gathered into the great company of patriarchs, apostles, and saints, where immortal youth shall bloom forever upon thy temples, and where death is never known.

SCRAPS ON EDUCATION.

Gold is more frequently found in grains than in lumps, and is not less valuable on that account. So with knowledge. Fragments when united make up the intellectual storehouse. John Adams said in an epistle to his wife—'The education of our children is never out of my mind. Train them to virtue. Habituate them to industry, activity and spirit. Make them consider every vice shameful and unmanly. Fire them with ambition to be useful. Make them disdain to be destitute of any useful or ornamental knowledge.' What says Horace Mann? 'Every friend of education, who insists upon qualifications superior to the present, is bound to do his part towards furnishing facilities and encouragements by which they can be acquired. We cannot consequently denounce a state of things which we do nothing to improve. Martin Luther has said of education: 'In every age, even among the heathen, the necessity has been felt of having good schoolmasters in order to make any thing respectable of a nation. But surely we are not to sit still and wait until they grow up of themselves. We can neither chop them out of wood, nor hew them out of stone. God will work no miracles to furnish that which we have means to provide. We must, therefore, apply our care and money to train up and make them.

An Example for Teachers.—Mrs. Wesley was a woman of singular talents and rare excellence, so learned that she was able to prepare her sons for college. She had the chief education of her numerous children. One day her husband, the worthy rector of Epworth, was busy with his learned labor, probably with his "Commentary on Job." Mrs. Wesley was teaching the children in the same room, and had occasion to repeat again and again the same lesson. Mr. Wesley, perhaps a little irritated by his abtruse studies, arose and said with much feeling, "My dear, why do you teach the child the same thing twenty times over?" She replied with feminine meekness, "Because, my love, nineteen times won't do."

The use of Time.—The celebrated Lord Coke wrote the subjoined distich, which he strictly observed in the distribution of his time:—

Six hours to sleep—to law's grave study six,
Four spend in prayer—the rest to nature fix.

But Sir William Jones, a wiser economist of the fleeting hours of life, amended the sentiment in the following lines:—

Seven hours to law—to soothing slumber seven,
Ten to the world allot—and all to heaven.

IN A PET.

Some men are always in trouble. Do what they will—turn this way and that, and every thing is wrong. It is nothing but murmuring with them from daylight till dark. At their homes—their places of business, and in the street, they are in a pet, and are eternally making wry faces.

"Rather than pass an easy day,
They fret and chide the hours away,
Grow weary of the circling sun,
And vexed that he should ever run
The same old track; and still and still
Rise red behind yon western hill,
And chide the moon that darts her light
Through the same casement every night."

The above, written a century and a half ago, is as true as when it was penned by Isaac Watts. In our day we have just such complaining characters. Nothing pleases them—nothing below the sun. The pleasures of life they never taste. All is wormwood and gall. They see no beauty to appreciate—no scenery to enjoy. 'Tis fret and jaw, wry faces and puckered mouths with them eternally.

Dr. Franklin's Views of War.—In what light we are viewed by superior beings, may be gathered from a piece of West India news, which possibly has not reached you. A young Angel of distinction, being sent down to this world on some important business, for the first time, had an old courier spirit assigned him for his guide; they arrived over the seas of Martinico, in the middle of the long day of obstinate fight between the fleets of Rodney and De Grasse. When through the clouds of smoke he saw the fire of the guns, the decks covered with mangled limbs, and bodies dead or dying; the ships sinking, burning, or blown into the air; and the quantity of pain, misery and destruction the crews yet alive were thus with so much eagerness dealing round to one another; he turned angrily to his guide, and said—'You blundering blockhead! you undertook to conduct me to the earth, and you have brought me into hell!' 'No sir,' says the guide, I have made no mistake; this is the earth, and these are men. Devils never treat one another in this cruel manner; they have more sense, and more of what men vainly call humanity.'

[Letter to Dr. Priestly.

On taking out your Watch during Sermon.—This is no small exploit. There are many advantages arising from it. In the first place, it will be known that the man has a watch. In the second place, he will show that the sermon has not very much affected him. Thirdly, it will be a modest hint to the minister that he has preached about long enough, and should bring the sermon to a close. Fourthly, it will take up a portion of the time and attention, so that a part of the sermon, certainly, (if not the whole,) will pass by the man as the idle wind, and be lost. Fifthly, it will show what estimate the man puts on the message of grace. Sixthly, it will attract the notice of others around, and turn away that attention from the message in like manner. Seventhly, it is an act very much in harmony with a passage of Scripture: "When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn; and the Sabbath, that we may set forth new wine." Amos 3: 1. [Essex Reg.

The Throne of Grace.—If you are a Christian, the throne of grace is yours. Your Father is seated on it. Your Saviour has sprinkled it with his own blood. The Holy Spirit draws you sacredly to kneel before it; and the promise, when there, is, "Open your mouth wide, and I will fill it." What an honor, to approach the King of Kings! Were we to have an audience with an earthly monarch, we should deem it an era in our history, and boast of it through life. But you, and I, and others, may have audience with the King of the Universe. Nay, we have liberty to approach him at any time, and under any circumstances. Have we wants? He can supply them. Are we in trouble? He can extricate us. Do afflictions press our souls? He can mitigate and remove them. Does sin pollute our joys? With him is the fountain of cleansing. Does Satan vex our souls? He invites us to his arms as our refuge. All relief and every blessing is from God. [Newton.

Cheerfulness.—It may be wrong, but we cannot help it—we have a repugnance amounting almost to dislike for that class of Christians who think more of a long face than of a pure heart—more of outward forms than of heart-felt devotion—who are exceedingly particular to observe the outward appearance of sanctity, while the heart is the seat of pride, and like a cage of unclean beasts. We do not, we cannot think much of that kind of religion which is made a cloak for the body; our beau ideal of religion is one that adorns the heart. We do not believe that God looks with disapprobation upon a placid countenance, or that he regards with anger a cheerful heart. It may be well enough for those who think him an implacable tyrant, to clothe themselves in sackcloth, and shroud themselves in gloom; but we like to see those who have a better faith and brighter hope, live better lives, and wear brighter countenances.

Beautiful Illustration.—We find the substance of the following illustration in the writings of one of the old English divines:—

What, in reality, is the distance between the faithful Christian on earth, and the spirits of the just made perfect? It is as if in an apartment fill with bright lights, and burning clearly, there were one, dimmed by the earthern vase which subdues and almost darkens its lustre. You have only to shiver the vase of clay, and the light it enshrines shall beam forth, undimmed among its fellows. Such may be the transition by death, of the spirit of the Christian from the "earthly house of this tabernacle," to its full, unclouded shining amidst kindred lights in heaven.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 3, 1846.

SABBATH LECTURES IN NEW YORK.

The first of a series of lectures upon the subject of the Sabbath, before the New York Sabbath Tract Society, was delivered by Rev. Thomas B. Brown, on Sunday evening last, at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in Eleventh-street. It was an able effort, and was listened to by a numerous and attentive audience.

The speaker stated distinctly in the outset, that his object was to show that the first day of the week is not the Sabbath of the Bible—that on the contrary the seventh day is still, as it always was, "the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." He intended also to show, not only that Sunday is not the Sabbath, but that it is not even a sacred day in any sense. The Scriptures never call it the Sabbath, nor even the Lord's day. The application of the latter term to the first day of the week by the generality of Christians, is entirely gratuitous. That the "old fathers" made such an application of the term was admitted, but it was merely conjecture on their part that John intended by it the first day of the week. Their conjectures, however, soon assumed the air of confidence, and they finally asserted it dogmatically. It became at length very popular to speak of the Sunday as the Lord's day; but in the lapse of time even this term, with all its apparent sacredness, became insufficient to secure for the day the honor that some desired for it. The Puritans therefore invented the term "Christian Sabbath," in order that they might with some show of propriety bring the fourth commandment to bear upon it, and at the same time endeavored to cast a stigma upon the seventh day by calling it the "Jewish Sabbath." Thus terms were invented that are found no where in God's Book, nor are the ideas implied by them Bible ideas; all which would be shown more fully in the progress of the lectures. If then the Scriptures never call the first day of the week the Sabbath, nor even the Lord's day, it is thus left without any name to designate its sacred character. And if, said the speaker, the Holy Spirit has left it there, why cannot man leave it there? If God, who sees the end from the beginning, has not seen fit to guard the day with some name expressive of its sacredness, why should man attempt it? Has God left his work for man to mend? But as if the Almighty had committed an oversight, impious man undertakes to amend the matter!

It was also stated, that not only was the day left without any inspired name to show that it was holy, but that all the circumstances recorded as having transpired on the first day of the week could be perfectly well explained without the necessity of supposing it any thing more than an ordinary working day.

The speaker then went on to declare, that his object was to urge obedience to the law of God, which says, "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God;" that the question concerning the day of celebrating our sabbatical devotions was of great importance, notwithstanding some thought that the difference of a day could be of no account in the sight of God. But it is not merely a question concerning the day of worship; other highly important considerations were involved, making the Sabbath controversy one of the most important that comes within the pale of polemic theology. 1. The validity and and everlasting equity of the moral law were deeply concerned. The fact that Christians found themselves already in the violation of the fourth commandment, and in the devout observance of another day, in which they desired to persist, led them to start the question, whether under the gospel dispensation the law of God was binding as a rule of duty, or whether it was not superseded by a new law. Not willing to give up the Sunday festival and return to the observance of what the law requires, they are led to reason perversely concerning the claims of the law, and by artful and imposing sophistry to cover up its glory. 2. As a necessary consequence, they fall into mistaken views concerning the great and glorious work of redemption. For redemption having respect to the law, and its design being to uphold the law and guard its honor, it is impossible to suppose the law abrogated without falling into some notion about redemption very different from that which orthodox Christianity teaches. Indeed, such premises, followed out to their just results, end in exploding the doctrine of atonement altogether. 3. The substitution of Sunday for the Sabbath had vitiated the whole system of theology. It was an error in the creed of theologians, and as they did not love to appear inconsistent, they were driven to labored efforts to make this error harmonize with all the truth they hold. Hence the force and meaning of many passages of scripture were explained away, so that they might not clash too roughly with their error, but have at least a seeming consistency with it. Thus their whole system of religion—notwithstanding it embodies much truth—becomes corrupted to so great an extent, that much of its saving power is taken away. If we would have the gospel prove the mighty power of God to the pulling down of strong holds, as it once did, these human traditions and vain reasonings must be purged away from it.

The speaker then followed with a rapid sketch of the steps by which the church had degenerated from its primitive purity, showing that such degeneracy had run parallel with the neglect of the Sabbath and with the loss of the true doctrine on that subject. The Reformation, glorious as it was in most respects, left this point in a great degree untouched. The efforts made by a few to revive the observance of the Sabbath proved too feeble for the mighty odds against them. The Sunday festival was retained, and by the great mass of Christians is yet retained. This, however, is in accordance with prophecy, that "times and laws were to be given into the hands of the man of sin until a time, and times, and the dividing of time." Until the fulfilment of that period, we must expect to mourn over the wide-spread profanation of God's holy day. The lecturer, however, expressed his conviction, that among all the professed followers of Christ, there were at least some chosen spirits who would, upon obtaining a knowledge of their duty, stand forth as witnesses for God's Law.

☞ The subject of the lecture on next Sunday evening will be the nature and design of the Sabbath—a standing testimony against Atheism and Idolatry; and hence the indispensable necessity of observing it on the seventh day of the week.

THE JEWISH RABBIES AND THE SABBATH.

Many of our readers are aware, that a number of distinguished German Rabbies have established what they call an Assembly, to meet yearly, for the purpose of discussing any and all questions of interest to the Jewish people. Their third meeting was held at Breslau in July last, and continued eleven days. The most important question which was brought under consideration related to the proper observance of the Sabbath, and in the discussion of this question five days were occupied. The difficulty seemed to be, to reconcile the strictness of the rules laid down by Jewish authorities for keeping the Sabbath, with the discharge by Jews of the duties which they owe to the State and each other.

There was one party, calling themselves the orthodox reformers, who adhered strictly to the Talmud, and would not consent to any modification of the rigor with which the Sabbath had heretofore been observed. The only remedy which they proposed for the evils complained of, was that Jews should employ Gentiles to perform those offices which the Jewish customs or laws prohibit on the Sabbath day. Thus they were ready to provide for the opulent, who are able to employ others, but would leave the poor, who must work with their own hands, under the same burden as before.

There was another party who took the Bible for the basis of their arguments, and maintained that reason ought to retire with reverence before the book of God. They contended that the law of the Sabbath was explicit, and that it positively forbade all labor upon the seventh day of the week, or Saturday. Of course they were decidedly opposed to performing labor under the plea of necessity, and also to changing the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, which had been boldly proposed by one member of the Assembly.

There was another party still, who professed to hold fast only to the spirit of the Bible. They attached importance to the injunctions of the Bible relative to the Sabbath no farther than they could be conveniently applied to our times; and hence they were indifferent as to the day of the Sabbath, whether the seventh day or the first day, provided a day of rest was secured.

After a discussion of five days, in which the views of each of these parties were freely presented, the Assembly came to the following decisions:—

1. (Unanimously.) It is one of the most sacred duties of the Jewish teacher, as well as of each individual Israelite, to promote the restoration of a worthy observance of the Sabbath, as a day of sacred rest; it is therefore necessary to insist upon the sacredness of the Sabbath, and to show the importance of increased attention to public worship, and the domestic observance of that day.

2. The celebration of Divine worship in a manner worthy of the Sabbath, is of such preeminent importance, that no labor undertaken for its promotion, although otherwise unlawful, can be prohibited; every action, therefore, is permitted, which is connected with the performance of public worship in a proper manner, or which renders it possible for an individual to take part in public worship for his edification.

3. If a cessation of labor should endanger existence, it is permitted to continue the same on the Sabbath by means of Gentiles.

4. (Unanimous.) No religious duty is violated by procuring or rendering assistance, in especial cases, where temporal welfare, property, or the means of existence, is in imminent danger.

5. (Unanimous.) Wherever life is in danger, whether one's own or that of others, that of an Israelite or of a Gentile, it is not only permitted but commanded to use, even on the Sabbath, every possible means for prevention or rescue.

6. The excessive severity of the existing laws relative to the observance of the Sabbath is injurious, and ought to be mitigated as much as possible. The Assembly therefore declares that those very strict prohibitions, which require a a state of complete inactivity on the Sabbath, are carried too far, and are not binding.

7. These definitions which have been adopted by former teachers, with a view to modification, but in a form which gives them the appearance of evasions, ... are inadmissible, and moreover superfluous as regards short journeys, which are not for purposes of business.

8. Mental exertion does not violate the Sabbath.

9 (Unanimous.) To promote the welfare of the State is such an imperative duty, that if a collision of duties takes place, the observance of the Sabbath must give way. The soldier is, therefore, exempted from the observance of the Sabbath, if discipline requires it. The public functionary must likewise perform his official duties, if it becomes necessary, on the Sabbath, provided that he endeavor to maintain the observance of the day of rest in his domestic circle.

Such are the decisions of the "Third Assembly of Rabbies," which embraced twenty-six distinguished doctors and scholars of the Jewish persuasion. It will be seen that, on the one hand, they modify some of those traditionary regulations which have made the Sabbath a burden instead of a delight. On the other hand, they give no countenance to those who would make the Sabbath a mere matter of convenience, and would change the day of its observance from the seventh to the first day of the week without authority. A party in Frankfort, (who have obtained some notoriety in this country by their proposition to change the day of the Sabbath,) have published a circular disclaiming all connection with the Assembly; reproaching the Rabbies for aspiring to hierarchal authority, and censuring them particularly "for their refusal to defer the Sabbath to the Sunday." But their number is small, and they are regarded by the Israelites generally as more Infidels than Jews.

THE SABBATH A MEMORIAL OF CREATION.

At the present time the Empire of China is open to the introduction of the Gospel; and millions, without a knowledge of the claims of the Sabbath, may be instructed in the law of God and in the faith of Jesus. Some, who feel sensible of the embarrassment which the observance of Sunday involves, in view of the express declaration of the fourth commandment, "the seventh day is the Sabbath," nevertheless justify themselves in their course by setting forth the GREAT FACT that the first day is observed. They will nevertheless admit, that if the seventh day were generally observed, it would be more consistent with the tenor of holy Scripture. Now to such we would present the case of the Chinese, who are without a Sabbath. Which day would you have them observe? Will you teach them a tradition, which is most emphatically contradicted by the law itself? The responsibility is yours to decide the question. But before the matter is decided, let us see the consequences fairly deducible from the premises most commonly stated as the ground of Sunday observance. It is every where told us, in the first place, that the first day is observed in commemoration of the resurrection of our Saviour. In the second place, we are told that it is called "Lord's day" by the Apostle John. For the sake of the argument, let us admit the premises; let us admit that not only the Apostles, but Christ himself, was the author of the institution. If then the first day of the week be required as a day of religious worship to commemorate the resurrection of Christ, it can be required of those only who are interested in that fact—those only, at most, who believe in the resurrection. This institution is, then, to the resurrection of Christ, what the "Lord's Supper" is to the death of Christ. They must both, from analogy, belong to the CHURCH, and be for the observance only of its members, or of those who are of the faith of Christ's resurrection; for what benefit can result from the celebration of the resurrection, to such as are not benefitted by the celebration of the death of Christ. Hence it may be affirmed, that whosoever participates in the celebration of the "Lord's day" unworthily, or without faith, SECURES DAMNATION TO HIS OWN SOUL. Will this doctrine do to teach the heathen? Yet it is what must inevitably follow, if the premises be consistently maintained. To us, however, it is but one of many proofs, that TRADITION is the real and only foundation of Sunday observance. At present this will suffice on this point. Now to the Sabbath. Who are interested in the work of creation? Are not all mankind? Can the celebration of this work be confined to the church? What has it to do with the members of the church, more than with the rest of mankind? It is true, that the institution affords an opportunity for the church to perform the work of evangelizing the world, by causing a suspension of labor among all the world for this very purpose. This is a circumstance which shows the wisdom of its institution. To the church it is a privilege; but God enjoins it upon all as a Law, to disobey which is SIN, as well for the Heathen as the Christian—as well for the Christian as for the Jew. The heathen must be made acquainted with this fact, that they may know their sin in this, as well as in the transgression of the other nine precepts of God's Law, and thus be able to appreciate the GRACE of Christ, which comes for their deliverance through the Gospel. If Sunday observance be a church institution, let it stand upon its own foundation for what it is worth. THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH; let it be proclaimed even among the heathen. LUTHER.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY FOR CHINA.—The Baptist Missionary Union has been desirous of sending three male missionaries to China this year. But the receipts for a while past have been much less than was expected, and the treasury is now nearly exhausted. On this account they have concluded to send only one missionary, Mr. Lord, with his wife, who will sail for the place of destination in December.

A CHRISTIAN MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION was formed in Albany in January last. It has now about 200 members, and a fund of about $600 on interest. Its initation fee is $3. It pays benefits to sick members at the rate of $4 per week; allows $20 in case of the decease of a member, and $10 of a member's wife, and provides for its "widows and orphans" by a special fund formed for that purpose.

CONNECTION OF PERSECUTION WITH OPPRESSION.

While I am called upon to sympathize with the victims of persecution among Sabbath-keepers, who, in the progress of events, under the guidance of a wise Providence, have induced a partial developement of that spirit of intolerance which is intimately connected with sectarian bigotry, I am also gratified that, although the occasion is to be regretted, a zeal for the defence of human rights is elicited, and many are excited to examine into the elements of our great social compact. I cannot rejoice in the sufferings of any of my brethren, but I am heartily glad that persecutions, however light comparatively, will always wake up the slumbering energies of man, and put in requisition those powers of mind, the exercise of which always tends to information. In this sin-stricken world, shrouded as with a mist of darkness, governed by influences contrary to the spirit of Christ, evincing an unseen but controlling power of evil too strong for our languishing faith and feeble moral powers to resist, it would seem that, to bring about the elevation of those long-hidden truths of equal rights to all, there is a necessity for some new prompter that is not ordinarily comprised in our motives of action. The persecutions of some of the Seventh-day Baptists, while they excite zeal for just redress, are calculated to lead to a train of reflections that will ultimately bring the honest Christian to consider other objects of sympathy, who are the victims of unjust legislation. We often know not how to do justice to others, until injustice is done to us.

In matters of religious concernment, legal coercion is the argument of tyrants. But the truth of God cannot be overthrown by such means. Truth and justice exist with him; for "justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne." To establish his kingdom on earth, his laws must have their representatives—must have an embodiment. Where then must we look for that representation, but among his humble, persecuted followers? It is not to be found among the proud majority of religionists, who would avail themselves of the "powers that be" to lord it over God's heritage.

The disturbing elements of anti-Christian proscription, which live and grow in man's obdurate heart, are not confined to the Catholic church, but are cultivated and brought to maturity among all those sects where a veneration for church usages, and a desire to control others, out-weigh a regard for the golden rule. The controlling motive of our social habits, in both church and state, giving character and effect to a corrupt public taste, is not calculated to allow the diffusion and practical application of those truths essential to the maintenance of that humility which constitutes the chief glory of the church. A reformation, amounting to a revolution, subverting the radical errors of this so-called Christian republic, is absolutely needed to establish security in the enjoyment of religious privileges. As in the commercial and political, so in the religious world, men seem to be governed by those propensities which are manifest among brutes, where the strong use their strength to overcome the more feeble. Under the influence of such propensities, any one of the sects having the ascendancy would not fail to use legal coercion, when the living principles of Bible truth were a standing rebuke to their error and pride.

Up to the present time, religion, pure and undefiled, could hardly be expected to flourish in this country; for, existing under the accursed influence of oppression, without any well-directed effort to destroy this fountain of pollution and crime, there must be, among all those who consent to the existence of such abominations, a morbid insensibility to moral rectitude, which necessarily destroys not only the beauty but the efficiency of the Christian religion. Being educated under the influence of this great national "sum of all villanies," sending forth its poison insidiously into every social circle, permeating this great commonwealth with ungodly prejudice against the "sanctioned and sanctified" chattels of American democracy, any true sense of justice to be found any where, can only be ascribed to the mercy of a long-suffering God. When we feel but the gentle touch of oppression's hand, which falls with terrible force upon 3,000,000 of our equal brethren, that touch vibrates through our nature, and renders active those powers of repulsion which are essential to the maintenance of equal rights against the encroachments of tyranny. To such an extent has slavery corrupted the various departments of government, that any hope of security from occasional molestation, while this example of domination is suffered to exist, is, in my opinion, a vain hope. Whatever may be the means employed to restore to the persecuted his constitutional rights, if we forget the poor slave, and do not plead his cause, and seek his liberty, with all that zeal and sacrifice which his necessities demand, we prove ourselves not only unworthy of the Christian name, but undeserving of even the precarious liberty we are permitted to enjoy. The axe must be laid at the root of this great upas tree; and as long as oppression exists, whether we feel it ourselves, or others are the unhappy subjects of proscription, however remote, of whatever nation or color, we are bound, by the most prominent principles of our religion, to exert our mightiest energies to "deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor," and rescue our country from the dominion of the falsehood that man can rightfully oppress his fellow man. D. B.

CHURCH PEWS.—A London paper says that at a meeting of the Pastoral Aid Society, held in London quite lately, Lord Ashley in the chair, the Bishop of Norwich strongly expressed his disapprobation of the plan of making private property of the interior of churches by filling them with pews. "The Church of England," he said, "ought to be the poor man's friend, but has it proved itself to be so? Where was the accommodation for the poor man in the parish churches of our country? Why, in aisles and retired spots, and in recesses, where he was excluded from the sight of his pastor. (Hear, hear.) It was long ago that he raised his voice against the tyrant monopoly of pews, and few did he find to support his efforts. But he had lived to see the day which he never expected, when it was becoming the prevailing opinion of the country, that the pew system was a monopoly which was not justifiable in any church. About three hundred years ago there was scarcely a pew to be found in the country. If that had existed till now, all the churches would be open to the many; and if, under such circumstances, some one, from superior influence or other causes, one day claimed the right to take exclusive possession of twelve square feet in a place of worship, all would have pronounced him a lunatic, and confined him accordingly. As those views had now spread and taken root, he hoped that the pernicious system of which he spoke would be entirely swept away."

"I HATE CONTROVERSY."

Many persons take great credit for not liking controversy, who would be exceedingly indignant if charged with unfaithfulness. Yet it is as truly a duty, in certain circumstances, to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, as it is to receive that faith. This declaration of hatred for controversy, therefore, when rightly understood, is a declaration of hatred for a part of the Christian's duty. Instead of being to us an evidence of goodness, it indicates a low estimate of truth, and a great love of personal ease. No doubt a controversial spirit may be carried too far, or it may be connected with unworthy motives and feelings. But the fact that a good thing may be abused, is no reason why it should be totally rejected. In another world men may be required to give account for what they have not done—for their talent buried—as well as for what they have done. Forgetting this, persons sometimes pass along very quietly, with a reputation for uncommon sanctity, who are either doing nothing for the world, or only making work for others to do over after they are gone. Here is an illustration exactly in point, which is copied from the Christian Examiner:—

"The pious and devoted John Newton had an extreme aversion to controversial discussion. He used to say, and was admired for saying, 'It is enough to preach the truth, for that being established, error would fall of itself;' but his course so completely destroyed his influence and usefulness, that he was compelled to leave Olney. And it also opened so wide a door for error, and false teachers, that one of the finest Churches was scattered and dissipated. While false teachers labored to carry off his people, they met with no opposition. When Dr. Scott succeeded Newton, he was not able to collect a congregation of 100 persons in a population of 2,500, for the very professors had gone after Antinomians, Arminians, and other sectarians. Had Paul been as averse to controversy as Newton, the false teachers of Galatia and Corinth would have supplanted him, and ruined those flourishing Churches."

HINTS ABOUT OUR OWN AFFAIRS.

Within a few months past, we have received many letters from our friends in different sections expressing their entire satisfaction with the general character of the Recorder, and their growing interest in its welfare. These assurances of confidence, it is scarcely necessary to say, have greatly cheered us amid the exhausting toils and cares incident to publishing a denominational paper. When we engaged in the enterprise, it was from a sense of duty, and with no other aim than to advance the cause of God and truth among the people with whom our labors are identified. Any evidence that this object is being attained, from whatever quarter derived, cannot fail to be a source of high gratification and a rich reward. But there are two or three things which yet trouble us, and with which we beg leave to trouble our friends. The publication of the Recorder was commenced with a list of subscribers altogether too small to defray its expenses. Our list has gradually increased, however, until we have now subscribers enough to support the paper, provided that they are all prompt in making their payments—not otherwise. Yet we are not satisfied with simply a support for the paper; we want to be able to circulate hundreds of copies gratuitously in places where there is reason to hope that they will do good. This we are not only desirous of doing, but are determined to do, just as soon as our income will warrant it. As a means of enabling us to do it, we have two requests to make, which we trust will not be forgotten. In the first place, we request every subscriber who is in arrears for the present or past volumes of the paper to foward us immediately the amount due, that we may be saved the embarrassment of having to do without means. In the second place, we request every friend of the paper to look about him for one or more new subscribers, that our list may be so increased as to furnish us with the means of circulating many more gratuitous papers throughout the country. The present seems to us a favorable season for giving attention to both of these requests; and we hope, before the opening of the new year, to have substantial proof that it is so. Shall we be disappointed?

General Intelligence.

WRECK AND LOSS OF LIFE.

On Wednesday and Thursday of last week a storm of unprecedented severity visited the seaboard, which occasioned great anxiety in New York for the safety of the steamboats on Long Island Sound. The worst fears were more than realized on Friday evening, by information received of the total wreck of the magnificent steamer Atlantic, and the loss of her captain, with between thirty and forty of her passengers and crew. It seems that the Wednesday afternoon passengers from Boston, reached Allyn's Point about midnight, when the Atlantic started with them for New York. Soon after leaving New London, the storm increased, and the wind changed, blowing a perfect gale. Just at this time the steam-pipe burst, which rendered the engine entirely useless. The anchors were immediately dropped, and the steamer rode through the night. On the following morning the storm continued, she dragged her anchors, and drifted towards shore. In order to give the wind a clean sweep, the smoke-pipes were first cut away, next the pilot-house, then the bulkheads, and afterwards a great portion of the freight was thown overboard. Thus she remained through the day, the wind blowing such a gale, and the sea so rough, that no assistance could be rendered her by other boats. About midnight of Thursday she parted one of her cables, there being four out, one attached to thirty hundred weight of furnace bars and the others to anchors. After this the gale continued to increase, and blew a perfect hurricane. She was driven still nearer the shore, but passed a point that all expected she would strike upon. She then drifted about eleven miles more, making in all twenty-two miles, which occupied about forty-eight hours of terrible uncertainty and suffering. She then struck, stern first, on a ledge of rocks on Fisher's Island, when a tremendous sea seemed to lift her up to the very top of the ledge; so far, indeed, as almost to throw her over on to the other side. This was the crisis in the disaster; it was terrible and heart-rending in the extreme. In five minutes after she struck she was in pieces. In these five minutes at least one-half of those on board the Atlantic were taken from time into eternity. Some were drowned, some crushed, and some frozen to death. The screams, the crash, the roar, of the sea, were dreadful.

There were six females, four children, and two infants among the passengers. All the females were drowned or crushed to death. Only one of the children was saved, and he was the only one saved of the family of which he was a member. His father, mother, married sister, and a younger sister, and two young brothers, were on board; all are dead. The poor little orphan thus saved, and thus thrown alone on the world, is only twelve years of age. The two infants were drowned, frozen, or crushed to death.

The following items are collected from the daily papers:—

Among the lost were several whose deaths will be widely and painfully lamented, especially Rev. Mr. Armstrong and Dr. Hassler of the Navy.

Rev. Wm. J. Armstrong, whose name is among the lost, was one of the secretaries of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. We learn that he conducted religious service on board the Atlantic on Thursday. He leaves a wife and five children residing in this city. He was a native of Mendham, N. J., but was at one time the settled Pastor of a Presbyterian Church in Richmond, Va.

The body of Capt. Dustan was brought to the city and taken to Staten Island, where his family, a wife and five children, one an infant, resides—all of whom were dependent on his exertions for support. The arrival of his body was the first intelligence received of his untimely fate.

A Mr. Partridge had in his company a Miss Jordan, who was coming to the city on a visit to his wife. All his exertions to save her were fruitless, in the last of which he nearly lost his own life. He escaped to the shore by swimming, having first divested himself of his clothes, with the exception of his shirt and pantaloons. The body of Miss Jordan was recovered, and has been conveyed to Boston, under the care of Mr. Partridge.

The passengers and crew suffered intensely from the cold, and could only keep themselves from getting utterly benumbed and helpless by wrapping themselves in blankets and walking about the boat.

Much of the property thrown overboard was very valuable—among the rest, it is said, was $7,000 worth of plate, and from $6,000 to $8,000 worth of lace belonging to a passenger.

The Atlantic is supposed to be insured for about $70,000. The machinery will probably be saved in good order. All who struck the beach were saved, those who struck the rocks were killed—boats, planks, and life-preservers were of no use.

The Atlantic had on board a draft for $35,000 from the United States on some Massachusetts bank.

Hon. Daniel Webster and Judge William Kent were passengers from Boston on Wednesday, and were prevented taking passage in the Atlantic by the appearance of the weather.

A Tale of Sorrow.—About six months ago, a widow lady came to this city from the State of Maine; she was the mother of five children, four of whom she brought with her when she came. Her chief purpose in coming here was to find employment for her family, whereby they might obtain a comfortable living and enjoy the comforts of home. About three months after taking up her residence here, her youngest daughter, about nineteen years of age, was taken sick and died; in the following week, a son younger than the daughter, also died; then in another week a young man, who was a boarder in the family, died; on the same week another boarder, a young man, was taken sick, went home and died in the following week; then on the next succeeding week another daughter died; and on Wednesday, the last of the four who came here with the mother, died also. The one who died on Wednesday was married about two months ago to a worthy and industrious mechanic of this city. They all died of the typus fever. These simple facts tell a sad tale of sorrow and bereavement.

The October Inundation in France.—The Loire had committed dreadful ravages between the plains of Aurec, Andrezieuz, and Roanne. The St. Etienne railway had been partly destroyed at Andrezieux. All the boats laden with merchandize, to the amount of 1,000,000f., lying in the canal of Digoin, had been sunk, and 1,000 hhds. brandy, each worth 800, and 1,500 casks of wine, has been lost. At Pouilly, 1,700 pieces (hogsheads) of wine of the country and of Beaujolis, had been carried away by the floods. The well in the Loire began to be felt at Nautes on the 21st, but the authorities had cautioned the inhabitants residing along its banks against its consequences, and no accident had as yet occurred. The Allier and the Loire, at their junction, became an immense sea. 1,400 laborers engaged in the construction of the railroad, would have inevitably perished, had not provisions been sent to them by a steamboat, which took the poor men on board and brought them to a place of safety. In the Valley of Orleans ten districts were entirely laid waste; 80 boats and 250 boatmen had arrived at Orleans from Paris, and were employed in carrying provisions and relief to the inabitants of the inundated country. Near Amboise the Loire had burst the great bank by which its course is partially restrained, and flowing with irresistible force through the opening thus made, had made an immense breach in the Orleans and Bordeaux Railway, which is there carried along an embankment. About four kilometres of this embankment are said to be entirely washed away, and the line for several miles, although it would not have been materially injured by an ordinary inundation, is supposed to have received so much damage that some months must elapse before it can again be opened for traffic.

Chagres.—This is a small town or village on the Atlantic side of the Isthmus of Panama. It contains a population of about 1,000 souls. These are nearly all native Indians, there being perhaps not a dozen Europeans, including Spanish, in the place. Streets there are none; the houses are built of bamboo, plastered with mud, and have mud floors. The people and their accommodations are of the most primitive description, and have probably retrograded in their condition since the first landing of the Spaniards. The old Spanish fortress still frowns in ruins above the bluff that commands the town. Its walls, bastions, curtains and ditches cover a large area, and for the artillery in use at the time of its construction, must have been a very formidable hold. Now, the rank foliage of tropical vegetation waves over its ramparts, and as a foreign vessel approaches the shore, the custom-house flag, raised by a revenue officer over its broken and discolored battlements, tells that the age of military glory has passed away forever.

SUMMARY.

Capt. Barstow, of packet ship Cambridge, of New York, has received through the hands of Mr. Buchanan, Secretary of State, a gold medal, with the portrait of Queen Victoria, which had been forwarded to the British minister at Washington, by order of the British Government. The medal is given to Capt. Barstow as an acknowledgement of his services in saving the lives of the crew of the British bark 'Lord Lynedock.'

Beatty's powder mills, situated about seven miles from Baltimore, were blown up on Monday morning, and the report thereof was so heavy as to shake the city of Baltimore, and to break many of the glass windows. Three large buildings were shattered in fragments over ten acres of ground. Of five men who were in the mill, nothing can be found but fragments, some of which were found 100 yards from the place. The quantity of powder exploded, was about 5,000 lbs.

A notorious blackleg was arrested on Tuesday morning, upon whose person was found a fine velvet vest, in the front part of which, between the outside and lining, was a thin tin case, opening with a spring, which contained a number of playing cards. It was so constructed that the contents could be easily extracted without being noticed, during the operation of play.

Mr. George Youngson, editor of the Pittsburgh Despatch, has been mulcted in $100 for assault and battery, and being unable to pay it, was compelled to go to jail. He is accompanied by L. Y. Clark, a carrier of the Journal, convicted of libel also, and fined $125. It appears that Clark libelled Youngson, who took satisfaction out of his hide, and hence the suit.

A certain Unitarian Society of Boston are about building a new church, and the building committee addressed a communication to a celebrated architect of New York city, asking him to furnish a plan for a church edifice, and to superintend the building of the same. Ten days after, an answer was received from him, in which he said that he could not conscientiously attend to it, because the building is to be used for Unitarian worship.

A gentleman writes from Rochester that the Railroad Company being restricted from carrying flour while the navigation of the canal continues, have made arrangements for storing flour free of charge until the canal closes, and then transport it at a cheaper rate than it is done by the canal.

An English paper mentions an instance of recent occurrence, in which a cat that had been put into a sack and carried from Innerleither to Edinburg, a distance of thirty miles, over mountains and fields, succeeded after a few weeks in finding her way back to her former residence.

The troubles at Nauvoo are not yet appeased. Some anti-Mormon women recently called on Gov. Ford at the Nauvoo temple to give him a lecture upon his duties. He declined to see them, and they departed, leaving a package for the Governor, in which was enclosed a petticoat. The female trophy was carried outside to the windward of the city, and three negroes, hired for the occasion, burned it with due honors.

Talking of false pretenses, says the Albany Knickerbocker, a gentleman of this city married a woman reputed to be rich, who not only turned out to be poor, but some seven hundred dollars in debt, which debt he had to liquidate! She assured him, however, that the debt was contracted for dry goods, which she bought to captivate him. Think of a fish paying for the hook with which he is caught!

No less than ten thousand barrels of onions are raised annually in the city of Salem and the adjoining town of Danvers.

Gen. Dearborn, in Hunt's Magazine, says that among one hundred merchants and traders, not more than three, in the city of Boston, have acquired independence. Another in the same Magazine states that of one hundred merchants on Long Wharf doing business in 1800, only five remained in 1840. They had all failed or died destitute of property. Of one thousand dealers with the Massachusetts Bank in 1800, only six remained in 1840. All the 994 had failed or died in poverty. The writer says, "he is a fortunate man who fails young."

A convention is to be held in the West to consider the powers and duties of the general government to assist, protect, and advance the inland commerce of the country, by the removal of dangerous obstructions from the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, and other rivers and highways of trade. St. Louis city has been recommended as the most suitable place, and the 10th of May, 1847, as the best time.

We noticed, says the Detroit Press, on the dock at the foot of Bates street, a mass of copper weighing about 3,000 pounds. It was found by the Baltimore Company in one of their mines on the Ontonagan river, and is the finest specimen we have ever seen. There are indications of silver in the mass, and the remainder seems to be almost pure copper.

On the banks of the river Parana, says a recent traveler, the quantity of sarsaparilla growing is so immense, that the waters, even below the Basada, have become strongly impregnated, so much so, that invalids, in time of peace, go up to drink of the great decoction, for the benefit of their impaired health.

It is stated that 180 steamboats have been built at various points on the Ohio river this season, the aggregate tonnage of which is 51,660 tons, and the cost $1,400,000. The total number of steamboats on the Ohio and Mississippi is stated to be 750, the tonnage of which is 160,000 tons, and the cost $12,000,000.

An editor who has probably suffered "some," tells the people how to stop a paper. He says—"Call at the office and fork up arrearages, and order it stopped, like a man, and not refuse to take it out of the post-office, and sneak away, like a puppy."

Charles Morler, convicted in Philadelphia for the murder of his wife, attempted to destroy himself in his cell in Moyamensing Prison by hanging himself with pieces of a sheet he had torn for the purpose, to a nail in the wall. The nail not being strong enough to sustain his weight, he fell upon the floor, and the noise alarmed the watchman. This wretched man is in a most frightful state of mind. He is continually haunted by the apparition of his murdered wife, who is ever before him—her horridly gashed throat, with the blood streaming from it, staring him in the face—and he begs for his immediate execution.

Mr. Williams, of the Georgia Regiment, in a letter to his father, dated Monterey, October 11, says: "The ranks of our regiment have been terribly thinned. We marched across the Chatahoochee river with nine hundred and ten officers and men, and to-day the regiment, all told, barely numbers six hundred, and hardly that. Though we have discharged many from sickness and disability—still we have deposited nearly seventy beneath the chapporal in the short space of four months."

Five hundred people in a church, during two hours, give off fifteen gallons of water into the air; which, if not carried away, saturates every thing in the building, after it has been breathed over and over again, in conjunction with the impurities collected from each individual. The effects of neglect in carrying out plans for ventilation, are shown in the production of three of the most frequent and formidable diseases which affect the human race.

Hon. James Pendergast died in the town of Carrol, Chatauque Co., on the 15th, in the 83d year of his age. Judge P. was one of the earliest pioneers of Chautauque, having been a resident of that Connty for more than forty years, and was always distinguished for great energy, purity and amiability of character.

We learn by a note from a respected citizen of Ledyard, that four or five acres of land on the farm of Mr. Henry Chase, Jr., on the east bank of Cayuga Lake, and near the line of Ledyard and Genoa, sunk a few days since, and has disappeared. We have not heard any of the particulars, but we are promised them by our correspondent.

The Sheriff of Rensselear Co., in this State, who acted as 'hangman' in the case of Hearty, was observed to cut the rope that launched the poor victim into eternity with his left hand. The reason he gave was this:—'I never could shake hands with my friends with a hand that had done such a deed.'

The Batavia Spirit of the Times announces the death of Gen. Josiah Newton of Alexander, which took place on the 19th inst. He was 62 years of age. Gen. Newton was one of the oldest residents on the 'Holland Purchase.'

A slip from the New Orleans Picayune reports a terrible steamboat accident which occurred on the 21st Nov., about seven miles below Natchez, in the bend of the river, by which some twenty or thirty lives were lost and a great number of persons were severely scalded. The steamboat Sultana, bound down the river, came in contact with the steamboat Maria, bound up, striking her just forward of the wheelhouse, and by the violence of the shock broke the connection-pipe of the Maria, by which between twenty-five and thirty deck hands and deck passengers were scalded, many of them so severely that there was no prospect of their recovery. The Maria sunk to within about two feet of her cabin floor within five minutes after the collision, drowning between twenty-five and thirty persons who were on the lower deck. The cabin passengers were all saved.

A young gentleman of the name of B. D. Twiss, in the twenty-first year of his age, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head, at Champlain, on the 7th ult. He had lately entered the Vermont University, and returned home greatly depressed in body and in mind. On the evening of the 7th, he retired to his chamber—shot himself as above stated—dying in about ten minutes after the family entered the apartment.

Captain Hosken is ruined. Not only have the underwriters refused to pay the insurance on the steamship Great Britain, but a resolution to insure no ocean steamer, which may be placed under the command of Capt. Hosken, has been passed by the underwriters at Lloyd's, and communicated to the Great Western company.

Jonathan Russel, of Philadelphia, has succeeded in making a stretcher which will stretch any or all parts of the boot or shoe by simply turning a screw. The screw, acting upon a lever in the boot tree, will stretch the instep, heel, or leg of a boot, as may be desired.

There are now over ninety packet ships which trade between New York and Europe; 53 to Liverpool, 18 to Havre, 8 to Glasgow, 5 to Marseilles, and 2 to Belfast.

Rev. Dr. Cogswell has resigned his offices of President and Professor of Theology in Gilmantown (N. H.) Theological Seminary, on account of the pecuniary embarrassment of the Institution; and instruction at the Seminary will be suspended until this embarrassment shall be removed.

A gentleman has sent to the editor of the Petersburg Intelligencer, a potato weighing nine and a half pounds, and a turnip weighing seventeen pounds.

There were seen about three weeks ago, a short distance below the mouth of the Ohio, twenty-two steamboats, all within sight of each other at the same time.

Thomas W. Dorr was nominated, by a meeting at Cranston, to represent in Congress the Western District of Rhode Island.

The editor of an eastern paper expresses great indignation at the manner in which a man was buried who committed suicide. He says: "He was buried like a dog with his clothes on."

It is said that 17,000 sacks of saw-dust are annually consumed in London for stuffing dolls alone.

The preparation of the explosive cotton is said to consist in simply dipping common cotton in nitric acid, and immediately washing it in water and drying.

A man had a leg amputated, and a girl an arm, both having been injured in two separate railroad accidents, while perfectly insensible, by means of the inhalation of Dr. Morton's gaseous preparation.

The steamer Oregon, on the upper Lakes, has made thirteen successful trips between Chicago and Buffalo during the past season, without being detained by accident or weather a single day.

Leopold Alberti, a German and a preacher of the Lutheran Church, while laboring under mental derangement, cut his throat at Milwaukie on the 14th inst.

Silas B. Barber, Representative to the General Assembly of Rhode Island from the town of Exeter, died a few days ago of typus fever.

The collector of the Customs acknowledges the receipt of fifteen dollars, sent anonymously, as "due to the U. S. Government in consequence of a mistake in the amount of a French invoice."

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

Elihu Burritt, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in Advance.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

THE WEEKLY CHRONOTYPE,

IS published weekly by White, Potter & Wright, at No 2 Devonshire Street, near State Street, Boston. Terms—$2 a year, in advance. For $5 three copies will be sent to one address. A liberal discount will be made to Agents who pay for a larger number of copies. Edited by

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

This paper is not bound to the creed or cause of any clique, association, party, sect or set of men, but expresses freely the opinions of its editor at the time, and of such contributors as may honor it with their thoughts, or be supposed by the editor to do so. It will be his endeavor to give such a variety and quantity of matter as to meet the wants of every enlightened family, and especially of those which seek more light. He will not only give the daguerreotype likeness of Time as he passes, but will examine every new thing that he meets, and some things that are old, without fear or favor. Where he cannot convince, he will try to be good-natured. Where he cannot satisfy himself of the truth, he will be contented to confess his ignorance. In short, he will endeavor to help forward, in a neighborly way, every thing but Humbug. That he will endeavor to knock down and drag out, even if it should cling to the throne of political power or the horns of the sacred altar.

He will not take an oath never to be wiser. He will not scorn truth, though it may come from an enemy. He will not flatter the poor because he is one of them. He will not hate and abuse the rich because he is not one of them. But he will endeavor to establish a better understanding between the extremes of society—showing both ends that happiness is most likely to be found between them—consisting in a great measure in a mutual endeavor to abolish idleness, disease, poverty and roguery.

With these general purposes, it is the prime object of the editor of this paper to get an honest living.

NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER.

This paper, being made up of such portions of the contents of the National Intelligencer proper as can be compressed within the compass of a single newspaper, continues to be issued and mailed to subscribers on Saturday, at two dollars a year, payable in advance in all cases—no account being opened with subscribers to the weekly paper.

To bring this paper yet more nearly within the reach of such as desire to take by the year a cheap paper from the seat of General Government, a reduction will be made in the price of it where a number of copies are ordered and paid for by any person or association at the following rates:

For Ten Dollars six copies will be sent.
For Twenty Dollars thirteen copies: and
For each sum of Ten-Dollars, above twenty-eight copies will be forwarded; so that a remittance of Fifty Dollars will command thirty-seven copies.

Miscellaneous.

JOHN RANDODPH.

A few years before the death of Mr. R., he was one morning walking from his lodgings in Washington to the capitol, in order to take his seat in the House. It so happened that as he passed along the Pennsylvania avenue he fell into company with Edward Stabler, an eminent minister of the Society of Friends, with whom he was acquainted. As they were passing along the street, they met a wagon into which were crowded a number of colored women and children, followed by twenty or thirty colored men, hand-cuffed and chained together, and guarded by two armed white men on horseback. This spectacle, coming as it did suddenly before them, produced a strong sensation in them both, and they involuntarily stopped until the whole had passed without a word being spoken by either of them. After a short pause, Edward Stabler remarked: "This is a shocking spectacle to be exhibited here, almost under the shadow of the capitol of the United States! We profess to be the advocates of equal rights, and claim to be the first people in the world, and yet we here see before us a number of our fellow-men, without having committed any breach of the laws, or being charged with any offence whatever, chained like condemned criminals, and driven under the very eyes of the national Legislature like beasts to market! The nations of Europe have their several ministers and representatives here, who will witness this scene, and who probably will make it known to their respective governments. What must people of other nations think of us, when they learn that in the face of all our boasting professions about liberty, we permit the most odious tyranny and cruel oppression to be openly practiced upon millions of our people with impunity?" Randolph remained silent for a minute and then said with great emphasis—"Sir, I do not care what Europe or what the people of any other country may think or say of us—this is of no consequence, and I wholly disregard it." He then in a subdued tone, and with much earnestness, added, "But when I reflect upon what God Almighty may think of us, I confess to you that I tremble for my country!"

AN EAGLE'S DEATH.

Soon afterwards a magnificent eagle suddenly arose almost at our feet, as we came to the edge of a precipice, on a shelf of which, near the summit, he had been resting. Bang went one barrel at him, at a distance of twenty yards. The small shot struck him severely, and, dropping his legs, he rose into the air, darting upwards nearly perpendicularly, a perfect cloud of feathers coming out of him. He then came wheeling in a stupified manner back over our heads. We both of us fired together at him, and down he fell with one wing broken, and hit all over with small shot. He struggled hard to keep up with the other wing, but could not do so, and came heavily to the ground within a yard of the edge of the precipice. He fell over on his back at first, and then rising up on his feet, looked round with an air of reproachful defiance. The blood was dropping slowly out of his beak, when Donald foolishly ran to secure him, instead of leaving him to die where he was; in consequence of his doing so, the eagle fluttered back a few steps, still, however, keeping his face to the foe. But, coming to the edge of the precipice, he fell backwards over it, and we saw him tumbling and struggling downwards, as he strove to cling to the projections of the rock, but in vain, as he came to no stop till he reached the bottom, where we beheld him, after regaining his feet for a short time, sink gradually to the ground. It was impossible for us to reach the place where he lay dead without going so far round that the daylight would have failed us. I must own, notwithstanding the reputed destructiveness of the eagle, that I looked with great regret at the dead body of the noble bird, and wished that I had not killed him, the more especially as I was obliged to leave him to rot uselessly in that inaccessible place.'

FEMALE WARRIORS.

History presents many instances in which the women of ancient Germany have decided the fate of battle; their friends being put to flight, they have rushed among them, and by shrieks and lamentations, by bewailing the cruel lot that must follow defeat, and portraying the horrors of slavery, have inflamed their minds with desperate courage and urged them on to contest and to victory. The Cimbri, when Caius Marius went in arms against them, resolved to conquer or die. With heroic determination, they bound themselves together as they stood in their ranks with cords, and used every other precaution to prevent defeat, or at least an ignominious flight. Despite every exertion, they were overthrown, and pursued in confusion to their camp. Wives, sisters, and even mothers, who had in the meantime taken their station upon the wagons, armed with such weapons as the occasion afforded, endeavored by every means to rally them to the conflict. The common feelings of humanity pleaded in vain to palliate the offences of their kindred, and with their own hands they inflicted upon them that death which they had sought to evade. They maintained, too, the struggle against the enemy with desperate valor, and rendered the victory of Marius little better than defeat. When at last they were obliged to yield to the superior discipline of Roman arms, they preferred self-destruction to miserable vassalage, and suspending themselves and their children from the boughs of trees and the tops of wagons, ended a life which had lost every charm and every attraction. Such were the German women in war.

The Printing Press.—It is a remarkable fact, that the press was established at Philadelphia, when beginning a young colony, at an earlier period than in old Virginia, or old New York. There was a reason for this fact, which is very little known; no less than fear of the too free use of it by the colonists for refractory purposes. We see that in 1683, (the time of the settlement of Philadelphia,) the governor of Virginia was instructed not to allow any person to use a printing press on any occasion. In 1686, Governor Randolph of Massachusetts, forbade any one to print without his consent. Four years before, the General Court of Massachusetts determined there should be no press used but at Cambridge, and then only under the inspection of two licensers—they, "to prevent any abuse of the authorities of the country." Pennsylvania never had any such restrictions, and therefore William Bradford set up his press there as soon as the city was founded. The governor of Virginia, when advertising a reward for pirates, had to send to Philadelphia to get the printing done, in 1728; and on another occasion, he "thanked God they had no press!"

INFLUENCE OF MUSIC.

Napoleon, confessedly the most consummate commander that ever lifted the sword, who, by his tactics, out-generaled all Europe, had a strict regard to the pieces of music which were played among the soldiery on particular occasions. Certain tunes were at times prohibited; others used only under peculiar circumstances; and others again, reserved for the final charge—retained, perhaps, only to be let loose with the reserve corps; and it is stated that in making the famous passage of the Alps, under circumstances the most appalling and dreadful, if the soldiers at any time hesitated in their march, he ordered the bugles to sound their liveliest notes; and if the obstacle was so great as to bring them to a dead halt, the whole band were ordered to peal forth the "charge to battle;" which never failed to bear them over the most formidable difficulties. Every individual has doubtless heard of the influence of "Home Music" on the Swiss soldiers, so touchingly alluded to by the poet:—

> "The intrepid Swiss that guards a foreign shore,
> Condemned to climb the mountain-cliffs no more,
> If chance he hears the song so sweetly wild
> Which on those cliffs his infant hours beguiled,
> Melts at the long-lost scenes that round him rise,
> And sinks a martyr to repentant sighs."

It is a fact, that the Swiss airs, known under the general name of "Ranz des Vatdhes," sometimes excited the soldiers to such an agony of feeling, as to bring on a melancholy so deep, that it could not be removed until they again stood amid their mountain-home.

ABSTEMIOUS DIET.

Many cases of illness, both of adults and children, may be readily cured by abstinence from all food. Headaches, disordered stomachs, and many other attacks, are caused often by violating the rules of health, and in consequence, some part of the system is overloaded, or some of the organs are clogged. Omitting one, two or three meals, as the case may be, gives the system a chance to rest, and allows the clogged organs to dispose of their burdens. The practice of giving drugs to "clear out the stomach," though it may afford the needed temporary relief, always weakens the system, while abstinence secures the good result without doing any injury.

Said a young gentleman to a distinguished medical practitioner in Philadelphia—"Doctor, what do you do for yourself, when you have a turn of headache, or other slight attack?"

"Go without my dinner," was the reply.

"And if that does not cure you, what then?"

"Go without my supper."

"And if that does not cure you, what then?"

"Go without my breakfast. We physicians seldom take medicine ourselves, or use them in our families, for we know that starving is better, but we cannot make our patients believe it."

Many cases of slight indisposition are cured by a change of diet. Thus, if a person suffers from constipation, has headache, slight attacks of fever, or dyspepsia, the cause may often be removed by eating rye mush and molasses, baked apples and other fruits.

[Domestic Receipt Book.

A Hint to the Ladies.—Dr. Durbin, in his European Sketckes, speaks of the high health and fine forms of the French ladies, and attributes them to the fact that they take so large a share of out-door exercise. Such is the uniform testimony of Americans who have visited Europe, and if their accounts are to be relied on, the ordinary every day walks of the French, German, and English ladies, would actually frighten the pale, slender, in-door beauties of our glorious land. Was there ever a person, male or female, living in the habitual neglect of a vigorous use of the limbs, who enjoyed high, rosy health? Let those who think a glowing skin, a strong muscle, and an elastic step, signs of vulgarity, enjoy their fashionable dyspepsia, and dignified hysterics; but let the lady who expects to be or to make others happy, cultivate high health by out-door exercise. Who ever saw a class of women possessing higher health or handsomer forms than the market women who ide half a dozen mil es before sunrise?

First Sight of a Slave.—Seven hours of railway and steamboat conveyance carried me to Baltimore. In entering Maryland, the day's journey was rendered memorable to me, but it was a very natural occurrence. At the last stopping place before arriving at the town, I saw a sight which filled me with a new and strange emotion—I saw a being which not one among thousands of our English people has ever seen. He walked, he spoke, he was tall and erect, with active limbs, and shape of fair proportions. He was made in God's own image, but he was a SLAVE!—Poorly, scarcely decently clad, he had carried a load of peaches to the station, which little negro boys sold in baskets to the passengers. He stood beside it directing the sales, between whiles staring at us with a stupid gaze. He had the receding forehead, coarse neck, and thick lips, the symptoms or effects of the merely animal instinct and intelligence. His complexion was very black, black as the cloud hanging over the land of his captivity, black as the sin of its accursed law.

A Sister's Love.—The editor of the "Prisoner's Friend," in a recent letter from Hartford, says, in speaking of Potter's execution:—

"The Sister of Potter desired to be executed in his place. How intense her love! I understand something of it; for I was in the prison when Potter took leave of that sister. I saw him take her by the hand. I saw him imprint the last kiss upon her cheek. Both were bathed in tears. Both were in the extreme of mental agony. Not a word was uttered by either. How strange it seemed to see a brother, in full health and strength, taking a final leave of a sister, knowing that in a few hours he was to die an ignominious death upon the gallows! Oh! my God! that scene is now before me. Never can it be effaced from my memory."

Subterranean Curiosity in Paris.—There is near the Marche aux Chevaux a brewery, in which it is said the most excellent beer is made. M. Chepaux, the owner of this establishment, saw with regret, that its cellars were not large enough to contain the increasing produce of his brewery, and he wished to keep it in larger quantities. M. Chepaux suspected that his house, court, and garden, were placed above the catacombs of Paris. To make sure of this, he immediately set to work, and constructed a stone staircase of 87 feet, up the spiral of which the liquid necessary for daily use might be carried with the help of a windlass. But the staircase was the least part of the work, for, at the depth of about 55 feet, there was a void, not the void of the quarry, but a void made by the accidental falling of the earth. M. Chepaux had this cleared, with a great deal of trouble and expense, and then had large columns placed under the bank of stone upon which the Fabourg St. Victor and St. Marceau stand. And when you descend 87 steps, you enter into a large cavern, whose long and vast galleries afford an unlimited perspective. The effect is fine and picturesque. M. Chepaux has certainly the vastest cellar in the world.

Surgery in Algeria.—Before the arrival of the French, the natives had no idea of a regular physician or a surgeon. All diseases came under the treatment of the barber, who did not confine himself merely to bleeding and physicking, but he even amputated limbs. This operation was performed by a dreadful method, which is said to be still in practice in different parts of Asia, and is always followed by the Kabyles. When an arm is to be cut off, the patient stands upright, with his arm resting on a flat block of wood, and the barber, resting a yatagan, with a single stroke severs the member from the body. Two assistants then convey the sufferer to a vessel filled with melted pitch, into which they dip the arm, at the point where it has been amputated, to stop the hemorrhage. It is horrible to imagine the torture which must attend this barbarous operation.

Effects of Cultivation.—Buffon asserts that wheat is a factitious grain, and there is scarcely a vegetable, whatever its present character, on our farms, that can be found growing naturally. "Rye, rice, barley, and even oats, cannot be found wild, that is to say, growing naturally, in any part of the world." All have been modified by the industry and skill of man, from their originals, and to such a degree as not to admit of our recognizing them, or even of discovering their relations. Such are the effects of cultivation, that from a small, bitter Chilian root, we have succeeded in obtaining the potato. From the acrid and nauseous opium gravsolens, comes the delicious celery, and from the diminutive colewort, with its seven distinctive leaves, and ungrateful flavor, the sapid and nutritive cabbage of a dozen pounds weight. [Me. Farmer.

Making Mouths.—It is rather important to ladies to know how to place their little lips when they desire to look amiable, dignified, &c. A London Gazette suggests that when a lady would compose her mouth to a bland and serene character, she should, just before entering the room, say besom, and keep the expression into which the mouth subsides until the desired effect upon the company is evident. If, on the other hand, she wishes to assume a very dignified and somewhat noble bearing, not suggestive of sweetness, she should say brush, the result of which is infallible. If she would make her mouth look small and pretty she must say flip, but if the mouth be already too small and need enlarging, she must say cabbage. Perhaps a due attention to these rules might be useful to all persons intending to submit to the modern process of daguerreotype portraiture.

A Sensible Fellow.—The editor of the State paper of Wisconsin says of himself:—"We are only a plain mechanic. We came to Wisconsin (then a part of Michigan) in the capacity of a house carpentre, and erected the first frame dwelling within the present Territory; and for fourteen years thereafter, we hewed our way through the world with a kit. Yes, thanks to a provident father, we have a trade, which we would not swap for a profession nor for any office. A profession is an uncertain resource—politics more so; but a trade is always on hand. We have a trade—and this is one reason why we do not care one fig for all the bankites and political demagogues in creation; if they drive us from the political field, like the preacher's woodchucks, we have another hole to flee to. My son, despise not a trade. It will strengthen thy backbone in any situation in life."

An Interesting Newspaper.—"Well," soliloquized the venerable Miss Angelina Evergreen, as she folded up the newspaper which she had just been reading, and laid aside her spectacles, "this is the most interesting newspaper I have seen for many a day. I declare it is enough to do one's heart good to look at it. Let me see—there is almost half a column of deaths, one article headed 'Atrocious,' two 'Horribles,' one 'Heart-rending Occurrence,' one 'Murder,' three 'Robberies,' three 'Suicides,' with all the particulars, besides almost a column of 'Distressing Accidents' and 'Crimes,' and I declare if there is not on the outside a long and thrilling account of an 'Execution for Murder!' Such a paper ought to be patronized. It furnishss abundance of amusement mingled with instruction, and if I could not borrow it every week from good natured neighbor Spriggins, I should certainly have to subscribe for it." [N. Y. Telegraph.

A Novel Grave.—One John Brown, writing from Gen. Kearney's camp, "on the Plains, July 23d," thus describes an Indian grave discovered on their route:—

"The other evening at our camp, near the 'crossing,' I found, in the top of a large cottonwood tree, the grave of an Indian—probably a chief—the body wrapped in skins, and laid on mats resting on his lodge poles, which were passed across two large limbs of the tree. Another package, which I could not make out, I was told by some of the men who climbed up to it, held his bows, arrows, warclub, medicine-gourd, &c. The birds had picked several holes through his winding-sheet to get at his flesh. Over the whole deposite the skin which had probably been used for his lodge, was tightly stretched and the whole establishment was well secured, to the tree by strings cut from buffalo hide. We left him alone in his glory, with his airy resting place undisturbed."

VARIETY.

The Kennebec Journal says that the potato crop in Maine has suffered but little by the rot this year in comparison with last year. The apprehension of the disease to the root, however, prevented the planting of as many as usual, and the yield, owing to dry weather, is not large. The epidemic, if we may so call it, is evidently passing away in this country, and will in Europe. Probably this will be their worst year; and it may be hoped they will have a better crop next year. It began to be seriously felt first, we believe, in the Middle States of this Union, and progressed eastward. The recovery progresses in the same way.

A literary relic of olden times, has just appeared. It is "The New England Primer," a reprinted by Edward Draper, in 1777. This edition is the one used by our fathers and mothers during the Revolution—and among other good things of that day, it contains "Spiritual Milk for American Babes, Drawn out of the Breasts of both Testaments for their Souls' Nourishment;" by John Cotton. This is Mr. Cotton's Catechism.

Flacourt's History of Madagascar contains the following sublime prayer, said to be used by the people we call savages: "O Eternal, have mercy upon me, because I am passing away. O Infinite, because I am weak. O Sovereign of life, because I draw nigh to the grave. O Omniscient, because I am in darkness. O All-bounteous, because I am poor. O All-sufficient, because I am nothing."

An extract from a letter in a late London paper, gives the glad intelligence that the Temperance Society is having great influence over the sailors of the navy of Sweden and Norway. Out of the 444 men forming the crews of the Norwegian frigate the Freya, and the Swedish sloop the Nordsternen, which have just left Christiana for the Mediterranean, 302, that is more than two-thirds of them, have desired to receive rations of tea and coffe, instead of brandy.

In some towns in Germany the itinerant venders of female finery have started a new and irresistible method of attracting customers. They announce that a magnificent shawl—un chale d'honneur—will daily be presented to the handsomest woman who may grace their sale rooms with her presence.

A late English paper says that a railway train of enormous length, consisting of 106 carriages, besides engine and tender, upwards of half a mile in length, was propelled by the Severn Engine, on Taff Vale Railway. The weight of coal carried, was about 520 tons, to which add 268 tons for carriages, gives the weight of the train 798 tons.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

A FARM FOR SALE,

IN the township of Piscataway, State of New Jersey, lying north-east from New Brunswick, half a mile from the Bridge, half a mile from Snyder's Mills, and in full view of the railroad car-house. Said farm consists of about ninety five acres of land, in a good state of cultivation, and well adapted to raising grain and vegetables. It has a good variety of fruit trees, considerable wood, and five acres of salt meadow. The house is in good repair, and has a well of water at the door. There is also a new barn, sheds, &c. For farther particulars call on Dr. Nelson Stelle, No. 146 Grand-st., N. Y.—Mr. Burris, No. 1 Oliver-st.—or on the premises of JONATHAN S. DUNHAM.

THE ORIGINAL SABBATH UNCHANGED.

BY JAMES A. BEGG.

SECTION V. [Continued.

The Observance of the Weekly Sabbath enjoined upon the Israelites.

A very slight attention, indeed, to the manner in which God urges obedience to His holy requirements, should serve to destroy the objection which has been drawn from this connecting the consideration of their own case as bondmen with the demand that their servants should be allowed the full privilege of Sabbatic rest. It is a principle used for enforcing almost every other duty required at their hand, and that in cases where no one would for a moment imagine, that the duty so enforced was either peculiar to the Israelites, or of a temporary nature. Indeed, in the very next chapter we find that all "the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments" of God, are enforced by the very same consideration; "That thou mightest fear the Lord thy God, to keep all His statutes, and His commandments, which I command thee; thou, and thy son, and thy son's son, all the days of thy life." "Beware lest thou forget the Lord, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve Him, and shalt swear by His name. Ye shall not go after other gods, of the gods of the people which are round about you." "And when thy son asketh thee, in time to come, saying, What mean the testimonies, and the statutes, and the judgments, which the Lord our God hath commanded you? then thou shalt say unto thy son, We were Pharaoh's bondmen in Egypt, and the Lord brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand; and the Lord showed signs and wonders great and sore upon Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his household, before our eyes; and He brought us out from thence, that He might bring us in, to give us the land which He sware unto our fathers. And the Lord commanded us to do all these statutes, to fear the Lord our God, for our good always, that he might preserve us alive, as it is at this day. And it shall be our righteousness, if we observe to do all these commandments before the Lord our God, as He hath commanded us." Deut. vi. 1, 2, 12—14, 20—25. "All these commandments!" Thus, then, all the ten commandments would require to be taken from the Gentiles, and the obligation of love to God and to our neighbor to be canceled, if the objection we are considering were really a sound one; for all the precepts of the law are thus enforced upon the house of Israel by the very same argument of God's having rescued them from Egyptian bondage. Not only so, indeed, but even at the very time when God uttered from Sinai that law, the fourth commandment of which was given "because" of God's own rest, this same argument was in the same way assigned as a motive for its observance; "And God spake all these words, saying, I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Exod. xx. 1—3.

It is not one commandment merely, therefore, but all the ten, which are presented to the Israelites enforced by the consideration of what God had already done in their behalf. A motive to obedience is also based upon the promises of what God would yet do for Israel. Thus, in the fifth commandment, "that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may be well with thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee," is the encouragement to obedience. Deut. v. 16. It is as clear, that in this promise of blessing, the Lord as really means the land of Canaan, as that which He was giving them, and in which it would be well with them if they were obedient, as that He means a motive to Sabbatic rest for servants to be drawn from their own sorrows in the land Egypt, in which they were servants. And if in either case an objection to universal obligation can be drawn from such a fact, it must be equally valid when applied to both duties—and the Gentiles will then be freed from the obligation of the fifth as well as from that of the fourth commandment.

The frequency indeed with which this motive is urged for the performance of duty of every kind, makes it matter of surprise that its occurrence in any individual case should have occasioned any difficulty. Thus, "if thy brother, an Hebrew man, or an Hebrew woman, be sold unto thee, and serve thee six years, then in the seventh year thou shalt let him go free from thee. And when thou sendest him out free from thee, thou shalt not let him go away empty, thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy flour, and out of thy wine-press; of that wherewith the Lord thy God hath blessed thee, thou shalt give unto him. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee; therefore I command thee this thing to-day." Deut. xv. 12—15. When God gave them deliverance from Egypt, He brought them not out empty-handed; they were therefore to be kind in sending from servitude poor brethren.

"Thou shalt keep the feast of weeks unto the Lord thy God, with a tribute of a free will-offering of thine hand, which thou shalt give unto the Lord thy God, according as the Lord thy God hath blessed thee; and thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are among you, in the place which the Lord thy God hath chosen to place His name there. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt, and thou shalt observe and do these statutes." Deut. xvi. 10—12. This was a feast of thanksgiving for the harvest; and what more suitable argument could be advanced for their allowing "the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow," to share in their feast of rejoicing, than that they themselves had been bondmen in Egypt?—even as this fact formed a reason for their servants being allowed to rest as well as themselves on God's appointed Sabbath.

"Thy fathers went down into Egypt with three score and ten persons; and now the Lord thy God hath made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude. Therefore thou shalt love the Lord thy God and keep His charge, and His statutes, and His judgments, and His commandments always." Deut. x. 22, xi. 1. But shall we plead for Gentile Christians being discharged from the obligation of love and obedience? Or would we esteem it a privilege conferred upon us, if such exemptions could be authoritatively proclaimed? His dealing with Israel is indeed one of the most frequent, as it is also one of the most forcible, appeals which the Lord makes, not to Jews only, but to all capable of discerning the operation of His hands. "Thou shalt neither vex a stranger, nor oppress him; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt. Ye shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child. If thou afflict them in any way, and they cry unto me, I will surely hear them cry; and my wrath shall wax hot." Exod. xxii. 21—24. "Also thou shalt not oppress a stranger, for ye know the heart of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt." Exod. xxiii. 9. "Thou shalt neither vex a stranger nor oppress him, for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt." Exod. xxii. 21. "If a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him. But the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born amongst you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt. I am the Lord your God." Lev. xix. 33, 34.

Surely no man who is capable of feeling, and who is actuated by the power of proper motive, can fail to perceive the beauty of the appeal thus made to God's mighty interference in behalf of the children of Israel. But the fact that He does make those appeals for the purposes of moral suasion on those to whom they are addressed, does not at all supersede the original obligation, but constitutes another, superadded unto it. Nor will any one suppose that the various duties specified in the texts now quoted, all enforced as they are by this consideration of God's grace to His people, are less required at our hand, although we are less immediately interested in the special argument by which they are thus powerfully impressed upon the children of Israel. No one imagines because oppression is thus frequently forbidden on the consideration that the Israelites had been oppressed in Egypt, that God's prohibitions against that sin are now inapplicable.

So then, in like manner, when God enjoins the observance of the Sabbath, because on it He rested and was refreshed, and enforces this upon the Israelites for their servants also, by a similar argument of their having themselves been servants in Egypt; no more are we to suppose the time of their departure from Egypt to be the period of the Sabbath's origin, or the Israelites as the only people upon whom its sanctions were at that period obligatory. We have seen, in the various citations given above, several of the duties which we owe to God and to our neighbor urged upon them by a particular motive; and other duties might have been specified, enjoined upon similar grounds. But, in every such case, it is perfectly evident that the duty had a pre-existence, and is of wider application than an individual nation. So, also, the Sabbath instituted in Paradise, however it might be enforced upon the Israelites by a consideration more peculiar to themselves, is equally applicable to other nations, and obligatory to latest times.

In closing the consideration of this question, it may be proper to remark, that the objection we have been considering has little support from those by whom, especially, if it had any force, we might have expected it to be maintained. The best and most ancient Hebrew authors agree in the views we have urged of the early and universal obligation of the Sabbath, although the opinions of some of more modern date have been quoted as opposed to it. For in the Talmud they inquire, Why man was created on the evening of the Sabbath? And of the three reasons they give, this is the last, that he might immediately enter on performing the command.

"The famous Ludovicus de Dieu, mentioning these words, on Gen. 1. 27, adds, by way of explication, 'For since the Sabbath immediately succeeded the creation of man, he immediately entered on the command of sanctifying the Sabbath.'

Baal Hatturim, after various interpretations of this passage, also subjoins this other; 'in the hour that He created the world, He blessed the Sabbath and the world.'

Jarchi also mentions this opinion, though himself was otherwise minded; 'What would the world have been, without rest? On the coming of the Sabbath came rest, and thus at length the work was finished and completed;' by which he intimates that the institution of the Sabbath was joined to the completing of the works of God.

There are also some Jews who will have Ps. xcii., whose title is 'a psalm or song for the Sabbath day,' to have been composed by Adam. For thus the Chaldee paraphrases, 'a hymn and song, which the first man said of the Sabbath.'

And R. Levi, in Bereschith Rubba, § 22, at the end; 'the first man spoke this psalm, and from his time it was buried in oblivion, but Moses came and renewed it.' Now I bring these testimonies to show that they speak too confidently who assert that it is running counter to the unanimous opinion of the Jews for any to insist that the precept of the Sabbath was enjoined on the first man. Whoever wants more to this purpose may consult Selden de Jure Naturæ, lib. iii. 13. Witsius Economy of the Covenants. Book I. chap. vii., § 4.

We may refer to Philo's view also of the Sabbath. He 'calls it the feast, not of one people or country alone, but of the whole universe.' De Opif. Mundi, p. 15. Beaisobre and Lenfant's Introduction to New Testament, p. 138."

THE STREAM OF LIFE.

Oh, silvery streamlet of the fields,
That flowest full and free!
For thee the rains of Spring return,
The Summer dews for thee;
And when thy latest blossoms die
In Autumn's chilly showers,
The Winter fountains gush for thee,
Till May brings back the flowers.

Oh, Stream of Life! the violet springs
But once beside thy bed;
But one brief Summer, on thy path,
The dews of Heaven are shed;
Thy parent fountains shrink away,
And close their crystal veins,
And where thy glittering current flowed
The dust alone remains. [Bryant.

IMPROPRIETIES IN PRAYER.

Public worship is a very solemn and significant act. It implies the united approach of an assembly unto God—the approach of a guilty assembly to a lofty God. The object that each worshiper proposes to himself is the offering of praise and supplication. Consequently, the heart is supposed to be engaged in the exercises of the occasion. Now any thing which seems inconsistent with the sobriety, humility, and solemnity, which ought to characterize the worship of guilty creatures, is a great evil, and tends to every thing but edification. The apostolic injunction is, "Let every thing be done decently and in order." Now, to my great grief, a number of improprieties in public worship have fallen under my eye, yea, some of them I have detected in myself, and that my thoughts and reflections thereon might not be fruitless, it has appeared best to publish them in the present form.

1. Preaching in prayer.—Some ministers turn their prayers into sermons, in which they explain and enforce Christian doctrine, and express their opinion of Christian practice. There is much that may be called "praying at people." Certain individuals are obnoxious on account of certain opinions or practices, and the minister takes the occasion of public prayer to pray at and against their peculiarities, for the purpose of giving them a lecture. The object is generally perceived, and such prayers edify no one. Let a proper distinction be always observed between praying and preaching.

2. Gesticulation in prayer.—On this point I would not be harsh. Earnest feeling often times vents itself in gestures, unperceived by the speaker, and yet I venture to suggest that it may on the whole better be avoided as far as possible—except in peculiar circumstances. There is to a spectator, (for there are such in churches,) something irreverent in gesticulation in ordinary circumstances. It wears the appearance of an attempt on the part of him who prays, to lead the people to think that he is very importunate in his entreaties.

3. Use of irreverent epithets.—Some ministers hardly mention the name of God or the Saviour without connecting it with some fondling of irreverent epithet, such as "dear," "blessed," "precious," &c. These are not improper in themselves abstractly considered, but their repetition greatly degrades prayer, and strips it of all true reverence and dignity. It is too familiar for God and man, and is more like the intercourse of loving friends. The language seems in nine cases out of ten to be forced, and is a very cheap way of gaining a reputation for communion with God. Let us always remember, while we come with a filial spirit, what God is, and what we are.

4. Attempts at eloquence.—These are disgusting to every pious soul, and form almost an entire disqualification to the ministerial office. Yet how often does there seem to be attempts in ministers to be particularly eloquent in prayer, and especially on some important occasion. How heart-sickening were the prayers of a certain chaplain in Congress some two or three years since, as reported in the public papers. One specimen will answer instead of further remarks: "O God! while the wing of the national eagle shadows these council halls, and Washington, in pale, passionless marble, overlooks the debates in both Houses of Congress, we beseech thee to overshadow the President and members of this Senate chamber with the wing of the cherubim," &c.

5. Too sudden change to other things.—I have heard ministers join a notice of meetings on to the amen of their prayer, so that it seemed to be all one sentence, adapted by its incongruity to excite a smile, and to dissipate solemnity. There ought to be a short pause after prayer before proceeding to any thing else. [Evang.

ADMINISTERING MEDICINE.

From Missionary Labors and Scenes in South Africa.

At Tanng, where Mahura, the brother of Mothibi, resides, and where, including the Bamairis, there was a population of nearly 20,000 souls, I preached to large congregations. As it was well known that I had performed some cures, I had some dozen of patients brought to me; and, among others, a young woman, who, from great exposure to the sun, was slightly deranged. It was truly gratifying to see the sympathy of the chief and relations towards this afflicted creature. Knowing their general treatment of such diseases, (namely, to throw the sufferer into a chasm, and cover him with stones, or tie him to a tree,) I asked one of the roughest characters among the bystanders why they had not done so with this woman? "We heard the word of God at the Krunman," was the reply. The natives, though afraid of poison, never once suspected that it would do them harm by administering medicine. They are passionately fond of medicine, and of being bled, believing that all diseases lie in the blood. I have known individuals, after I had bound up the arm, to open the orifice, and let the blood flow until they fainted. No matter how nauseous a draught may be, they will lick their lips even after a dose of assafœtida. On one occasion I requested a man at a distance to send some one for medicine. He sent his wife; and, having prepared a bitter dose, I gave it into her hand, directing her to give it in two portions, one at sunset, the other at midnight. She made a long face, and begged hard that he might take it all at once, lest they should fall asleep. I consented, when down went the portion into her stomach. I exclaimed, "It was not for you!" Licking her lips, she asked with perfect composure of countenance, if her drinking it would not cure her husband.

REVIVALS OF RELIGION.

Revivals are invaluable blessings. They are among God's most precious gifts. They are much to be desired, and should be earnestly prayed for. Their nature and effects should be well understood. What, then, is a revival of religion?

1. A revival consists in having a just sense of one's own sinfulness in heart and life, in becoming reconciled to the holy character of God, and in cleaving to the Lord Jesus Christ as the only foundation of hope. Accordingly, no true revival can take place without some knowledge of God's perfect law, the depravity of the human heart, and the sovereignty of divine grace. The best means, therefore, which can be used to promote a revival of religion, is, to preach intelligibly the distinguishing doctrines of the gospel.

2. A revival of religion may extend to great numbers or be limited to only a few, or even to a single individual. On the day of Pentecost three thousand were converted under the preaching of a single sermon. A great revival of religion! But when Paul preached to the women at Philippi, the heart of Lydia only was opened to attend to the things spoken by Paul; and this also, was a genuine revival of religion, so far as it went, and issued in important results.

3. Wherever a revival of religion commences, a dependence upon the Holy Spirit is felt and acknowledged; nor will a revival of religion continue any longer than the same dependence is felt. When people, therefore, begin to imagine they can do the work themselves; when they begin to vaunt of what they have done, or begin to predict what great things they will yet accomplish. I view it as a sure prognostic that the Holy Spirit will soon be withdrawn, if it has not already departed. May not this suggest the true reason why there has been such an extensive spiritual drought succeeding a time of great excitement, and on account of which the ways of Zion are now mourning? [Evang.

ASLEEP IN JESUS.

It is one of the most blessed revelations of God, that the dead in Christ are not lost or annihilated, but have fallen asleep. The decree has gone forth to the fallen race of man, that they shall die. No place, or circumstance, or being, can reverse it, or mitigate its sternness. Piety, nor virtue, nor anxiety to live, can arrest the vital element when the command goes forth, 'Thou shalt die.' The changeless edict is pronounced—the history of our own race is already written, and whether we walk, or toil, or sleep, we are hastening to the grave. To him who looks upon death in any other than the light of the gospel, there is darkness and terror from which the soul shrinks away. The dominions of the prince of the grave seem to be without end, extending into eternity, and ceasing only with the existence of God. Hope, which lingers around the bed of the dying saint, and lightens the gateway to immortality, flies from the couch of the despairing, to mourn as those who have no hope. They are not dead. Their bodies have been gathered to the last resting place, and moulder, ashes to ashes, and earth to earth, but their spirits have fled upward to the throne. We will not wish to awake them until the Lord shall summon the nations to judgment, and bring them forth arrayed in incorruption and immortality.

JOHN BUNYAN.

He appeared in countenance to be of a stern and rough temper; but in his conversation mild and affable, not given to loquacity, or much discourse in company, unless some urgent occasion required it; observing never to boast of himself, or his parts, but rather seemed low in his own eyes, and submitted himself to the judgment of others; abhorring lying and swearing, being just in all that lay in his power to his word; not seeming to revenge injuries, loving to reconcile differences, and make friendship with all. He had a sharp quick eye, accompanied with an excellent discerning of persons, being of good judgment and quick wit. As for his person, he was tall of stature, strong boned, though not corpulent, somewhat of a ruddy face, with sparkling eyes, wearing his hair on his upper lip, after the old British fashion; his hair reddish, but in his latter days, time had sprinkled it with grey; his nose well set, but not declining or bending, and his mouth moderately large; his forehead something high, and his habit always plain and modest. And thus have we impartially described the internal and external parts of a person whose death hath been much regretted; a person who had tried the smiles and frowns of time, not puffed up in prosperity, nor shaken in adversity, always holding the golden mean.

In him at once did three great worthies shine,
Historian, poet, and a choice divine;
Then let him rest in undisturbed dust,
Until the resurrection of the just.

In his pilgrimage God blessed him with four children, one of which, named Mary, was blind, and died some years before. His other children were Thomas, Joseph, and Sarah; and his wife Elizabeth, having lived to see him overcome his labor and sorrow, and pass from this life to receive the reward of his works, survived him not long; but in 1692, she died, to follow her faithful pilgrim from this world to the other, whither he had gone before her, while his works remain for the edifying of the reader and praise of the author. A LESSON TOUCHING POVERTY.

Burns was born poor, and born also to continue poor, for he would not endeavor to be otherwise; this it had been well, could he at once and for all have admitted, and considered as finally settled. Poverty, incessant drudgery, and much worse evils, it has often been the lot of poets and wise men to strive with, and their glory to conquer. Locke was banished as a traitor; and wrote his "Essay on the Human Understanding," sheltering himself in a Dutch garret. Was Milton rich or at his ease when he composed his "Paradise Lost?" Not only low, but fallen from a height; not only poor, but impoverished; in darkness, and with dangers compassed round, he sung his immortal song, and found fit audience, though few. And what then had these men, which Burns wanted? Two things; both which, it seems to us, are indispensable for such men. They had a true religious principle, and a single, not a double aim in their activity. They were not self-seekers and self-worshipers; but seekers and worshipers of something far better than self. Not personal enjoyment was their object, but a high heroic idea of religion, of patriotism, of heavenly wisdom, in one or the other form, ever hovered before them, in which cause they neither shrunk from sufferings, nor called on the earth to witness it as something wonderful, but patiently endured, counting it blessedness enough so to spend and be spent. Thus the "golden calf of self-love," however curiously carved, was not their deity, but the invisible goodness, which alone is man's reasonable service. This feeling was as a celestial fountain, whose streams refreshed into gladness and beauty, all the provinces of their otherwise too desolate existence. In a word, they willed one thing to which all other things were subordinate and made subservient, and, therefore, accomplised it. The wedge will rend rocks, but its edge must be sharp and single; if it be double, the wedge is bruised in pieces, and will rend nothing. [Thomas Carlyle.

Death of Charles XI.—There was no hypocrasy at the death of Charles XI. It was in his reign that the massacre of St. Bartholomew swept off from the earth so much precious blood of the saints. This king wept profusely in the presence of his Huguenot nurse, and other attendants, and condemned himself for the part which he had taken in the tragic event. "Ah my dear nurse," he said, "my beloved woman, what blood! What murders! Ah, I have followed wicked advice! Oh, my God, pardon me and be merciful! I know not where I am, they have made me so perplexed and agitated. How will all this end? What shall I do? I am lost forever! I know it!" In contemplation of his sins his handkerchief was drenched with tears, and his last moments were indescribably miserable. This was not, as d'Israeli suggests, "the effect of religion operating on a feeble mind;" but of an awakened conscience, calling the royal sinner to account, and compelling him to speak out honestly and sincerely. [Ch. Rev.

Sir William Jones, as distinguished scholar, elegant poet, an eminent jurist, and especially noted for his acquaintance with the literature of twenty-eight languages, wrote upon the last leaf of his Bible these words:—"I have regularly and attentively read these holy Scriptures, and am of opinion that this volume, independently of its divine origin, contains more sublimity and beauty, more pure morality, more important history, and finer strains of poetry and eloquence, than can be collected from all other books, in whatever age or language they may have been written."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 10, 1846.

THE SABBATH A TESTIMONY AGAINST ATHEISM AND IDOLATRY.

Mr. Brown's Second Lecture on the Sabbath was delivered at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in this city, on Sunday evening last. The subject was the nature and design of the Sabbath as a standing testimony against Atheism and Idolatry, and hence the necessity of observing it on the seventh day of the week.

To understand the nature and design of the Sabbath, said the speaker, it is necessary to recur to its original institution. In the second chapter of Genesis, at the conclusion of his account of the work of creation, Moses tells us that "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all his work." Two things are to be distinctly noted here—1st. That the particular thing upon which God put his blessing was the day—not the rest, as some teach; 2d. That the particular day upon which God put his blessing was the seventh or last day of the week. Now come down to the giving of the law at Sinai, and we find God enjoining upon men to "remember the Sabbath day." This command naturally carries the mind back to the day on which God rested. But to make the matter perfectly plain, the law-giver says distinctly, that "the seventh day is the Sabbath (or rest) of the Lord thy God;" that is, the rest which the Lord thy God observed. Thus the Sabbath, by the express language of the law, is determined to be the seventh and last day of the week.

Here the speaker referred to an objection which is sometimes raised, that the fourth commandment is so expressed as to admit of a change in the day, without at all affecting the sacred institution itself. In answer to this objection, he showed that at the original institution of the Sabbath it was the day—not the the rest abstractly, which was blessed; and also that in the fourth commandment itself, the blessing was not placed upon the Sabbath or rest, but upon the Sabbath day—thus proving the fallacy of the notion, that "the holy rest is one thing, and the day on which we are to rest quite another."

The reason for the command to keep the Sabbath was next brought under consideration. The institution grows out of the fact that God "made the heavens, the earth, the sea, and all that in them is." It is therefore a memorial of the great work of creation; and when kept according to the commandment, is a public testimony against all forms of Atheism and Idolatry. It says distinctly, that this world did not come into existence by mere chance, nor by the aid of any of the false gods of the heathen, but was created by Jehovah alone. Hence it is one of the strongest proofs of revealed religion which can possibly be offered.

The speaker here referred somewhat at length, and with great eloquence and force, to the importance of monumental institutions. The monument upon Bunker Hill, with its appropriate inscription, is an evidence which no man can question, that a tremendous engagement once took place there between some British troops and American citizens. The monument at Groton, Ct., testifies to the truth of the story that Fort Griswold was once taken by British troops, and the garrison murdered in cold blood. The annual celebration of the 4th of July, leaves no doubt upon any mind, that the historical account of the Declaration of Independence upon that day of the year 1776, is true. By those who have seen these monuments, or this celebration, the history of the events which they commemorate is never questioned. Thus is it with the great events narrated in the Book of God. The Christian ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, wherever they are celebrated, testify to the death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ; and those who learn that they have been observed all along from the time of the Saviour's death, cannot question the facts upon which they rest. They are, therefore, a testimony to the truth of Christianity. So with the Passover, as observed by the Jews; it is an evidence of the truth of the narrative concerning the slaying of the first-born in Egypt, which can not be controverted. But have Christianity and Judaism their monumental institutions, while that system which we call the Moral Law, and which preceded both of them, is left without any monument to commemorate the great fact upon which it is founded—the fact that God created the world and all things in it? It has no such thing if the Sabbath be blotted out. This is the monument which attests to mankind that Jehovah is the Creator of all things, and that by creation he established those relations in which all our moral duties originate. Atheists! you who say that this world sprang into existence by chance! go read it. It is a witness against you—a rebuke to your unbelief. Worshipers of idols! you who think your dumb deities are gods of power! go read it. It shames your folly. Yes, this monument Almighty God has set up to be a standing testimony against all forms of Atheism and Idolatry; and as long as there are atheists to deny him, or heathen to be taught his name, so long shall it stand.

Who then will attempt to destroy this monument? In answer to this question, allusion was made to the number of those calling themselves Christians, who teach that under the Gospel there is no Sabbath. It was stated also, that the doctrine of a transfer of the Sabbath leads to no better results, since it makes the institution no longer a memorial of creation, but of an entirely different event, as the advocates of such transfer themselves admit. Thus the monument which was designed to testify against atheism and idolatry is gone, and something else is set up in its place. In view of such facts, it is not wonderful that infidels increase, and the instruction of the age fails to reach their hearts. Religion is set before them stripped of its institutions—the very things which God designed to be the evidence of its truth. It is unreasonable to expect that God will shine forth, and his glory fill the earth, until his law is restored to its place, and honored by his people.

THE THIRD ASSEMBLY OF JEWISH RABBIES.

In our last we gave some account of the discussion of the subject of the Sabbath before the Third Assembly of Jewish Rabbies, together with the decisions to which that body came. A more complete report of the discussion has since reached us in "The Occident and Jewish Advocate." It seems that there was a good deal of nice discrimination respecting the symbolical character of the Sabbath, and also respecting what the fourth commandment requires, whether simply rest upon the seventh day, or in addition the sanctification of that day by religious exercises. Of course the object of these distinctions was to prepare the way for such a modification of the strictness of the Sabbath law, as would reconcile it with existing circumstances and institutions. But those who were disposed to make the Sabbath symbolical, and therefore not binding in all its original strictness, found a great obstacle in the fact, (which was strongly insisted upon,) that it is one of the "Ten Commandments, in which there are no symbols." If we mistake not, the opinion of the majority was very well expressed by the Rev. Dr. Philipson, the reputed originator of the Assembly. The following extract gives the substance of his speech on the subject, as reported for the "Voice of Israel:"—

"In opposition to some opinions previously expressed, he sees in Moses, not simply a law-giver, but a man immediately inspired by God to make known eternal truth, and to establish institutions which may, it is true, change their form, but which, in their substance, contain eternal truth, which the whole of humanity will one day acknowledge. (General approbation.) In the present day the Sabbath is sometimes considered in a rational, sometimes in a symbolical manner. But the state of the case is this, the Sabbath is a necessary thing for the spiritual nature of man. The Holy Scripture, in its first twelve chapters, unfolds the history of mankind. It shows the opposite principles which still hold man captive. Man was created in the image of God; and in the sweat of his face he must eat bread. On the one hand, man is a divine spirit, whose destination it is ever to strive after greater likeness to God; and on the other hand, he is the slave of material life. But in this, even, lies a blessing, as it tends to the development of the human soul. The contradiction, however, is still there; and revelation must give the solution of it, which is—the Sabbath. Hence the Sabbath meets this twofold nature; it brings the slavery to material nature into freedom, through rest; while at the same time, it elevates and sanctifies the spirit. Though rest and devotion are thus different in their being, they are yet identical in fact; because in the spirit of man there is a constant impulse towards development, which comes into action as soon as rest relieves it from the pressure of material life. Some have said, but most erroneously, that the idea of devotion was connected with the Sabbath at a period subsequent to its intstiution. The notion of sanctification, and devotion to God, is an integral part of every scriptural idea; therefore it never can be wanting in that of the Sabbath. Such expressions as these: "Thou shalt love thy God;" "Thou shalt cleave unto Him;" "Thou shalt be holy, as God is holy," &c., surely inculcate holiness in every possible way; and when it is said of the Sabbath, "Ye shall sanctify it," "It shall be holy to you," &c., it can surely mean nothing else. The Sabbath cannot be a mere veiled symbol, when it is a spiritual necessity for mankind.

"If the principle above stated be admitted, then the collision with existing institutions will be partially removed. But only partially. Wholly to prevent this is not in our power. God has brought us into these circumstances, and to him must we intrust them. All deception in this matter must be given up. Men wish to make it easy; they say, all indispensable business may be done. But have we mended matters by this? We have declared it lawful to the man of business, but we have taken the Sabbath from him; and as he is thus deprived of the blessing which its religious observance would have afforded him, the collision is not in this way avoided. The change of the Sabbath has been hinted at. All history is against this. This is the very day which our fathers' fathers have kept as the Sabbath. Other religions have borrowed the Sabbath from us; but while they borrowed it from us, they would have nothing in common with us, and altered the day, not because ours was wrong, but in order that they might differ from us; and therefore to show their independent standing, they hold it on Sunday and Friday. And shall Judaism now relinquish its independence, and say, We shall keep the same day you do!"

Besides the discussion upon the subject of the Sabbath, there was much said about the Feast Days—particularly as to the propriety of allowing work to be done upon some of them. The regular holy-days of the Jews are sufficiently numerous; but when we add the holy-days of the Christians, which the Jews are compelled to observe so far as to abstain from working openly, they make a heavy tax upon their time. Indeed, one speaker stated that the Jews were obliged to rest nearly one third part of every year, and that hence there was the more need to release them from unnecessary observances. It is devoutly to be hoped, that this species of petty oppression, to which not only the Jews, but some Christians, are exposed, may soon cease. We doubt not that the tendency of such meetings as that under consideration will be to hasten the day.

CONFERENCE OF JEWISH THEOLOGIANS.

The "Jewish Intelligence" says that at the Assembly of Rabbies held last year, Dr. Frankel, of Dresden, the leader of the orthodox party, protested against the proceedings of that Assembly, and with one or two others seceded from it, on the ground that the spirit which marked its discussions was not that of conservatism, but destructive of that positive Judaism which he declared to be his guiding principle. Encouraged by offers of co-operation from more than thirty men of learning, he proposed a Conference of Jewish Theologians, whose views are those of conservatism and progressive improvement. Dresden was selected as the place of the meeting, and October 21st as the time. The design is to make these Conferences not exclusively meetings of rabbies and preachers, but to include all who devote themselves to Jewish learning. Dr. Frankel, in his public Appeal, expresses a hope that "such Conferences will have a salutary influence on religious education and instruction, promote the consideration and discussion of Jewish interests, encourage Jewish learning in all its branches, increase general confidence, and demonstrate to our nation that its holy religious interests are represented in a spirit of moderation and progressive improvement, not with a view of startling and destructive reforms, and an aim at notoriety, but with a desire to maintain the truth, and to act with an earnest zeal for religion, equally remote from bigotry and from levity.

LEGAL PROTECTION OF SABBATH-KEEPERS.

Mr. Editor,—I desire, through the medium of the Recorder, to make a few suggestions relative to our efforts to obtain legal protection in the undisturbed observance of the Sabbath.

1st. It is a matter of great importance that our petitions be presented as early in the session of the Legislature as possible, and also that a large amount of petitioners be obtained. To secure this, let as many as feel an interest in the matter, take the petition already published, and circulate it freely among all classes in their own and adjoining towns. And when it can be done conveniently, let these petitions be forwarded to the Semi-Annual Meeting of the Associations, so that the delegate to Albany can take them and distribute them as he may deem most favorable, among the members of the Legislature. Our cause suffered much, and perhaps was defeated last winter in the Senate, by our petitions being referred to a committee that felt no interest in our protection. This evil may probably be avoided by having your delegate try the members, and ascertain who are friendly, before any petitions are presented and referred. If this suggestion should meet the views of our brethren who cannot forward their petitions to the Association, they can retain them until requested to send them on.

2d. Our Bill was defeated last winter in the Senate. I therefore think it best to have all of our petitions presented to the Senate. There have been two Senators elected this fall, viz. Hon. Ira Harris of Albany, and N. J. Beach of Lewis County, who last year, as members of the lower House, did us good service. I hope by their aid, as well as some other members of the Senate who were friendly last year, that we shall have a law judiciously framed and passed, that will fully meet our wants. If such a law should pass the Senate, there would not be much danger of its being lost in the Assembly.

3d. I request all who have knowledge of any vexatious suits brought against any Sabbath-keeper on the Sabbath, or of persons being retained as witnesses or jurors, or required to attend to any civil service on the Sabbath, or whose rights have been abridged by advantage being taken of his observance of the Sabbath, &c., to communicate the same to me at DeRuyter, as soon as it can be consistently done, so that the whole may be, if necessary, embodied and laid before members or committees of the Legislature. In making these statements let the cost and damage be estimated as nearly as possible, together with all the aggravating circumstances connected therewith.

4th. In the petition printed in the Recorder, the word returned is used instead of retained. In copying it, it should be corrected.

J. BAILEY.

The New-Born Nation.—A writer who lately accompanied Commodore Stockton to the Sandwich Islands, just raised, by the power of the gospel, from the lowest barbarism to a respectable rank among the independent Christian nations, says:—

"The missionaries were very hospitable and attentive to us. We visited all their schools, and were highly delighted. They are doing an immense amount of good. I spoke in their great stone church to some three thousand persons, on the Christian sympathy felt in the United States for them—and then told them that Commodore Stockton was present, and I hoped he would consent to address them—he was sitting by the side of the king—came forward, spoke for an hour with fervency and effect, on the benefits of the Christian religion, etc. The king and high chief came up at the close, and thanked us for our addresses. We raised two hundred dollars on board our ship, to aid the seamen's chaplain at the port of Honolulu, and sailed for Monterey, which we reached in twenty-three days—nearly three thousand miles."

TREATMENT OF FOREIGNERS IN CHINA.

A gentleman now residing in this city, who has labored for some time as a missionary in China, informs us that as a general thing he was treated with much kindness while a resident of that country. Canton was the only place which furnished an exception to this rule. Here there is more opposition to foreigners than in either of the other free ports, particularly among the lower classes. A letter from Dr. and Mrs. Devan, Baptist missionaries, dated July 8, states that they have recently passed through exciting scenes at Canton. The Dr. says:—

"On Saturday last, Mrs. Devan and myself went out in a boat, and landed on the shore about twenty-five minutes rowing distance from home. We walked to an eminence, where I saw from a neighboring village crowds of men and lads rapidly running towards us, and exciting each other with loud savage yells. I called out to Mrs. Devan, from whom I was separated some dozen rods, 'To your boat! to your boat!' She reached a path leading thither just as about fifty men and boys made their appearance, running at the top of their speed, some few hundred feet in the rear. When I found that she was secure, I turned around and preached the gospel as well as I could to the rabble, and distributed tracts. They listened, but gave sufficient evidence of their ill-feeling in their subsequent insolence."

A few days after, a great riot occurred, in which the house of a foreigner was attacked, and the firing of guns heard. Mr. and Mrs. Devan were proffered the protection of the American merchants, but they preferred committing themselves to the Lord. In the sequel, a number of soldiers quartered themselves near the house. Dr. D. gave a tract to one of them, and two more coming in he gave them tracts also, and explained the doctrines of the gospel; six or eight more afterwards came in, and after addressing them on the same subject, one of them asked if there would be preaching. Yes, replied Dr. D., if you will bring sixty soldiers to hear! One went out, and Dr. D. and his assistant retired a few moments for prayer, and when they returned he found the room filled with soldiers. The assistant spoke from the parable of the virgins. When he had nearly finished the officer sent for the men, but they would not stir until he had entirely finished. Another call was made, but they would not go until all was ended. This being done, they went out very orderly, and to each one he gave a tract, with which they were well pleased.

LIGHT IN MISSOURI.

It is gratifying to mark the evidences, every day coming to light, that slaveholders begin to see the danger of their favorite institution, and the necessity of doing something to modify or abolish it. The following are the opinions expressed by a Presbyterian Synod in Missouri, upon these important topics connected with slavery. If they were to be faithfully carried out, they would soon put an end to that iniquitous system:—

Marriage among Slaves.—The marriage relation is an appointment of God, and therefore sacred and inviolable. To secure this relation to our colored population, marriage among the blacks ought to be solemnized with the same rites as among the whites; the forcible separation of husband and wife, or of children from their parents for the sake of gain, is a violation of the rule laid down by Christ—"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them;" and of the positive command of God—"Whatsoever God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

Reading the Bible.—It is the duty of masters to give to their servants opportunities of religious instruction; to this end we recommend that they may be taught to read the Bible, and that they be not only allowed, but required, to attend regularly on religious worship, both in the family and in the house of God, either with their masters, or a service expressly for themselves.

Emancipation.—Living as we do, in a slave State, we are yet free to declare to the North and the South, that we desire and pray for the entire removal of slavery from among us, so soon as it can be done with safety and manifest advantage, not so much to the masters as to the servants themselves.

Clergymen in Office.—Until quite recently ministers of the Gospel in the State of New York have been excluded from holding civil offices. It would seem from the following facts however, that the notion of their unfitness for such offices does not extend all over the country:—

Edward Everett began life as a Unitarian minister in Boston. He was soon called to fill a Professorship in Harvard University; next he became Member of Congress; then Minister to Great Britain; and now he rests in the dignified position of President of the oldest and richest college in the country.

George Bancroft, although he was never ordained, studied theology as a Unitarian, and preached many times in various pulpits. Afterwards he turned his thoughts to politics, became Collector of the Port of Boston, then Secretary of the Navy, and is now Minister to the Court of St. James.

John G. Palfrey was first pastor of the Brattle-street church in Boston; the same that Mr. Everett had charge of; he then became Editor of the North American Review; then Secretary of the State of Massachusetts, and then a candidate for Congress.

Quarterly Meeting.—We are requested to give notice, that there will be a Quarterly Meeting held with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Scott, Cortland Co., N. Y., on the last Sabbath in December, 1846.

The Jews in Hanover.—Several decisions have recently been made in a Court in Hanover, which give some idea of the oppression to which the Jews are subject. A law was passed long ago, it appears, that no debt due from a Christian to a Jew could be collected if the Jew should transfer the obligation to another Christian. Many cases of bona fide transfer having taken place in ignorance of this statute, the lawyers have brought it forth, and the Judges have decided according to it—thus cancelling the claims of the Jews against the Christians.

The Jews of Cracow.—The "Orient" says that the situation of the Cracow Jews has become very melancholy since the last insurrection. A heavy tax is imposed upon them for the maintenance of the garrison. Being levied according to the ratio of the poll-tax, it is worse for them than for the other inhabitants. The prohibition against the Jews going to town on Sunday, which was not enforced before the insurrection, is now renewed.

Jewish Liberality.—The Jews of Kingston, Jamaica, have been holding a Fair to raise money for the promotion of religious education in that city. Articles for the occasion were prepared and sent from various parts of the country. From the proceeds of the exhibition, the Committee were enabled to pay all the expenses, invest $3,000 for the benefit of the schools, and clothe sixty needy children.

Defections from Judaism.—A correspondent of a Jewish periodical, called the "Israelite of the 19th Century," laments the continual increase of defections from Judaism in Berlin, and estimates the number at 2,000.

Missionary Contributions.—The receipts of the Baptist Missionary Union for the month of October, were $5,485 43. The receipts of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention for the month ending Oct. 15, were $1,651 72. The receipts of the Presbyterian Board for the month of September, were $1,288 61; of the American Board for the same period, $8,116,00.

Noble Reply.—A letter in the Baptist Missionary Magazine, dated Douay, Oct. 1, gives an account of the success and persecutions of Rev. Mr. Lepoix. On one occasion he was brought before the civil authorities, forbidden to preach to more than twenty auditors at a time, and threatened with the penalty of the law in case he should do it. His reply to the office was as follows:—

"Sir, permit me also to tell you, that it never entered into the views of our society to contend with authority. Far from desiring it, we carefully avoid it; nevertheless, having the firm conviction that our object is good, and that we ought to pursue it by all honorable means, I have the honor to declare to you that we shall continue as formerly. As for me personally, sir, I know that you will prosecute me, and, as I am the father of a family, and poor, I will not pay you. Perhaps imprisonment will follow; but it matters little; my conscience forces me to do my duty, and, by the grace of God, I will accomplish it."

Revivals in Persia.—The Vermont Chronicle publishes an extract from a highly interesting letter from Ooroomiah, dated May 13th, in which the writer says that the revival continues "as interesting as ever." He speaks of the work as one of "great mercy," so great that our missionaries "could hardly believe what they saw and heard." The work of conviction (he says) has been very thorough, in most cases, with deep and pungent feelings. In some cases individuals have not been able to sleep, from deep anxiety, and have spent whole nights in weeping and praying for themselves and others. You would be exceedingly interested to hear the young converts pray, I am sure. I never heard such prayers any where; such fluency, and such appropriateness of thought and language."

Missionary for Liberia.—At a Presbyterian Synod, held at Wetumpka, Ala., a negro, named Ellis, was admitted to the ministry. He is to be sent as a missionary to Liberia. The Enfaula Shield says that his wife and children have been purchased by the Presbyterian church at a cost of $2,500. He has acquired his education by his own exertions, and, upon examination, proved himself a good Latin, Greek, and Hebrew scholar, but better versed in Greek. His examination in theology was highly satisfactory. He is said to be very humble and polite in his manners and conversation—demeaning himself at all times in a way becoming his condition in life. He is quite black, about 25 years of age. He has appended to his name the name of his former master, and is now known by that of Harrison Ellis.

Retrocession.—The Protestant Witness says that Saxony, the cradle, of the Reformation, is now the center of Rationalism in Germany; as Geneva, the city of Calvin, has become the focus of Arianism and semi-infidelity with respect to the Protestant countries which speak the French language. Thus, too, the most corrupt of modern cities of Christendom is the same Rome whence the gospel, in primitive times, was propagated to the West. Should not all this teach us to put no trust in "the things which are seen and temporal," but to look to Him only, who sits above the heavens, and is the Author and Finisher of our faith?

The Colporteur Work.—A colporteur of the American Tract Society says, in the American Messenger:—"The Lord owns and blesses my public efforts. I have witnessed more than 80 hopeful conversions during the last two months, many of the individuals publicly declaring that it was the reading of books received from me that first awakened them to their danger. This has amply rewarded me for all my toil. I am sure that the colporteur work has done, and will do, great good in our country."

☞We cheerfully comply with the request of the Corresponding Secretary of the American Peace Society, to publish the following :—

PETITIONS FOR PEACE.

To the friends of Peace throughout the United States:—

Permit us to solicit your special aid in hastening the present war with Mexico to as speedy a close as possible by petitions to Congress for the purpose;—a request which we make to you not as partisans, but as Christian patriots, East or West, North or South.

You all understand the history of this war too well to need from us any comments on its origin or its progress, on the evils it has already inflicted, or the still greater evils which it threatens. It was begun with the confident assurance, that it would "conquer a peace with Mexico" in two or three months; but, after the lapse of seven or eight months, it seems to human view as far as ever from a close, its evils are fast increasing beyond all original calculations, and both its parties are breathing towards each other more and more of such a spirit as forebodes a conflict of indefinite duration and incalculable mischief.

Such is the present state of the case; and what shall now be done by the friends of Peace, of Christianity, and of republican institutions brought by this war into disrepute and danger? Shall we fold our hands in apathy or despair, and let war still roll its tide of blood, and crime, and woe, over these broad realms of boasted liberty? Cannot this war be brought to a close without any more loss of blood and treasure? We feel sure it can be done, if good men, relying on God, say it SHALL be. Our own government alone could, if so disposed, stop the war at once, and yet secure every proper, justifiable object, if such there be, for which it was commenced. Let our rulers recall our troops forthwith from the acknowledged territory of Mexico within the unquestionable limits of Texas, and then propose to ad ust all difficulties between the two republics, either by negotiation, or by reference; and the war must of course come to an end at once.

Is it not, then, in the power of sober men through the country to secure such a result very soon? The public are at length opening their eyes to the nature and inevitable results of this war; and, if all good men of every sect and party through the land would only unite in respectful but determined remonstrances against the continuance of the war, and in earnest petitions for its speedy termination, we think our rulers, who can stop it whenever they please, would not continue it much longer.

With these views, may we not solicit your aid in procuring petitions to Congress? This request we would fain press upon every reader of this article, but especially Christian ministers, and trust they will not deem us obtrusive in asking them to bring this subject in some way before their people at once, and to take measures for having a petition signed by as many as possible in the place, and then forwarded immediately to some member of Congress, with a note bespeaking his services in behalf of the object. Is not here an appropriate work for the patriot, the philanthropist, and especially every disciple of the Prince of Peace? If only one in ten of the three millions of professed Christians in our country, would join in earnest petitions for peace, and follow them with their prayers to God, would not our rulers listen and respond ere long to their request? Will they not send up such petitions by hundreds, if not by thousands, from all parts of the country?

On behalf of the American Peace Society, and by order of its Executive Committee.

GEO. C. BECKWITH, Cor. Secretary.

Boston, December 1, 1846.

P. S. We subjoin two forms of petitions, either of which, with any variations thought desirable, may be copied, and, after being duly signed, sent to a member of Congress in an envelope, with such an inscription on the back as this—Petition for Peace with Mexico from A. B. and 106 other inhabitants of ———

TO THE HONORAPLE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES :—

The undersigned, inhabitants of —— in the State of ———, respectfully petition your Honorable Bodies to use all your constitutional powers for terminating as soon as possible the present war with Mexico, without any further effusion of blood.

OR,

The undersigned, &c., deploring the manifold evils to both countries, of the present war with Mexico, and seeing no need or use of its longer continuance, respectfully but earnestly entreat your Honorable Bodies to take such measures, within your constitutional powers, as you may deem best for bringing this war to as speedy a close as possible, without any further waste of blood or treasure.

OUT WEST.—The New York Tribune says that the bark Whiton, Capt. Roland Gelston, has just sailed for California and Columbia River, with a full cargo of Government stores and merchandize, and a number of passengers. Among the passengers are Rev. William Roberts, of the New Jersey Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, his wife and two children; Rev. J. H. Wilbur, of the Black River Conference, his wife and daughter. These two go out to reinforce the Methodist Mission in Oregon, and will probably reach their destination some time in July next. The other passengers are Mr. Edward F. Folger, Richard Andrews, G. W. Whitlock, Geo. S. Wardell, Chas. L. Ross, and Jas. C. L. Wadsworth. These go out in a mercantile capacity, having merchandize for the markets of California and Oregon. The owners of the bark are Messrs. James Bishop & Co., of New Brunswick, N. J.

PENALTY FOR LYING.—In the New Haven Colony, in 1656, there was a law, that "if any person above the age of 14 years, shall willingly make and publish any Lie, which may be pernicious to the public weal, the offender shall pay to the Plantation, as it is a sin against God, for the first offence, 10s., and for the second, 20s.; and if unable to pay, he shall be committed to the stocks—for the first offence, one hour, for the second, four hours, and if he offends the third time, he shall be publicly whipped, and may be bound over to the Court of Magistrates."

General Intelligence.

ORGANIZATION OF CONGRESS.

By Telegraphic Dispatch to the N. Y. Tribune, we learn that the Second Session of the 29th Congress opened on Monday, Dec. 7, at noon.

The Vice President called the SENATE to order. A resolution was passed directing the Secretary to inform the House that a quorum was present, and ready to proceed to business A Committee was also appointed to wait on the President and announce the organization of both Houses. Each Senator was allowed newspapers equal to the cost of three daily papers.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES was called to order by the Speaker. The Clerk was directed to inform the Senate that a quorum was present, and a Committee was appointed to wait on the President. 182 members were present. After some parley as to the mode of choosing seats, it was concluded to place the names of members in a box, and draw out at random, leaving each to select in his turn. Adjourned.

[The President's Message was probably communicated to Congress at 12 o'clock on Tuesday. As we usually go to press at that hour, and a change of time would discommode not a few, we must defer all account of it until next week.]

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Caledonia arrived at Boston on the 5th, bringing Liverpool papers to Nov. 19.

The Caledonia arrived at Liverpool on the 15th ult., in 13 1-2 days from Boston, and brings the report of her own arrival out. She was only 62 hours at Liverpool; in this brief space of time, she discharged her cargo hence, took in her coal and a return cargo for Boston, having been absent from this port only 34 3-4 days.

The Grain markets, both in England and on the Continent, are down. Cotton had also declined. The money market remained about the same as at previous advices.

Hon. Geo. Bancroft has taken up his residence in Eaton-square, Belgrave-place, London. On the 12th ult. he dined with the Queen, at Windsor Castle; and on the following Saturday was, with his lady, at a select party at Lord Palmerston's, the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The Great Britain is still ashore; but plans are offered for protecting her through the winter, and getting her off in the spring.

The accounts from Ireland are of a more favorable character. Employment has become general, and the price of food is very decidedly lower.

The French Minister of Public Works has received a general report on the ravages committed by the floods, from which it appears that it will require upwards of 65,000,000 francs to repair the bridges, embankments, roads, &c., which have been destroyed, and to execute the works necessary to prevent the re-occurrence of a similar disaster. The estimate does not comprise the amount of injury suffered by private property.

On the 1st ult. there were in Bremen not fewer than 800 emigrants waiting to proceed to the United States. Among them were upward of 100 Poles, the rest being Germans. It has been observed of late, that Poles are quitting their country in great numbers.

The Turkish Government has issued a memorandum prohibiting the exportation of corn from the province of the Straits of the Dardanelles, on the pretext that the natives of that district are accustomed to sell their corn improvidently, and are obliged afterward to buy at higher prices.

Thomas Moore, the bard of Erin, is dangerously ill. The Ballinasloe Star has the following: A private letter says, "I lament to have to tell you of the rapidly declining health of Ireland's most honored poet. The sun of life is fast setting, and it is feared that his disolution is near at hand."

The cholera has extended its ravages from Persia to Bagdad, in which city about one hundred victims to the disease were, by the last account, perishing daily.

Mr. George Turner, of Leeds, has discovered an explosive compound cheaper than that from cotton. Instead of cotton he uses saw dust or any fibrous vegetable matter which he immerses from eight to ten minutes in equal measures of nitric acid, specific gravity one and a half, and of common oil of vitriol. A slight increases the rapidity of combustion. With this prepared saw dust, Mr. Turner discharged a pocket pistol, loaded with ball, with force eqnal to that of gunpowder. Weight for weight, he thinks the saw dust will prove the better projectile.

A writer in the Boston Courier, over the signature of "J. N. B." estimates the rise in value on the agricultural productions of the United States, since September 1, 1846, as follows: On the crop of Indian corn (estimated at 480,000,000 bushels) the advance (estimated at 25 cents per bushel) is $120,000,000; on the crop of wheat the advance is estimated at $56,000,000; on the crop of oats $16,000,000; rye $36,000,000; on the crop of hay the advance (in consequence of the increased use of corn and other grains for bread stuffs) is estimated at $45,000,000. Showing a total rise in value of $273,000,000.

The Prairie Farmer says parsnips are preferred by hogs to all other roots, and make excellent pork. By them they can be fattened in six weeks. A porker of mine, 22 months old, and weighing nett 740 lbs., never ate any thing but raw parsnips and sour milk; and finer meat never was seen; in the use of parsnips for stock they should not be washed, but be given as they are taken from the ground. Used in this way, they are found not to surfeit the hogs and cattle. They are good to fatten cattle, and if given freely to cows, will much improve the quality and quantity of their milk.

The Baltimore correspondent of the Philadelphia North American states that on last Sunday morning, when the congregations were coming out of Church, in passing the Museum a huge wild animal of South America, called the Peccary, fell from the second window of the building among the crowd, striking a young lady on the shoulder in its descent. There was a good deal of consternation and scatteration produced by such a visitant from above.

The True Sun says: Mr. F. Stein, of Charleston, S. C., has just finished a year clock, the machinery of which stands on a marble stand, enclosed in a glass case, so that all the works can be seen. The dial plate has an outer circle, with hands, indicating the hours and minutes of the day, and four inner circles, with hands, designating, respectively, seconds and half seconds, the months of the year, and days of the month, and the days of the week. Only four wheels are used to set this machine in motion. The clock also strikes the hour, and is of portable dimensions, suitable for the mantle-piece.

A Cleaveland (Ohio) correspondent of the Chronotype, (George Bradburn,) says that Mr. John Champion Vaughan, who has edited the True American since C. M. Clay went to the war, is about to visit New England soon for the purpose of raising means to establish an Anti-Slavery press at Louisville, Ky. Mr. Vaughan was formerly one of the editors of the Cincinnati Gazette, is a native of South Carolina, and a man of much ability.

A very distressing accident occurred in Charles Co., Md., a few days ago, in the family of Mr. Wilson Compton. Two of his children, a little boy and girl, nearly of the same age, were playing together in the yard, and just as the former was about to strike a stick of wood with an axe, his sister stooped to pick it up, and received the blow upon her head. She died the next day.

Christian Andersen, the Danish writer, says that "the poet sings because, like the bird, he cannot help it; something swells in his breast and in his thoughts. The song will out; it spreads like the light, it rises like the waves; but very often Nature places a leaf of her great music before him, and it is a challenge to sing, and then he sings from her notes."

The steamship North America, from St. John, N. B., for Boston, was totally lost on Wednesday night at Long Island, Mount Desert. She burst her steam-pipe during a very heavy gale from S. S. W. and drifted to within half a mile of the shore, when both anchors were let go. The sea was running very heavily, and the vessel strained very badly. She soon water-logged, and the cables were cut and she went ashore. The passengers and crew were all saved except the fireman. The vessel and cargo, with part of her baggage, a total loss.

It is earnestly requested that steamboats navigating the Sound should have masts. It is said that if the Atlantic had had a jib, when the wind shifted she could have clawed off the shore, and avoided the disaster. When her steam engine got broke, the only dependence was upon sails, and these unfortunately she had not.

The St. Louis Republican has later dates from Santa Fe. Great fears were entertained that the stock of provisions would be altogether inadequate to supply the Army during the winter. The American soldiers were in a state of insubordination, and were daily committing outrages on the Mexicans. The consequence was, that assassinations were becoming very numerous.

It is said that Gen. Scott expressed the opinion, before leaving here to take charge of the operations in Mexico, that if the supplies and other means ordered by the Government should reach their points of destination in due time, the Country ought to expect a peace with Mexico by the middle or last of July—certainly within the coming year.

Mr. Gould, the naturalist, who was some years absent on an ornithological tour in New Zealand and Australia, is about to leave England on an expedition to Gautemala, and other parts of Central America, in order to explore the natural history of those regions.

Dr. Bailey, who has conducted the Morning Herald, a Liberty party paper, at Cincinnati, during the last three years, has withdrawn from that paper to become editor of 'The National Era,' the new Anti-Slavery journal about to be established at Washington. J. G. Whittier and Rev. A. A. Phelps are to be associated with him as corresponding editors.

Counterfeit tens on the Chemung Canal Bank are in circulation at the West, dated Elmira, 1st Sept. The paper is somewhat lighter than the genuine, the Register's signiture poorly executed, and the engraving on the whole somewhat coarser than the genuine.

DIED,

Independence, N. Y., Nov. 29th, MAXSON G. LIVERMORE, aged 23 years. In early life Br. Livermore publicly professed faith in Jesus Christ, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist church. In all the relations of life, he sustained a character becoming his profession. During his illness, which was short, his confidence in his Saviour was unshaken; and even in the hour of death his faith triumphed over every fear, affording another evidence of the power of the Gospel. The church has sustained a loss in his death not easily repaired, and his wife is bereaved of an affectionate husband. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of people, to whom a discourse was preached by Eld. S. S. Griswold, from John 11: 25—"He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live again."

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The next Semi-Annual Session of the Central Association will be held with the church in DeRuyter, on the third and fourth days of the week before the first Sabbath in January, (Dec. 29 and 30,) to attend to our Missionary Operations, and to consider the subject of obtaining Legal Protection on the Sabbath for all Sabbath-keepers. It is desirable that the delegates from all the churches come prepared to act efficiently in these matters. Any church or individual desiring to aid any of the benevolent operations of the denomination can now do so through the Executive Board of the Association.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

ELIHU BURRITT, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in ADVANCE.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound, It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

THE WEEKLY CHRONOTYPE,

IS published weekly by WHITE, POTTER & WRIGHT, at No 2 Devonshire Street, near State Street, Boston. Terms—$2 a year, in advance. For $5 three copies will be sent to one address. A liberal discount will be made to Agents who pay for a larger number of copies. Edited by

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

This paper is not bound to the creed or cause of any clique, association, party, sect or set of men, but expresses freely the opinions of its editor at the time, and of such contributors as may honor it with their thoughts, or be supposed by the editor to do so. It will be his endeavor to give such a variety and quantity of matter as to meet the wants of every enlightened family, and especially of those which seek more light. He will not only give the daguerreotype likeness of Time as he passes, but will examine every new thing that he meets, and some things that are old, without fear or favor. Where he cannot convince, he will try to be good-natured. Where he cannot satisfy himself of the truth, he will be contented to confess his ignorance. In short, he will endeavor to help forward, in a neighborly way, every thing but Humbug. That he will endeavor to knock down and drag out, even if it should cling to the throne of political power or the horns of the sacred altar.

He will not take an oath never to be wiser. He will not scorn truth, though it may come from an enemy. He will not flatter the poor because he is one of them. He will not hate and abuse the rich because he is not one of them. But he will endeavor to establish a better understanding between the extremes of society—showing both ends that happiness is most likely to be found between them—consisting in a great measure in a mutual endeavor to abolish idleness, disease, poverty and roguery.

With these general purposes, it is the prime object of the editor of this paper to get an honest living.

Miscellaneous.

THE HISTORY OF LIFE.

I saw an infant in its mother's arms,
And left it sleeping;
Years passed—I saw a girl with woman's charms,
In sorrow weeping.

Years passed—I saw a mother with her child,
And o'er it languish;
Years brought me back—yet through her tears she smiled
In deeper anguish.

I left her—years had vanished; I returned,
I stood before her;
A lamp beside the childless widow burned—
Grief's mantle o'er her.

In tears I found her whom I left in tears,
On God relying;
And I returned again in after years,
And found her dying.

An infant first, and then a maiden fair—
A wife—a mother—
And then a childless widow in despair—
Thus met a brother.

And thus we meet on earth, and thus we part,
To meet—oh, never!
Till death beholds the spirit leave the heart,
To live forever.

CONCERNING SEVERAL BOYS.

There was a little boy named John Smeaton. He would often leave his play, to watch men at their work. He would ask how one part was to be fitted to another, and how the thing was to be used when it was done. If money was given him to buy cakes or play-things, he chose rather to spend it on tools, and tried to do what he had seen done with them. Once he was seen at the top of his father's barn, fixing something like a wind-mill. At another time he saw some men fixing a pump, and took great notice of all they did. They had a thick piece of wood with a hole bored through it; it was longer than they wanted, so they cut off a bit. The little boy asked if he might have the bit. It was given to him, and with it he made a little real pump with which he could raise water. When John Smeaton became a man, he contrived many clever and useful things. He found better ways than had been known before of making mills, to be turned by wind or water; and he built a tall light-house on the top of a rock in the sea, which serves as a lantern to show sailors which way they should go, and warn them where there is danger. By this means many lives have been saved, and many people have bad reason to be glad that John Smeaton was not a careless, idle boy.

Another boy, named Isaac Newton, lived at a farm, and was often sent to mind the sheep and cattle, or assist in driving them to market. But while he did what he was told to do in this way, he tried also to get learning, and was much pleased when he was sent to school. He amused himself by making a wind-mill and a wooden clock; and was once found on a hay-loft, trying to do a very hard sum. Once he saw an apple fall from a tree in the garden. Many boys would only have picked it up and eaten it. But Isaac Newton was set thinking how and why it was that when the stalk broke the apple fell to the ground. Did you ever think why this is? If you wish to know, ask your papa and mama to explain it to you; it is well worth knowing. By thinking about this common thing, Isaac Newton was led to find out more than was ever known before about how the sun, moon, stars and earth kept their right places, and moved about in such beautiful order. This led him to admire and adore the wisdom and goodness of God, who rules the whole. As you grow older it will be very pleasant to you to learn what this great man found out, and the use of the knowledge he gained by minding what he saw.

One little boy, named Benjamin West, was set to mind a little baby, asleep in its cradle. He looked at it kindly, and felt pleased to see it smile in its sleep. He wished he could draw a picture of the baby; and, seeing a piece of paper on the table, and a pen and ink, he tried what he could. When his mother came in, he begged her not to be angry with him for touching the pen, ink, and paper; and he showed her the picture he had made. His mother knew at once what it was meant for. She was much pleased, and kissed her little boy. Then he said, if she liked it, he would make pictures of some flowers she held in her hand; and so he went on trying to do better and better, till he became one of the finest painters in the world.

Now one little story about a poor little Irish chimney-sweep. Some kind person wished to collect all the chimney-sweepers in Dublin to teach them to read the Bible. One little boy was asked if he knew his letters? He said, yes. Then he was asked if he could read? He said he could. He was next asked where he went to school, and in what book he had learned to read? He said he had never been at school at all, and he had never yet had any book. It was a wonder how he could have learned to read and spell; but the case was this, another little sweep, a little older than himself, had taught him to read by showing him the letters over the shop doors, as they passed along the streets. See what may be done by trying and taking pains. [London Child's Magazine.

THE INJURED INDIAN WIFE.

Maj. Long tells a romantic story in connection with the falls of St. Anthony:—An Indian of the Dacota nation had united himself in his youth to a female called Ampato Sapa, the Dark Day, a name which, if given at her birth, and not afterwards bestowed in allusion to her unfortunate end, would seem to show that they possessed the power of divination. They lived happily together many years. Two children were the fruit of their union. The man, having acquired renown as a hunter, aspired to be elected a chief. To increase his dignity and importance, and to strengthen his influence, he resolved to add another wife to his household, and fixed his choice on the daughter of a man of influence in the tribe. When he had made known his determination to his wife, she endeavored to dissuade him, by reminding him of their long-cherished love, and the happiness they had enjoyed together. Finding no arguments available, and, in fact, that he had already executed his purpose of a second marriage, she observed her opportunity, launched her light bark canoe, and placing her children in it, pushed off into the stream above the fall. Her death-song was heard, clear and shrill, by her friends upon the banks of the river. She recited, with a mournful voice, the pleasures she had enjoyed when the undivided object of her husband's affection. As she fell faster and faster down the current, her voice became lost in the sound of the cataract. Her boat was borne to the edge of the cascade, was seen for a moment in the spray and mist that hovered over the water, and disappeared, to be seen no more. The Indians say that, often, in the morning, a voice is heard singing a mournful requiem, the burden of which is the inconstancy of her husband. And some assert that the spirit of Ampato Sapa has been seen wandering about the place with her children in her bosom.

AN EVENTFUL LIFE.

From the tenth report of the Inspectors of Prisons we make the following extract:—"A poor fellow, named Joseph F——, committed to the Lancaster Castle for begging, and about to be discharged in a few days, gave the following singular outline of his past life:—'I was born in Scotland, and brought up a millwright. At fifteen years old I entered the 32d Foot, in which regiment I served eleven years. I was in Spain and Portugal—Salamanca and the siege of San Sebastian. I was at Quatre Bras and at Waterloo. At the former place the Duke twice over placed himself in our square. I received two slight wounds at Quatre Bras, and two more, also slight, at Waterloo. I went to Paris with my regiment, and got my discharge in 1816. A Polish general engaged me (through Sir John Rennie) as a millwright, to go to Roxaoko (Rosienna?) in Lithuania. I made £150 a year wages for four years, and saved a hundred a year. I then came to Warsaw and learned to brew from a countryman. I commenced the trade of a brewer in 1821 in conjunction with two other persons. I also had a millwright concern, and a flour mill. Some little time after, Dr. M'Call the missionary came to Warsaw, and I engaged myself to him as interpreter, being able to speak Russian, German and Polish. I went with Dr. M'Call to St. Petersburgh, Moscow, Astracan, Tobolsk, Archangel, Vienna, Rome (where Dr. M'Call dined twice with the Pope,) Naples, Genoa, Sicily; then through Austria into Hungary, Brodof, (Brod or Brad?) where there are a great many Jews, Cracow and Warsaw. This occupied about two years and three months. During the ten years we were in business, the firm to which I belonged realized about £30,000, my share being £11,000.

Then came the bombardment of Warsaw, in 1830. A child and two of my workmen were killed, and all my property was destroyed. I was reduced to nothing. In 1833 the Emperor Nicholas came, and I sent a petition to him. He granted me an interview, and ordered me £200, (in ducats.) I afterwards engaged myself as manager to a brewery; but the principals failed. I then engaged with another establishment, and made a mere living of it, every thing having been ruined by the revolution. I left Warsaw in 1842, and came to London, where I spent a short time with Dr. M'Call. Lord Dudley Stuart was kind to me, and gave me £10, to carry me to the north. I was on my way from Scotland to seek some friends in Liverpool, when my money being all gone, I was taken up for begging.' This singular story was given in answer to numerous questions. F. does not seem to be aware that his life has been more eventful than that of most others.

FLOURISHING A HANDKERCHIEF.

In some parts of Europe it is not unusual to bring about matrimonial engagements by means of advertisements. Some years ago, it was agreed in a gay party of ladies and gentlemen, in London, that an advertisement should be inserted in a morning paper, as from a young lady, rich and beautiful, who felt inclined to the state of matrimony. In the course of the day letters were received from between fifty and sixty swains of all descriptions, in reply to each of whom an answer was addressed, stating that the lady wished, previous to his being introduced to her, to see him, at the same time requesting each to be in the pit of the Druly Lane theatre on the following evening, dressed in a blue coat, white pantaloons, and scarlet vest, and immediately on the conclusion of the first act to stand upon the benches, flourish a white handkerchief in one hand, and apply a glass to the right eye with the other. Every thing succeeded so well that as soon as the curtain fell, about fifty individuals, of all ages, forthwith mounted the benches, from the smooth chinned Adonis of 18, to the sleek, portly, self-confident widower of 50, and the emaciated bachelor of 60, dressed in uniform, according to orders, in the gayest style, and with the utmost nicety, to make deeper the impression on the heart of the fair prize. High swelled their bosoms with hope, as, with studied action, the handkerchief was flourished and the glass raised to the eye. But who shall paint the astonishment, dismay, and rage, which were depicted in every countenance as they gazed upon each other and discovered the sudden failure of all their hopes? With almost incredible velocity, they descended from their unenviable attitudes to "hide their diminished heads" among the crowd.

AN ELEPHANT'S REMEMBERANCE.

In the autobiography of Mr. Lindley Murray, published in 1826, a passage occurs from which it appears that one of the clearest heads that ever engaged in the business of analysis, had been well nigh cracked, some sixty years ago, by a simple agent, and for a small offence. In the year 1771 he visited the elephants at the Queen's palace, Buckingham, and from what ever motive, ventured to withdraw with his cane a portion of the hay, which one of them had been collecting with his proboscis on the floor. This little affront offended the sagacious animal highly. The keeper remarked that he would never forget it, and it was obvious, from the rapid convulsions of his trunk, that he only wanted an opportunity to avenge the misappropriation of his property on the spot. The grammarian, however, kept out of his way, and probably thought no more of the matter, until he chanced to revisit the same place after an interval of several weeks. On this occasion, a number of other persons were present, but of the whole, the elephant singled out his old enemy, and aimed a desperate blow at his head, which, fortunately for the world, neither proved fatal or took effect. Mr. Murray was astonished, as well he might, and deduced an excellent moral from the circumstance, which it may be proper to give in his own words: "This incident made some impression on me, and perhaps contributed to subdue a curiosity which could not be gratified but at the expense of the feelings of others."

How Many do You Pay for?—It is ascertained from the public records kept at the Municipal Court, that there is, on an average, one drunkard committed for each of the twenty-four hours of the day. There are about ten thousand places in this City and County, where liquor is sold, and of these three thousand are furnished with licenses. The revenue from these amounts to about thirty thousand dollars a year, a sum not much more than sufficient to pay the interest on seven-eights of the pauper and criminal taxes imposed by intemperance. The city treasury must necessarily pay the wages of the carmen who are employed to carry these street drunkards to the Tombs, and the fees of the officers who are employed to do the dirtiest work of the rum trade—picking up the loathsome and helpless wretches who are thrust out of the porter-houses all over the city, by the men who have reduced them to this disgusting condition. It is a question which may be of interest to tax-payers—"How many do I pay for?" [Visitor and Advertiser.

Marriage in Lapland.—It is death in Lapland to marry a maid without the consent of her parents and friends. When a young man has formed an attachment for a young female, the fashion is to appoint their friends to meet to behold the two young parties run a race together. The maid is allowed, in starting, the third part of the race, so that it is impossible, except voluntarily, that she should be overtaken.

If the maid out-run her suitor, the matter is ended; he must never have her, it being penal for the man to renew the proposal for marriage. But if the virgin has an affection for him, though at first she runs hard, to try the truth of his love, she will, without Atalanta's golden ball to retard her speed, pretend some casualty, and make a voluntary halt before she comes to the mark, or the end of the race. Thus none are compelled to marry without their own will; and that is the reason why the married people in this poor country, are richer in their contentment than in other lands where so many forced matches make feigned love, and cause real unhappiness.

Tame Bees, Wasps, and Flies.—Education does much among animals; they are singularly susceptible, especially when certain methods, which would be interesting to know, are used. One Windham, an Englishman, had a peculiar talent for educating bees, wasps, and even flies. On the fourth of June, 1764, in the presence of the stadtholder and his consort, he made several experiments on the education and economy of bees. He displayed a comb full of these insects, and in the space of two minutes he caused them to leave the comb and settle on a hat of one of the spectators; thence he caused them to alight on his naked arm; next, he caused them to settle upon his head and face, on which they made a kind of mask; he afterwards caused them to march upon a table, according to his orders. That which was most extraordinary in the talents and conduct of this singular man was, that he could make the same experiments with whatever swarm was offered him, and even wasps and other flies; and that he could tame the most mischievous in the space of five minutes, without danger of being stung.

A Curiosity.—An exchange says that a watch maker of Paris has constructed a clock of a curious and most ingenious nature. The description of it is as follows:—

"It is made with eleven dials. The principal dial shows the hours alone; a transparent one, immediately below the former, shows the progression and retrogression of the sun; two others, also transparent, and through which the mechanism of this immense machine can be seen, mark, the one the days of the month, the other the seconds. Eight square enamelled dials are arranged round two sides of the pendulum, and show the hour in each of the following cities:—Alexandria, St. Helena, Otaheite, Canton, New York, and St. Petersburgh. Each of these dials is marked with 24 hours instead of 12, so as to show the hours of the day, and those of the night. Lastly, the pendulum carries a large metrical scale, indicating the degree of expansion and contraction of metal. This clock cost 14,000 francs, or about £600.

Defence of the Goose.—It is a great libel to accuse a goose of being a silly bird. Even a tame goose shows much instinct and attachment; and were its habits more closely observed, the tame would be found to be by no means wanting in general cleverness. Its watchfulness at night-time is, and always has been, proverbial; and it certainly is endowed with a strong organ of self-preservation. You may drive over dog, cat, hen, or pig, but I defy you to drive over a tame goose. As for wild geese, I know of no animal, biped or quadruped, that is so difficult to deceive or approach. Their senses of hearing, seeing, and smelling are all extremely acute; independently of which, they appear to act in so organized and cautious a manner when feeding or roosting as to defy all danger. Many a time has my caution been of no avail in attempting to approach these birds; either a careless step on a piece of gravel, or an eddy of wind, however light, or letting them perceive the smallest portion of my person, has rendered useless whole hours of manœuvering.

VARIETY.

Some valuable manuscript records of the early history of Georgia were shipped from Liverpool more than six months ago, and, on their passage to Savannah, the vessel was wrecked on the coast of North Carolina. They were re-shipped, and again the vessel was wrecked. Eventually, they were sent in their wet condition to New York, where a Savannah gentleman took possession of them for the Historical Society. Although the papers were thoroughly soaked with salt water, yet the ink has resisted its action, and the writing is entirely ligible.

The Constitution of the United States names the 4th of March for the inauguration of the President. Upon expressing doubts as to what course would be adopted, should the 4th of March fall on Sunday, it was ascertained that it would not fall on Sunday for three hundred years. That is to say, the 4th of March every fourth year. If it did, however, the inauguration would take place on that day.

In France, all ladies who do not possess a decidedly ample fortune, make it a point to learn some practical art or business, which in case of reverse of fortune they may use to obtain a living. There are said to be a thousand females among the easy classes in this city, who are destitute of any acquirement that could be made available in case of necessity.

James II., when Duke of York, made a visit to Milton out of curiosity. In the course of their conversation, the Duke said to the poet, that he thought his blindness was a judgment of heaven on him, because he had written against Charles I., his (the Duke's) father, when the immortal poet replied:—"If your highness thinks that misfortunes are indexes of the wrath of Heaven, what must you think of your father's tragical end? I have only lost my eyes—but he lost his head."

Sir William Temple says, "A man has but these four things to choose out of: to exercise daily, to be very temperate, to take physic, or be sick." In reference to these remarks, Dr. Bell says, "We may venture to assert, with a much later writer, that the principal secrets of health are early rising, exercise, personal cleanliness, and leaving the table unoppressed."

S. Brown, in the Boston Cultivator, says, "We have fed two farrow cows with carrots, from the time of housing to the present date, and the result is, they have given twice the quantity of milk they would have produced without them and of a richer quality; the butter made from them churns quick, and is nearly equal to June butter."

Laying hens should be provided, through the winter, with lime to pick, as also with occasional messes of fresh meat of some kind. By attention to these particulars, they may be kept to laying, even when the earth is covered with snow; nor must it be forgotten that they require daily allowances of grain of some kind. Corn, buckwheat, and oats, alternately given them, afford an excellent change of diet, and conduce to the preservation of their health.

The following is the simplest mode of preserving eggs we have met with: First a layer of plaster, then a layer of eggs—not allowing one egg to touch another—with the small end downward. Over the layer of eggs put about three inches of plaster, then cover the vessel closely. Eggs thus put up, have remained sweet and pure for eleven months. They must be put down within three days of being laid.

The lady mistress of a French family often sits in her kitchen and talks to her maids, and such is the reciprocal attachment between the heads of the family and their domestics, that lengthened servitude is very common. Small annuities are often left to faithful dependents, and, if a servant marries in service, a dinner is generally provided by the master or mistress, who entertain the bridal party with the utmost hospitality.

"Study the Bible," says the Sunday School Visiter. "There is no people upon the earth in whose minds intelligence and the love of virtue is more deeply imbedded than the Scotch. And there is none also by whom the Bible is more thoroughly studied—it is the first book put into the hands of the school-boy, and the little prattling Miss at home is taught to lisp the word of divine truth."

The English Parliament, after full deliberation with the principal engineers, have come to the determination to require all railroads hereafter made, to have their tracks 4 feet 8 1-2 inches wide. There are now in England roads of this width, that cost over fifty millions sterling; and roads of five to seven feet wide, costing five millions sterling. The question is under consideration, whether these wide roads shall be reduced to the general width, so that one car may travel all over the kingdom.

A London paper announces that seven thousand tailors, out of employment in London, had a meeting, and resolved to embark for Canada and the United States. A committee was appointed to collect subscriptions to pay the passage; 960 entered their names for Canada and Nova Scotia, and 2,904 for the United States. They will all be here in March or April next.

It is said that the King of the French, fearful of a short crop at some period of his reign, has for many years been storing away immense quantities of breadstuffs. The apprehended period has come; and now the wise king is supplying the deficiency from his well-stored granaries.

The United States Journal says "that there are more than twenty printers who are performing the duties of clerks in the departments at Washington, and that they are equal, if not superior, to others who had the advantages of a collegiate education."

It has well been said, "They are the most healthy who have nature for their cook; hunger for their caterer; who have no doctor but the sun and fresh air; and no other physic than temperance and exercise."

It is a notorious fact that the blood taken from the atm of a man given to drinking will take fire when a lighted taper is applied to it. A woman of Rheims in France was recently consumed, having taken fire spontaneously.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

A FARM FOR SALE,

IN the township of Piscataway, State of New Jersey, lying north-east from New Brunswick, half a mile from the Bridge, half a mile from Snyder's Mills, and in full view of the railroad car-house. Said farm consists of about ninety five acres of land, in a good state of cultivation, and well adapted to raising grain and vegetables. It has a good variety of fruit trees, considerable wood, and five acres of salt meadow. The house is in good repair, and has a well of water at the door. There is also a new barn, sheds, &c. For farther particulars call on Dr. Nelson Stelle, No. 146 Grand-st., N. Y.—Mr. Burris, No. 1 Oliver-st.—or on the premises of JONATHAN S. DUNHAM.

THE ORIGINAL SABBATH UNCHANGED.

BY JAMES A. BEGG.

SECTION V. [Continued.

The Observance of the Weekly Sabbath enjoined upon the Israelites.

Among other objections to the continuing obligation of the Sabbath, the prohibition to the Israelites, (Exod. xxxv. 3,) "Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath day," is often urged. It is said that if we will observe the seventh day, we ought not to have fire upon it; and, as it is assumed that fire is really necessary for our comfort, if not also for our health and our life, it is argued that therefore the seventh day cannot be obligatory upon us.

We cannot, indeed, see with what consistency such an objection can be advanced by any who regard the first day of the week as the Sabbath. The injunction, be it observed, is, ye shall kindle no fire "upon the Sabbath day;" and if the first day of the week were now really "the Sabbath day," the force of the injunction, whatever it is, must necessarily apply to the first day. The argument deduced from the rigor which the prohibition would imply, when enforced in northern latitudes, would then have its full bearing against the adopted day, which the objector intends only for that which has been divinely appointed. The prohibition against kindling fires is obviously drawn from the sacredness of the day, and if the first had by any competent authority been appointed to take the place of the seventh day, the prohibition would have been transferred with it. It is therefore very inconsistent in any who assert such a change of the Sabbath, to urge this as an objection specially applicable to our view of the obligation of the fourth commandment.

But our friends might be inconsistent in their urging such an objection, while yet an obligation to abstain from the kindling of fire on the Sabbath might remain. The import of the injunction, therefore, requires to be considered. In doing so, it is first to be noticed, that this is the only text in which, either directly or indirectly, any allusion is made to the use of fire on the Sabbath. We do not say this as intending to insinuate that the obligation of any divine injunction is less because it is not repeated in other texts—but only as suggesting the inquiry whether there be no particular circumstances to which the injunction in the special case alone refers. For, in point of fact, the call to this kind of sanctification of the Sabbath, does stand here in a peculiar relation. It is not introduced as part of the decalogue; it is not even associated with any other of the ten commandments. Moses has just descended from Sinai with the divine authority for the rearing of the tabernacle, which he imparts to Israel for their direction. It is in this connection that the prohibition to kindle fire stands, and in this connection it ought to be read when we would investigate its import. "And Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, and said unto them, These are the words which the Lord hath commanded, that ye should do them: Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a Sabbath of rest to the Lord; whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath day. And Moses spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the Lord commanded, saying, Take ye from among you an offering unto the Lord; whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the Lord, gold, and silver, and brass. . . . And onyx stones, and stones to be set for the ephod, and for the breast-plate. And every wise-hearted among you shall come, and make all that the Lord hath commanded; the tabernacle, his tent, and his covering, his taches, and his boards, his bars, his pillars, and his sockets, the ark, and the staves thereof, with the mercy-seat, and the veil of the covering, the table, and his staves, and all his vessels, and the show-bread, the candlestick also for the light, and his furniture, and his lamps, with the oil for the light," &c. Exod. xxxv. 1—14.

In looking at the connection in which this prohibition against kindling fire thus stands, as associated with the directions for the fabrication of vessels and utensils composed of materials which require the use of great heat in the process of manufacture, the prohibition seems to us to have a reference to fires for this purpose. The need of this warning may not have been little. Moses is about to speak of much "work" to be done, and temptation might have been felt that, as it was not work for their own profit, but for the manufacture of articles to be used in the worship of God, and made under His immediate direction, that such "work" came not under the prohibition of the Fourth Commandment. They saw that the fire upon the altar was to be maintained upon the Sabbath, and that even additional sacrifices were to be offered upon it; and this circumstance alone may have rendered the more necessary the prohibition against the use of fire, when they are called to work for the tabernacle of God in "gold, and silver, and brass."

And, when viewed in this light, it is deserving of remark, that the text we have lately considered, in which God calls the Sabbath "a sign" between Him and the Israelites, stands in precisely the same relation to the preparation of utensils for the tabernacle. God, in that instance, is concluding His directions to Moses on the subject; while Moses, in the instance now before us, is repeating these directions to the congregation of Israel. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, See, I have called, by name, Bezaleel, the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah; and I have filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship, to devise cunning works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in cutting of stones, to set them, and in carrying of timber, to work in all manner of workmanship. And I, behold, I have given with him Aholiab the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan; and in the hearts of all that are wise-hearted I have put wisdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee; the tabernacle of the congregation, and the ark of the testimony, and the mercy-seat that is thereupon, and all the furniture of the tabernacle, and the table and his furniture, and the pure candlestick with all his furniture, and the altar of incense, and the altar of burnt offering with all his furniture, and the laver and his foot, and the cloths of service, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office, and the anointing oil, and sweet incense for the holy place; according to all that I have commanded thee shall they do. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you." Exod. xxxi. 1—13.

In both cases, the general subject of direction is the making of the tabernacle and its furniture; and, along with this, in both cases, the obligation of the Sabbath is enjoined—and Sabbath observance alone is referred to of all the duties specified by the Ten Commandments. In both cases, we are informed of men being filled with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship, to devise cunning work, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass;" and, in both cases, Bezaleel, the son of Uri, and Aholiab the son of Ahisamach, are specified as so inspired, and commissioned to qualify others for this work. And it is in this connection that, in the one case, the observance of the Sabbath is enjoined as a sign that the Lord doth sanctify His people, and that in the other the kindling of fire is forbidden.

In both cases, there is doubtless a good reason for pressing the injunction to hallow the Sabbath; we cannot consider the coincidence insignificant. We view it as full of significance, in helping us to an understanding of the nature and object of the prohibition to kindle fire, on which the objection we are considering has been founded. It seems a prohibitory caution quite analogous to that given in other texts with regard to descriptions of work that might seem so urgent as to tempt men of little faith to think themselves justified in engaging in Sabbath labor. "Six days thou shalt work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest; in earing time, and in harvest, thou shalt rest." Exod. xxxiv. 21. Notwithstanding that the Fourth Commandment had already included this in its general provision, "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work," yet, as unbelief is fertile of excuses for disobedience, and might have suggested, as we know that in lands professedly Christian it has suggested, that the importance of a good seed time, and the dangers of the harvest, would justify Sabbath labor at such seasons at least, God gives this farther express prohibition against it. To this same principle, as it appears to us, are we to trace God's urging upon his people that the Sabbath is a sign between Him and them, and the prohibition against kindling fire upon it, when he is giving instructions and directions relative to the tabernacle and its plenishing, the importance of which, and the sacredness of the use to which they were destined, requiring a special prohibition, as in the case of the labors of seed time and harvest. The circumstance that the tabernacle is to be God's special dwelling place, and to be devoted to His worship, is not to be pled as a reason for violating the sacredness of the Sabbath in preparing the tabernacle, any more than the apparent hazards to which the harvest may be exposed. In both cases, God enforces the authority of the Fourth Commandment, and intimates the extent of its obligation.

A DEWDROP FALLING.

A dewdrop, falling on the wild sea wave,
Exclaimed in fear—'I perish in this grave!'
But in a shell received, that drop of dew
Unto a pearl of marvelous beauty grew;
And happy now, the grace did magnify
Which thrust it forth, as it had feared, to die;—
Until again, 'I perish quite,' it said,
Torn by rude diver from its ocean bed;
O unbelieving!—so it came to gleam
Chief jewel in a monarch's diadem. [Trench.

LIFE'S PENDULUM.

At every swing of the pendulum a spirit goes into eternity. The measure of our life is a hand-breadth; it is a tale that is told; its rapidity is like the swift shuttle or the flying arrow; it is brief as the fading flower, or the transitory rainbow, or the dazzling meteor; it is a bubble; it is a breath. At every swing of the pendulum a spirit goes into eternity. Between the rising and setting, sun 43,000 souls are summoned before their Creator. Death is ever busy, night and day, at all seasons, and in all climes. True, as well as beautiful, are those lines of Mrs. Hemans—

'Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north-wind's breath,
And stars to set—but all,
Thou hast all seasonsfor thine own, O death!'

He is supplied with a boundless variety of darts and arrows, with which he accomplishes his work. Could all the forms in which death comes to man be written together, what a long and fearful catalogue would it make! Think of the innumerable number of diseases, all at the command of death. And, as though these were not sufficient, see how man is exposed to fatal accidents on every hand, and every moment. It was a saying of Flavel, that 'the smallest pore in the body is a door large enough to let in death.' 'The least gnat in the air,' says the same writer, 'may choke one, as it did Adrian, a pope of Rome. A little hair in milk may strangle one, as it did a counsellor in Rome. A little skin of a raisin may stop one's breath, as it did the lyric poet, Anacreon.' A little 'hang-nail' on a finger recently proved the avenue of death to a physician of this city, who was in the vigor of life and health. Even the food we eat to nourish us, and the air we breathe, may introduce death into our systems. And though every thing else should fail to harm us, we might fall beneath our own hands, should God permit a cloud to pass over our reason. O, how insecure is life! how near is death! What has been said of the mariner in respect to his ship, that 'he always sails within four inches of death,' may be said of the soul, in relation to the body. If the ship split, then the sailor sinks; if our earthen vessel break, the soul is plunged for ever into the shoreless ocean of eternity. Were our senses not benumbed and deadened, we should be constantly reminded of this danger. We should read a warning in every sere leaf, and hear an admonition in every wind that sighs. Even sleep, 'nature's sweet restorer,' would be a nightly monitor of death—an ever-present emblem of mortality.

THE DEATH OF THE CHRISTIAN.

In Carlyle's eloquent notice of the death of Goethe, a passage occurs, which applies, in all its force and beauty, to those who "die in the Lord." It has been recalled to our mind by the record of the recent death of a distinguished Christian philanthropist.

"The End! What a solemn meaning lies in that sound as it peals mournfully through the soul, when a living friend has passed away! All is now closed, irrevocable; the changeful life-picture, growing daily into new coherence, under new touches and hues, has suddenly become completed and unchangeable; there, as it lay, it is dipped from this moment in the æther of the heavens, and shines transfigured, to endure even so—forever, Time and Time's Empire; stern, wide, devouring, yet not without their grandeur! The week-day man who was one of us, has put on the garment of Eternity, and become radiant and triumphant. The present is all at once the past; Hope is suddenly cut away, and only the backward vistas of memory remain, shone on by a light that proceeds not from this earthly sun."

"I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, write: Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; even so, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

LUTHER'S FIRST FINDING A BIBLE.

The young student passed in the university library all the time he could snatch from his academical pursuits. Books were as yet rare, and it was a great privilege for him to profit by the treasures brought together in this vast collection. One day—he had then been two years at Erfurth, and was twenty years old—he opens many books in the library, one after another, to learn the writers' names. One volume that he comes to attracts his attention. He has never until this hour seen its like. He reads the title; it is a Bible! a rare book, unknown in those times. His interest is greatly excited; he is filled with astonishment at finding other matters than those fragments of the Gospels and epistles that the church has selected to be read to the people during public worship every Sunday throughout the year. Until this day he had imagined that they composed the whole Word of God, and now he sees so many pages, so many chapters, so many books of which he had no idea! His heart beats as he holds the Divinely inspired volume in his hand. With eagerness and with undescribable emotion he turns over these leaves from God.

The first page on which he fixes his attention narrates the story of Hannah and young Samuel. He reads, and his soul can hardly contain the joy he feels. This child whom his parents "lend to the Lord as long as he liveth;" the song of Hannah, in which she declares that Jehovah "raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and liftest the beggar from the dunghill, to set him among princes;" this child who grew up in the temple in the presence of the Lord; those sacrificers, the sons of Eli, who were wicked men, who live in debauchery, and "make the Lord's people to transgress;" all this history, all this revelation that he had just discovered, excites feeling till then unknown. He returns home with a full heart. "Oh that God would give me such a book for myself," thought he.

Luther was as yet ignorant both of Greek and Hebrew. It is scarcely probable that he had studied these languages during the first two or three years of his residence at the university. The Bible that had filled him with such transports was in Latin. He read it again and again, and there, in his astonishment and joy, he returned to read it once more. The first glimmerings of a new truth were then beginning to dawn upon his mind.

Thus had God led him to the discovery of his Word—of that book of which he was one day to give his fellow-countrymen that admirable translation in which Germany has for three centuries pursued the oracles of God.

BEAUTIFUL SCENE.

J. R. Chandler, editor of the Philadelphia United States Gazette, describes the following exquisite scene:—

At length a repeated remark drew my attention towards the bank; looking over the verge of which, I saw an elderly man in a rough dress, with a small boy by his side.

'Why not?' inquired the sailor.

'Because you called me so earnestly, and bade me meet you on the beach as soon as I could get dressed.'

'It should not have been neglected,' said the old man.

'I should think,' said the boy, with an appearance of great deference, 'that you could not have been up long.'

'No, I had just risen when I called you.'

There was a pause of a few minutes, which the old man broke by saying:—

'We are quite early, and perhaps the duty omitted by both of us may be discharged here. We will scarcely work the worse for it to-day.'

The speaker then took off a glazed hat, and displayed a head slightly bald; the long mottled hair upon its sides trembled in the slight breeze that set in from the ocean. The younger also laid aside his hat, and both knelt upon the sand. In a solemn tone the father commenced his morning's devotion. I could not catch all the words; but here and there, when special earnestness marked the request, I could distinctly hear each syllable. The language was simple, but expressive; and, as much of it was Scripture, it occasionally rose to sublimity. The daily wants and cares and dangers of the petitioner went up to Him who has taught us to ask day by day for our daily bread, and when the family and friends had been commended to Him who careth for all, the humble worshipers arose from their knees, and proceeded to the boat which was to convey them to some craft anchored at a distance from the shore.

Other ears than mine heard the prayer of the old pilot; and whatever fate may be his, I cannot doubt he will be prepared to meet it with the most perfect resignation.

DEFENCE OF CHRISTIANITY BY A RABBI.

Mr. T. W. Goldinger, a Jewish missionary, says:—"Our reception in Wilkowyski was a friendly one. Immediately on our arrival, we went to the post-office to inquire if there were any letters, and met there Rabbi S. R., one of the most respectable Jews in the town. He was exceedingly glad to meet us, and introduced us to Mr. B. F. The Rabbi invited us to tea with him. While we were at his house, a number of his Jewish acquaintances came in. I spoke to them of Jesus, and pointed out the way of atonement for our sins through his death on the cross, and urged upon them the divinity of our Saviour. The Rabbi spoke well about the doctrines of the New Testament; the few bigoted Jews who were present kept quite silent, till one of them asked how it was that if Christianity were true, Christians were so disunited amongst themselves? The Rabbi replied, 'All Christians agree in the main. The chief points of difference are in externals, in ceremonies and usages; and he supposed that differences must exist, until, sooner or later, all would feel and know the truth.' Some one else replied, 'If the Christians would give up some of their dogmas, and we were to give up some of ours, we might perhaps be able to unite.' I replied, that the Christian religion is grounded upon nothing else than the unchangeable word of God—truth which does not allow of the smallest deviation; whilst, on the other hand, the Jewish religion, where it differs from Christianity, is only founded on the traditions of men, and is contrary to the Scriptures; and I exhorted them to draw away from it altogether, and then they would learn to know the Messiah. The Rabbi then took a History of the Bible, in German, from his book-case, and read aloud an address from a Christian schoolmaster to his scholars, in which he explained the purposes of God in reference to Israel; viz., that the whole Mosaic economy was but a prelude and a preparation for the kingdom of the Messiah; that so salvation might come out of Israel, to Israel and all mankind, that the name of the Lord might be acknowledged, entreated and praised, from the rising unto the going down of the sun, and the children of Israel seek the Lord their God, and their King, Messiah, and honor the Lord, and seek His grace in the latter days.

In conclusion, he said that his father, who was known to be a clever and learned man, two days before his death, when his relatives and acquaintances besought him to say something to them, by way of remembrance, said, after a short time spent in thought:—

'Now, my beloved, listen to me. I die certain of two things, but uncertain of one, viz. I am certain that I die a Jew; I am certain that my grandchildren will die Christians; but I am uncertain whether my sons will die as Jews or Christians.'

Every Christian who has the conversion of Israel at heart, may well imagine in what frame of mind I was when I left them. My prayer to God was fervent, that the Lord would bring salvation to Israel out of Zion, that he would redeem his people, led captive by sin, for then 'Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.' Ps. 14: 7."

THE BONDMAN'S TRIAL AND ADVOCATE.

God and humanity are now preparing an indictment against an institution which, ten years hence, will be closely confined and revoltingly peculiar to America. Heaven and earth, the land and sea, the Gospel and providence of God, the long-reaching annals of the human race, are preparing evidence in the case. And when that suit shall be brought before the tribunal of mankind; when those pleadings come on; when the yearning sympathies of men and angels shall bring the poor, bruised bondman into court; and when the best counsel that ever plead at the bar of God for fallen man, shall appear for the fettered African, and laying that pierced hand upon that sable brow, shall say, with all the majesty of the Godhead, "Let this my brother go!" think you—you who will sit on jury there—that you will remain unmoved, when that great Pleader shall open the slave's defence with all the eloquence with which he plead, when, in the audience of the assembled angels, he urged the suit of man's redemption? [Elihu Burritt.

BROTHER JONATHAN.—The origin of this term as applied to the United States, is given in a recent number of the Norwich Courier. The story is as follows:—

When General Washington, after being appointed commander of the army of the Revolutionary war, came to Massachusetts to organize it, and make preparations for the defence of the country, he found a great destitution of ammunition and other means necessary to meet the powerful foe he had to contend with; and great difficulty to obtain them. If attacked in such condition, the cause at once might be hopeless. On one occasion, at that anxious period, a consultation of the officers was had, when it seemed no way could be devised to make such preparation necessary. His Excellency, Jonathan Trumbull, the elder, was then Governor of the State of Connecticut, on whose judgment and aid the General placed the greatest reliance, and remarked, "We must consult 'Brother Jonathan' on the subject." The General did so, and the Governor was successful in supplying many of the wants of the army. When difficulties afterward arose, and the army was spread over the country, it became a by-word, "We must consult Brother Jonathan." The term Yankee is still applied to a portion, but "Brother Jonathan" has now become a designation of the whole country, as John Bull has for England.

ANECDOTE OF WASHINGTON.—When the American troops were quartered at Newburgh, at the close of the Revolutionary war, and the soldiers were stirred up to rebellion against the government, by the famous anonymous letters, which it has since been ascertained were written by Gen. Armstrong, then a Major in the army, Gen. Washington convened the officers for the purpose of addressing them on the subject, and calming the tumult that was beginning to rage in their bosoms. He held a paper in his hand, on which the remarks he intended to make were written; and then it was, that finding himself unable to read without assistance, as he was drawing his spectacles from his pocket, that unpremeditated expression broke from him—one of the most pathetic that ever fell from human lips:—

"Fellow-citizens," said he, "you perceive that I have not only grown gray, but blind in your service!"

The effect of this was electrical. No bosom, no eye was proof against it.

WELL ANSWERED.—A person who suspected that a minister of his acquaintance was not truly orthodox, went to him and said:—

"Sir, I am told that you are against the perseverance of the saints."

"Not I, indeed," answered the minister, "it is the perseverance of the sinners that I oppose."

"But that is not a satisfactory answer, sir. Do you think that a child of God can fall very low, and yet be restored?"

He replied, "I think it will be very dangerous to try the experiment."

TRUTHFUL EXTRACT.—What think ye was the mission of Jesus the Redeemer to man? He came to tell him, that there was an immortality beyond the grave, but he also came to lift up the toiling millions of the human race, from their degradation in this lower world. Yes, it is a truth eternal as God; Jesus came to visit the Poor Man in his misery; to clothe his bent form with a finer garment; to feed his mouth with better bread; to shelter his weary head with the roof of a dearer home.

He came to the poor man as a brother. His voice speaks even now, saying to the slave of the workshop and the mine—Brother, arise, for thy time is near!"

AN INCH OF TIME.—"Millions of money for an inch of time," cried Elizabeth, the grieved, but vain and ambitious queen of England on her dying bed. Unhappy woman!—reclining upon a royal couch—with ten thousand dresses in her wardrobe—a kingdom upon which the "sun never sets," at her feet—all are now valueless, and she shrieks in anguish, and shrieks in vain, for a single inch of time.

New York, December 17, 1846.

THE SABBATH A NECESSARY PART OF THE MORAL LAW.

Mr. Brown's Third Lecture, delivered on Sunday evening last, treated of the Sabbath as a necessary and important part of the Moral Law, and also of the nature and design of Positive Institutions.

He commenced by saying, that it is customary with writers, and occasionally with preachers, to make a distinction between moral and positive duties. The common people, who have never read of any such distinction in their Bibles, and are wholly unacquainted with abstruse speculations, are not exactly satisfied with it. They simply wish to know what is duty, and what is not duty. There would be no necessity for this distinction in the present case, were it not that the subject of the Sabbath has already been perverted by its use, or rather its abuse. The clearest distinction between moral and positive duties is made by Bishop Butler, who says: "Moral duties are those, the reasons of which we see; Positive duties are those, the reasons of which we do not see." To which of these classes of duties does the Sabbath belong? When God commands us to "remember the rest-day, to keep it holy," we can see no reason for it until he chooses to declare one. The constitution of our nature would never suggest to us the fact, that in six days God made the world, and rested on the seventh, which is the true reason for keeping the rest-day. Hence the Sabbath is an institution of the positive kind.

Here it is objected, that our nature is so constituted that we require one day in seven as a season of rest. If this be granted, it does not meet the argument, because what the law of the Sabbath requires is not simply one day in seven, but specifically the seventh day; and no one will claim that the constitution of his nature requires the seventh day in particular as a season of rest. But if it were granted, that the law of the Sabbath requires simply one day in seven, even then it would be difficult to prove that the institution is moral rather than positive, inasmuch as we are not conscious of any thing in our nature which demands exactly this proportion of time as a season of rest. For aught our natures teach, a rest of every fifth or eighth day might answer all demands as well as every seventh. The truth is, that man, as well as all the animal creation, needs rest when he is tired. Whenever he is weary, nature calls him to rest, and these periods differ according to the vigor of his constitution. There can be no universal rule.

If the Sabbath be considered merely as a season of devotion, it would be quite as difficult to prove that it is moral rather than positive. Our nature feels the importance of worshiping God, and the necessity of appropriating some time to that purpose. But there is no element of our nature which demands that it should be every seventh day after six days of labor. Our nature does not suggest but what it might as well be some part of every day. In the light of these considerations, the Sabbath must be considered as a positive institution, rather than one of a strictly moral nature.

After these remarks, said the speaker, it may appear surprising that I should take the ground that the Sabbath is a necessary and important part of the moral law. In reply, he stated that by the term "moral law" he denoted that whole system of religion under which Adam was placed before he sinned, and by which he was bound as a creature of God. Its precepts are mainly moral, although it includes one of a positive nature. Since the moral precepts predominate, there is no impropriety in calling it the moral law. Some suppose that all the positive precepts of the Old Testament belong to Judaism, and were abolished with that system. But that is a mistake. The Moral Law is just as much a system of religion by itself as Christianity or Judaism, and is just as much entitled to its positive institutions. The true doctrine in relation to positive institutions is, that they are memorials of the facts which lie at the foundation of the systems to which they respectively belong, and are therefore witnesses to the truth of those systems; they serve to promote conformity to those systems; and they continue in force as long as the systems do. Judaism has its positive institution of the Passover, and Christianity its positive institutions of Baptism and the Lord's Supper. The Moral Law also—or that system of religion under which Adam was placed before he sinned, and for disobedience to which men were accounted sinners from Adam to Moses—has its positive institution of the Sabbath, which must continue binding while the moral law itself does. The Decalogue, or Ten Commandments, upon which men are so apt to fix their minds whenever the moral law is spoken of, is only a verbal transcript of that system under which Adam was placed. This position was argued, in the first place, from the fact that the moral law—the only true standard of holiness—was made the basis of that covenant into which God entered with the Israelites at Mount Sinai; in the second place, from the fact that the Decalogue is clearly recognized as the standard of holiness by Jesus Christ, particularly in his conversation with the young man, to whom he said, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments;" in the third place, from the fact that Paul recognizes the Decalogue as the standard of holiness for all mankind. The argument from these three considerations was presented at considerable length, and with great and clearness force. Indeed, we think no one who listened to it with candor could question the soundness of the position, that the Decalogue is a verbal transcript of the moral law under which Adam was placed. If then, said the speaker, the ten commandments are the moral law, the proposition that the Sabbath is an important part of the moral law has been established; for there in the midst of those commandments stands the law of the Sabbath. God put it there. He has joined this positive precept to nine others, which are more strictly moral, making it a necessary and important part of the whole system. "What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." There is moral guilt in the rejection of positive institutions. He who can deliberately set them at nought, without reflecting that in doing so he brings upon himself the moral wickedness of disobedience to his God, is a meagre specimen of a Christian. Why, what is the religion—the Christianity—of the Bible? Does it not consist in making the authority of God the real ground of obedience, and is not this the highest and noblest element of piety? Let us beware of resting our religion upon a different foundation, by performing those duties only which our reason discovers, and rejecting those which God commands.

THE SOUTH-WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist South-Western Association met with the Jackson Church, on the 8th of October, 1846. The Introductory Discourse was preached by Eld. Joshua Hill, from Col. 1: 10—"That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing," &c. After this, the Association was organized by the appointment of Eld. SIMEON BABCOCK, Moderator; and Eli Forsythe and James Hill, Secretaries.

The Letters of the Churches were read, from which the following statistics are taken:—

CHURCHES.	MINISTERS.	DEACONS.	CLERKS.	Add'd	Diss'd	Total.
Lost Creek, Va.	Samuel Davis, (lic.)	Abel Bond, Levi H. Bond.	Thomas B. Bond.		7	75

In respect to Missionary Operations, a resolution was passed, that the Association would become a missionary body; that each member be requested to pay quarterly, at the rate of one cent or more per week, to a treasurer who shall be appointed in each church; and that this treasurer shall be an agent to visit and solicit each member to subscribe upon the plan recommended. Eld. Joshua Hill was appointed an agent to lay this subject before the churches, and ascertain whether they are willing to adopt the recommendation. The following persons were appointed treasurers for the several churches: Charles Clarke, Scotia; Levi H. Bond, Lost Creek; Lodowick Davis, Salem; Simeon Babcock, Northampton; John Babcock, Port Jefferson; James Simpson, Stokes; Joshua Davis, South Fork Hughs' River; Calvin Davis, Jackson; Jonathan Bond, Woodbridgetown. Besides this, a committee of three, consisting of John Babcock, Jacob Maxson, and Eli Forsythe, was appointed to take the supervision of missionary operations, and report to the annual meeting of the Association.

The Report of the Committee on the State of Religion says: "From the returns of the churches it appears that there is a good degree of union prevailing among them. Some of the churches have within the past year enjoyed much of the divine blessing, the Lord having drawn near them in converting sinners, and causing backsliders to return to their Father's house. We have many reasons to bless God for his goodness."

A resolution was passed, alluding to the present declension of religion throughout the country, which cannot be attributed to a want of preaching and other religious efforts, nor to the shortening of the arm of the Lord, but the cause of which must be found in the worldliness of the churches, and their spirit of sectarianism and bigotry, engendered by ignorance and superstition. The only remedy for this, the Association believe, is to be found in a candid and honest investigation of the subjects concerning which the Christian world differs.

Upon the question of dividing the Association, it was resolved to be repugnant to the feelings of the body, and was therefore dismissed from farther consideration.

The following officers were appointed for the ensuing year: Joshua Hill, Corresponding Secretary; Eli Forsythe, Treasurer; and Joshua Hill, agent to preach upon the subject of the Sabbath. Joshua Hill was appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse at the next session, and Samuel Davis his alternate. After a session occupying parts of three days, the Association adjourned to meet with the church at Lost Creek, Va., on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in October, 1847.

THE SABBATH IN POTTER COUNTY, PA.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Thinking that it might be gratifying to you and your readers to hear in regard to the progress of the Sabbath cause in Potter Co., Pa., I would say, that having received an appointment from the Association Missionary Society in June last, to labor in said County, and having been previously solicited to preach upon the subject of the Sabbath in the town of Sweden, immediately after returning home I attended to the call, addressed a respectable and attentive congregation, and distributed a few tracts. The strongest spirit of opposition that I ever saw was manifested, some saying (behind my back) that if they could get hold of the tracts they would burn them, and, finally, that if I came into that place preaching Sabbatarian (or Bible) doctrine, I should receive a coat of tar and feathers, saying likewise, that they who turn "the world upside down are come hither also." But there were some "who received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily whether these things were so." Five persons, heads of families, soon embraced the Sabbath of the Bible; some also, being led to think of the importance of salvation, have since, as we hope, found Christ precious to their souls, and propose to go forward in the ordinance of baptism, and unite with the church; and several, who were professors before, have united with the church in Hebron. Quite an extensive excitement prevails upon the subject of the Sabbath in various parts of the county. Ten persons have embraced the Sabbath in the towns of Sweden and Ulysses since last June, all heads of families. This has seemed to throw the first-day people into a great commotion, and I learn that most of the clergy in Potter County have been solicited to come over and help in this time of need. I have been asked whether I would meet some able clergymen that they should employ to discuss the subject publicly. I answered, Yes. But no one has been found who presumes to take up in public discussion for a first-day Sabbath. One ventured to leave an appointment to preach a discourse upon the subject in Sweden, but did not attend. He renewed the appointment, and it coming to my knowledge, I resolved to attend and listen, but I suppose he, hearing of my intention, did not wish to appear, rendering, as I understood, the reason that his horse was not at home. I have preached to the people in that place once in two weeks, generally, since that time. ROWSE BABCOCK.

ENCOURAGING.—We rejoice to learn, by a letter from Eld. John Green, that an encouraging state of things exists in two or three of our churches in Allegany County. Eld. Green has been visiting in that section for several months past. The greater part of his time has been spent with the church in Friendship, which has enjoyed a pleasant season of revival, and received seventeen new members by baptism. He says: "There is a great field in this part of the country for faithful laborers. The harvest truly is plenteous. I hope the time is not far distant when these churches will enjoy a rich season. Eld. Robbins is now preaching for Friendship Church. He is a man of deep piety and irreproachable character, who has recently embraced our views of the weekly Sabbath. I hope he will be blessed, and made a blessing to Zion."

SECOND-ADVENT SABBATH-KEEPERS.—Dr. Geo. H. Perry, of Hopkinton, R. I., writes us that during a recent visit to Pomfret, Ct., he attended a meeting of a company of Second-Adventists who have embraced the Sabbath of the Bible. It seems that there is in that place a congregation of Adventists numbering some two hundred. More than a year ago their minds became interested in the subject of the Sabbath. While the subject was under discussion, a quantity of Sabbath Tracts were distributed in the neighborhood. The result was, that about twenty became convinced of the claims of the seventh day, and have observed it ever since.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE 2d BROOKFIELD CH.—At a regular Church Meeting of the Second Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, on the first-day following the second Sabbath in November, the following Resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That we recommend to those members of this church, who have removed from the bounds of the church to the vicinity of some other Seventh-day Baptist Church, to unite with said church; and in case the above recommendation is not adopted, that they hold a correspondence, by visit or letter, at least once a year. And be it farther Resolved, That the names of such members as do not comply with the above recommendation, be stricken from the records as having gone out of the church.

Resolved, That the above resolutions and advice be published in the Sabbath Recorder for the information of all concerned.

SABBATH PETITIONS.

Several Forms of Petition to Legislative Bodies respecting the Sabbath, have been printed and forwarded to us. Presuming that our readers feel interested to know what is doing, and are also desirous of adopting the best form for themselves, we publish the following:—

Memorial in Favor of Equal Religious Privileges.

To the Honorable, the Legislature of the State of New York:

Your Memorialists, citizens of the State of New York, would respectfully represent—That the Constitution of this State not only guarantees to every citizen the free exercise of his religious opinions, but forbids the enactment of any statutes for the establishment of religion;—That notwithstanding these constitutional safeguards to the enjoyment of religious liberty, statutes have been enacted from time to time by the Legislature of the State, which compel one class of citizens to regard an institution avowedly religious, while they in effect require another class of citizens to disregard and violate an article in their religious faith;—That these statutes are such as enforce the observance of the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, as a day of religious rest and worship. Your Memorialists see no reasons for enforcing the observance of the first day of the week as a Sabbath by statutes and penalties, which might not be urged with equal propriety for enforcing the duty of prayer, of baptism, or of Christian communion. They therefore respectfully request your Honorable Body to amend these laws, or to instruct the Commissioners about to be appointed for revising the laws of this State, so to alter and amend them as to secure to every citizen the constitutional and inalienable right to worship God unmolested upon whatever day his conscience may dictate. Some such statute as the following, your Memorialists believe, would abundantly protect the rights of all, without infringing upon the consciences of any:—

An Act for the protection of all persons religiously observing a time for divine worship:

Be it enacted, That every inhabitant of this State, who shall by his practice, or by oath or affirmation, give satisfactory proof that he believes himself required by Almighty God to observe a fixed day of the week or of the year as a season of religious rest and worship—as a Sabbath to the Lord—shall on that day be exempt from answering to any process in law or equity, either as defendant, witness, or juror, except in criminal cases; likewise from discharging, on said day, the duties of any post or office to which he may be appointed or commissioned, except when the peace or protection of the State shall absolutely require it; and shall also be exempt from working on the highways, and from doing any military duty, except when in actual service.

And all and several of these exemptions shall extend to and include all persons belonging to or usually assembling with any Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers, during those hours, or days, or parts of days, which such Society does set apart for a stated weekly season of public religious worship, including the hours necessary for going to and returning from their usual places of religious worship, with the exceptions before named.

And the same exemptions shall extend to the day usually called Christmas, when religiously observed by any other Society, with the exceptions before mentioned.

The following Petition was adopted and signed by a number of persons at a meeting of the observers of the seventh day, the Sabbath of Jehovah, recently held in the Academy at Shiloh, N. J.:—

Petition concerning a day of Religious Rest.

To the Honorable the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey:

Your Petitioners, inhabitants of the County of State of New Jersey, respectfully represent to your Honorable Body—That there are residing in ten or more Counties of this State, many persons who religiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, and who feel bound in conscience so to observe that day only—That whereas their secular interests forbid their laying aside their usual occupations on the first day of the week also, and their religious faith forbids their venerating that day as a Sabbath, therefore they feel greatly aggrieved by the law entitled "An Act for the Suppression of Vice and Immorality," because said law deprives them of their civil right to nearly one-sixth part of their time "merely on account of their religious principles," thus, in their estimation, establishing one form or mode of religion and certain "religious sects in preference to other religious sects;" and also because they regard the said act as calculated to fix a stigma upon the religious faith of all who do not regard the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath, by associating secular business done on that day with vice and immorality—all of which they believe to be contrary to the National and State Constitutions.

We therefore pray your Honorable Body to repeal so much of the aforesaid Act as relates to the observance of a weekly Sabbath, and to enact a law, supplementary to the law entitled "An Act for the Protection of Religious Worship," which shall protect every inhabitant of this State, who religiously observes a weekly Sabbath, or other day of religious rest, in the peaceable enjoyment of the same.

And your Petitioners will ever render due respect to your Honorable Body.

SAILING OF THE MISSIONARIES.—In reply to numerous inquiries as to the time when our missionaries will sail for China, we can now say that they expect to sail by the ship Houqua, which is to be ready for sea on the first day of January.

"TO THE POOR THE GOSPEL IS PREACHED."—One of the evidences which our Saviour gave that in him the true Messiah had appeared, was that under his ministry the Gospel was preached to the poor. What if he had said, on the other hand, that those whose religious arrangements effectually exclude the Gospel from the poor, give evidence that they do not know the true Messiah! In such a case, we fear there would be found no little occasion to preach from that text in these days. We see it stated in one of our exchanges, that a church in Brooklyn, "having at last secured and installed a pastor, is moving off on the tide of successful experiment." As a proof of this, it is said that the choice of pews had recently been sold at auction for prices ranging from eight hundred and fifty-five dollars down to three hundred dollars each. The question very naturally arises, how are the poor to hear the Gospel in such a place of worship? Much as we admire the beautiful and imposing in architecture, we think it may be purchased at too dear a rate. For one, we had rather worship in a hovel, or even in the open air, with God's poor around us, than in the most magnificent temple, from which they are excluded, and to which only the purse-proud votaries of fashion are admitted.

QUESTIONS.—The two questions following were received several weeks ago, but were mislaid. We solicit for them the attention of our correspondents:—

First—Is it proper for a Church to have a written Covenant and Articles of Faith? Second—Is it Scriptural and proper for a Licentiate to go forward in administering the ordinances of the Gospel, such as Baptism, the Lord's Supper, &c.? As I discover Mr. Editor, that there is not an entire agreement throughout the denomination upon these two questions, I wish you or your correspondents to express your views upon the subject through the Recorder. I connect the questions because I know of some who object to the first and practice the second. INQUIRER.

THE JEWS OF HANOVER.—The condition of the Hanoverian Jews is improving. The "Voice of Jacob" says that Government has made a grant of eight hundred dollars towards the support of the establishment for training Jewish teachers; besides which, contributions from private individuals continue to flow in liberally. The Chambers have recommended Government to grant the petition of the Jews for the removal of their disabilities.

THE JEWS IN AUSTRIA.—The Jewish Intelligence says that "the Jews contribute largely to the revenues of the State. Thus, the Jews of Bohemia pay 261,000 gulden yearly, (about £26,100 sterling,) into the Emperor's treasury; those of Moravia 185,000 gulden, (or £18,500 sterling,) those of Galicia £70,000 sterling. The Jews have also to pay many taxes besides; thus, for instance, the Jew is obliged to pay to government for every pound of meat he buys, two kreutzers, or one penny, (two cents.) On account of this tax many of the poorer Jews are altogether deprived of meat. Another most revolting tax, is, that every Jew has to pay to government for every light he burns on the eve of the Sabbath in his own house, five kreutzers, or 2 1-2d. It is well known that in each Jewish house there is found a lamp with seven branches; each branch being so constructed that it may be filled with oil, and burn separately; and that it is a commandment binding on the Jewish women to light this lamp. A poor Jew might say, I cannot pay this tax, and therefore will not light my lamp. The Austrian government has, however, taken care to prevent such an excuse, for the law provides that every Jew must pay for at least two lights. Thus every Jew, even the poorest, must pay a tax of ten kreutzers every Friday. If they burn lights at a marriage, they must pay two shillings (fifty cents) for every light; and on the day of Atonement ten kreutzers for every wax light used in the Synagogues. With all these humiliating taxes, the Jews are excluded from following many arts and occupations. No Jew can be an apothecary throughout all the Austrian empire."

THE LORD'S PREPARATION.—The Rev. Dr. Adams was chosen to carry to the wife of Dr. Armstrong the melancholy intelligence of her husband's loss in the wreck of the Atlantic. He mentioned the circumstance in his pulpit on Sunday morning, as follows:—

"The wife, in suspense, answered to the ringing of the bell; her cold hand told him of her apprehensions of the nature of his errand; and whilst overwhelmed with the burden of his painful duty, he was yet more overwhelmed with the remark with which she anticipated him—'The Lord has always prepared me to receive the tidings he sends;'—and, continued the preacher, I know not at which most to wonder, the mystery of that Providence which has taken away the husband and father in the midst of his usefulness, or that power of religious principle which sustained the desolate heart of the bereaved."

MISSIONARY PLEDGE.—The Rev. Mr. Beman says: "Before leaving British Guiana the people surrounded me, saying, 'You will not return.' I promised to do so, unless God should prevent me. They asked me to leave them a pledge that I would do so, as they seemed to think it possible that I might not wish again to risk the climate. 'I was at that time paralyzed, and had to be carried on board the ship by which I came home. 'Have you ever found me unfaithful to my word?' They said, 'No.' But still they wished me to leave them some pledge. I asked what they required; when they said they wished me to leave my little babe, then only six weeks old. This was a hard trial; but I said, 'Well, my babe you shall have;' and it gave me much pleasure to hear, by the last accounts, that the child was doing exceedingly well."

The price for a license to sell intoxicating liquors, in De Soto Co., Miss., is $500.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Congress was in Session only three days last week, having adjourned over from Thursday to Monday for the purpose of giving time for the appointment of Committees, &c.

In the Senate, on Tuesday, nothing was done except to hear the President's Message, and order the printing of 5,000 copies. On Wednesday the Vice President submitted the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, offered a resolution instructing the Military Committee to inquire into the propriety of granting 160 acres of land to each volunteer serving in the present war with Mexico, and to increase the pay, and the allowance for transportation and subsistence of volunteers from the time of leaving their homes to their arrival at the seat of war. Mr. Woodbridge, of Michigan, gave notice of a bill to sell the mineral lands, and of a bill to grant public lands in Michigan to the State for completing internal improvements. On Thursday Mr. Crittenden, of Ky., offered a resolution that provision should be made to increase the pay of such officers, musicians, and privates, both of the regular and volunteer corps, as had distinguished themselves in the Mexican War. The same Senator also gave notice that he should at some early day introduce a bill for the improvement of the Western Rivers. Mr. Ashley, of Ark., notified the Senate that he intended shortly to introduce a bill for the graduation of the sales of public lands.

In the House of Representatives, on Tuesday, the principal business was to hear the President's Message. Besides this, however, a bill was introduced to increase the pay of the army, and grant bounties of land to volunteers in certain cases. Notice was given of a bill to reduce the price of the Public Lands, and also a bill to provide for improving the navigation of the Western Rivers. Mr. Garret Davis, of Ky., speaking upon a proposition to print a large number of extra copies of the Message, remarked that, in his opinion, a portion of the message was not sufficiently explicit relative to the movements of the army and the progress of the war. He asked leave to offer a resolution requesting the President to furnish copies of the official orders issued to Generals Taylor, Wool, and Kearney, and to Commodores Sloat and Stockton, relative to establishing civil governments in conquered provinces. This subject excited much feeling, and led to a long discussion, which was continued through Wednesday and Thursday. Near the close of the session on Thursday, it was informally passed over, and the House adjourned until Monday.

NEWS FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

The following items from the seat of war were published in the New Orleans papers of Dec. 4, and communicated from Washington by telegraph for the N. Y. Tribune :—

The steamer Neptune arrived at Tampico Nov. 22, with 450 regular troops under command of Col. Gates. The steamer Sea arrived with more troops on the 23d, when the town was immediately handed over to the army. Fort Onondaga was immediately garrisoned under the name of Fort Connor, and armed with two long 8 pounders.

The Neptune sailed from Tampico on the 24th ult., and encountered a norther; was driven back and wrecked on the bar. All hands were saved. The vessel is a total loss.

The town of Tampico is already in a state of defence. Reinforcements are arriving daily. Saltillo has been abandoned, and there is no doubt that it is now in the possession of the advance guard of the army under Gen. Worth. The condition of Mexico is represented to be even worse than it ever has been. Santa Anna lately made an address to his troops, apparently to extract from them an invitation to reinstate himself at the head of the Government. He was disappointed, however, at finding that his oration was received in profound silence; and immediately afterward he started with all his cavalry on a secret expedition.

A letter from Pensacola, December 1, to the Picayune, says that Captain Tatnall, with the steamer Spitfire, has gone up the river, sixty or seventy miles from Tampico, and taken possession of two towns, at one of which he captured 10 large cannon and a heavy quantity of ammunition which had been received from Tampacio, when the Mexicans retreated from that city. The two regiments which evacuated that place, revolted when they got to San Luis Potosi, and were disbanded. They were opposed to Santa Anna. Great dissensions prevailed at San Luis Potosi. The army, about 16,000 strong, was in a state of starvation. There were four different factions.

Constantinople.—A correspondent of the London Morning Herald, writing at Constantinople on the 20th October, reports the receipt of a strange sort of dispatch from Lord Palmerston :—

"Lord Palmerston has sent a note to the Porte, in which he demands the abolition of Slavery in the Ottoman Empire. You will remember that when Lord Ponsonby was Ambassador at Constantinople, a similar measure was proposed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs; but his Lordship's dispatch, in answer, induced Lord Palmerston to abandon the project. In the present note, the question is ably argued, but with more of sophistry than sound reasoning, and with a sturdy disregard for the feelings of those to whom it is addressed, which we must certainly pronounce to be imprudent. It is argued, that there is nothing in Mahomedan law which objects to such a proceeding; in proof of which, his Lordship cites treaties which have been made between the British Government and the Mussulman chiefs of Arab tribes for the suppression of Slavery.

"It is impossible to describe the sensation which Lord Palmerston's note produced, not only at the Porte, but also, we are assured, in a high quarter. It is a proceeding which strikes at one of the vital principles of the social system of the Turks."

The Randolph Negroes.—The unjustifiable and disgraceful outrages upon these negroes by the people of Mercer County, Ohio, has led to an arrangement which may be for their profit in the long run. A correspondent of the N. Y. Observer, writing from Piqua, Ohio, speaks of them as follows :—

"When the mob spirit in an adjoining county prevented these unfortunate people settling on the lands purchased for their future homes, the citizens of this town and its vicinity took prompt and vigorous measures to relieve their wants and promote their best interests. At present, about 200 have a home in different families, and are dispersed over the neighborhood, engaged in useful labor, and generally doing very well.

"Their inhuman treatment by the mob in Mercer Co., and their repulsion from their lands, has been evidently overruled by Divine Providence for their good; God has caused the wrath of their enemies to promote their welfare. In Virginia, these people had been chiefly employed in the culture of tobacco; they have but little experience and knowledge in the clearing of land, and the necessary labor to be performed in their expected homes. At present, while engaged in the families of these citizens—on their farms, and in their shops, they are preparing for future usefulness and the occupancy of their lands when the way is open.

"I was exceedingly gratified to know the deep interest taken in these much-wronged people, particularly in their intellectual and spiritual welfare. When they arrived, about 400 in number, few of them could read; they were deplorably ignorant. For their improvement a Sunday school has been organized, and about 100 have participated in its advantages. They have generally made rapid progress; many of them are now able to read fluently. Such is their avidity to learn, that during the week days some of them carry their books with them to the place of labor, and whenever an opportunity is found they avail themselves of the instruction of kind friends, old and young."

SUMMARY.

The Norwich Courier says that the question has been frequently asked whether the explosion of the Atlantic's steam-pipe was not caused by too great head of steam? We have asked the opinion of a number of practical gentlemen, with steamboat matters, on this point; and the clear, unanimous sentiment we find to be, that the bursting of the pipe was caused by the bending of the boat, bringing an unnatural strain upon the steam-pipe at the point where it exploded.

Fisher's Island, the scene of the recent disastrous wreck of the Atlantic, forms the extreme south-eastern portion of the state of New York, and a part of Suffolk county. It lies within three or four miles of the Connecticut shore, and 14 miles from the nearest point of Long Island. The island is about ten miles in length, and averages one mile in width. It is the sole property of William Winthrop, Esq., of New London, and is cultivated as a farm. A son of Mr. Winthrop, now resides on the island, whose house offered shelter and hospitable accommodation to the survivors of the Atlantic.

A correspondent from Havana writes to our friends of La Patria, that the grand prize of the Royal Lottery—the $100,000—was drawn by fifty negroes, most of them slaves. They had joined to buy three whole tickets, and gave one dollar each for that purpose. One of those tickets was the number 3997, and on the morning of the 18th they found that each of them had won $2,000. This surely is more than sufficient to buy the slaves freedom, as their regular value is from $400 to $750, and when they have the money and wish to buy their freedom, their masters are obliged to sell them.

The erection of several immense buildings has been commenced in London, similar to the large club houses, to be called "Club Houses for the Married." In these edifices, suites of rooms to be arranged, consisting of one, two or three sitting-rooms, as the case may be, with kitchen, offices, &c., to be let at all prices, from £50 a year, upwards. A family may be accommodated in each suit, and may either keep house by themselves, or take their meals at a public boarding-table.

Mr. N. Comstock, Wilton, Ct., acknowledges the receipt of a letter from 'Individual' dated Thanksgiving Day and postmarked New York, enclosing $5 as 'Principal and Interest, as near as I can calculate,' due Mr. C. from the aforesaid 'Individual' for 'that which was taken without your knowledge.'

On Friday afternoon, about twenty minutes of 4 o'clock, the interior of the end of the Church of the Pilgrims, (Dr. Cheever's,) corner of Fifteenth-st. and Union-place, fell in, burying six men in the ruins. Two of them—Thomas Quirk and Patrick McQuirk—were so injured that they are not expected to live.

The consumption of bread in London is 885,468,750 pounds, or 213,867,187 quartern loaves yearly. This quantity of bread, if equally divided among the population of London, would be equal to 842 pounds or eighty-five loaves yearly, or fifteen ounces daily, to each person.

Among the items in the will of Whitehead J. Cornell, Esq., deceased, of Brooklyn, is a legacy of $300, to be divided equally among the Temperance Societies of that city.

Ex-Governor Bouck, who is residing at the Murray-st House, has been robbed of a gold watch and chain worth $150, by a servant girl, who said she intended to return it in due time.

A rogue boarded the ship Northumberland on Tuesday evening, and stole from her cabin a box containing a sword richly ornamented, an umbrella, a hymn-book, and a variety of other articles.

Richard Soundley, Esq., of Newberry, raised on his plantation a sweet potato, measuring two feet one inch and a half in length, and thirteen and a half inches in circumference, at the thickest part!

The flour sent east from Rochester the past season amounted to 540,238 bbls. The receipts of wheat by the two canals amounted to 4,504,546 bushels. There are at Rochester 18 flouring mills, with 82 run of stone. Next year two mills with 18 run of stone are to be added.

The N. Y. Tribune says that a ship arrived here within a day or two from Ireland, having on board a plump and pretty Irish girl, who came on board the day the ship sailed, disguised as a boy, and seeking a chance to work a passage to America. Her sex was shortly discovered, and she was made to change her dress, and kept in the ladies' cabin. Her story is the old one—the same in English, Irish, Dutch or Portuguese. She had a lover who had gone away 'till Ameriky,' promising to send for her when he should get comfortably fixed in the New World and had picked up a bag full of those dollars with which the soil is covered. He did not send, and she, venturing all for love, put herself into ship-shape toggery and sought her lover across the sea.

The Boston Whig says that they have had a terrible time in Petersham, Mass., all about a bell. The bell upon the Universalist Church was sold to pay the Minister's salary. The purchaser was obliged to go to Barre for help to take it down. When he returned there was no way to get to it but by climbing up the lightning rod. It was lowered down, and no sooner was it down, than it was attached on a writ of replevin. By this time, a hundred people were assembled, armed with pitchforks and other deadly weapons, and led on by a Justice of the Peace. A fire engine was also brought up to fire upon the bell-takers, but it could not be used. Thus the matter rested at the last advices.

The Concordia Intelligencer, speaking of the operations of the diving bell boat, says that within ten days past, after hard searching through water and mud, twenty-eight feet under the Mississippi surface, opposite Milliken's Bend, or near that point, it has succeeded in recovering nearly thirty thousand dollars in specie from amid the ruins of the wreck of the old steamer Tennessee.

Mr. Bowen of Worcester, was robbed of nearly $800 in the cars between Farmingham and Worcester, on Friday evening last. He fell asleep in the cars, no person at the time on the seat with him. His pocket book, which was in the breast pocket of his coat, and which contained $770, or thereabouts, and a check on the Farmingham Bank for $137, was cut out and taken away from him without his being aware of it.

The Thirteenth Annual Fair for the promotion of the anti-slavery cause will be opened at Faneuil Hall, Boston, on Forefathers' Day, the 22d inst. The Fair, which has become one of the 'peculiar institutions' of Boston, is under the management of ladies whose skill and taste have made it more popular and attractive than any other similar exhibition in the country.

Dr. Nathan Holmes writes to the St. Louis Reville, that whiskey, or any other stimulus that will raise the patient above fever heat, before the bad symptoms come on, will cure the bite of a rattle-snake. Says he, "I do not believe that fifty rattle-snakes could poison an individual while fully drunk."

Eleven fishing vessels have been lost from Marblehead this season, with 65 men and boys. The crews of these vessels have left 45 widows and 153 children, and the state of destitution and distress is extreme.

The Scientific American says, "A New Orleans paper expresses great admiration at the appearance of a well-wrought daguerreotype portrait, when viewed through a common magnifying glass. There are but few comparatively, however, that will bear the test of a powerful magnifyer, but we have one taken by Gurney, so perfect in form, shade and color, that when sufficiently magnified to produce the requisite apparent size, might be readily mistaken for real life. No painter could begin to approach such perfection."

The Yarmouth Register says that an estate worth £52,000,000 sterling, which has been for years litigated in the High Court of Chancery in England, has recently been adjudged to the heirs of four brothers by the name of Chase, three of whom came to this country some two hundred years ago. One of them—William—settled in Yarmouth, Mass., and it is said that most of his descendants reside within a few miles of that town. William's share is computed at $65,000,000.

At Pittsburg, Penn., the steam boiler in the foundry of Messrs. Alger, Holland & Co., exploded, the boiler being thrown about 100 yards across the road. In its passage, it struck a young man named James McClory, on the back of the head and right shoulder, smashing them into pieces. The face alone remained attached to the body by the skin of the neck. Mr. William Holland, one of the partners, who was directly in front of the boiler, had his head taken clean off.

One wounded soldier, as an incident of war, says, "I beheld not far from me, a villainous looking Rancheros, armed with an American sergeant's short sword, dispatching a wounded American soldier, whose body he had robbed—the next he came to was a Mexican, whom he served the same way; thus I looked on while he murderously slew four."

Letters from Algiers report that a frightful inundation has taken place in Algeria, from the overflowing of the river Arrach, after very heavy rains. The village of Maison Carrec was nearly swept away; and twenty-three persons were known to have been drowned. On the night of the inundation, an earthquake was felt at Algiers.

The Experiment of Free White Labor in a Slave State is about being tried by the citizens of Milledgeville, Geo., in running a factory in that city. I had the pleasure of meeting the Superintendent of the factory, Deacon E——, of Springfield, Mass., who is a fine specimen of a New Englander. He is an active Christian, and if the experiment works, as every one believes it will, the establishment and success of the factory will be a most powerful argument against Slavery, for it will touch the people at the South in a most tender spot—their pockets. The most effective argument with them will be a plain demonstration before their eyes, that Free Labor is cheaper than Slave. It will be asked, Where will they get white laborers? It is replied, hundreds on the spot are applying for work.

In the Common Pleas at Springfield, Mass., Maria A. Ames has recovered $800 of Julius Ward for slander.

The great battle of the Mexican campaign, is to be at San Louis Potosi. The place numbers 50,000 inhabitants, and will probably have from 30,000 to 40,000 soldiers to defend it, with an abundance of artillery means.

The late gales have been disastrous on the coast of Maine. More than twenty vessels were stranded near Mount Desert, and among them one (the Com. Perry,) belonging to Deer Isle, and all on board lost. The bodies of the captain, one seaman and a female passenger have been picked up.

The question is sometimes asked, what sort of an arm the Escopette used by the Mexicans is. In the language of an officer of the Regular Army, writing to a friend in Savannah, "it is an ugly little gun, about two feet long, carrying a two ounce ball."

The Baltimore Sun has received a letter from the Purser of the U. S. ship Boston, Commander George F. Pearson, reporting the total wreck of that vessel at Elethura, Island Nov. 15. Crew saved—205 in number.

Judge Chambers of Maryland met with a very serious accident the other day by the explosion of a powder flask while he was out guning. His face and eyes were badly burned, and will be much disfigured.

The New York Evening Mirror says: Silk overcoats, "all buttoned down before," will be the prevailing fashion with the ladies, the coming winter.

A census of Cincinnati was taken the last month, by which it appears that city has now 62,690 white inhabitants, and 2,128 colored.

Surveyors have been appointed to examine and report the feasibility of a railroad from Chicago to Rockford, on Rock river.

Mr. Glidden, in a recent lecture in Philadelphia, exhibited to his audience two earthen jars, one of which had been dug up from an ancient mound in our western country, and the other taken from an ancient tomb in Egypt. They were precisely of the same pattern.

A bridge is now nearly finished, which extends across the Delaware river, at Narrowsburgh, Pa., a distance of two hundred and sixty feet, by a single span, and without support of check braces at the ends.

The Scientific American says, "We have seen at 117 Fulton-st., a new invention called 'Drummond's Candle Maker,' which consists of a brass or tin candlestick with a reservoir of capacity to hold half a pound of tallow and a quantity of wicking, and so constructed that a new candle can be moulded and drawn up as fast as it is consumed at the top; thus constituting a sort of endless candle."

A man in Athens, Tenn., having paid his addresses to two sisters, married one, and recently run away with the other. The father-in-law pursued and shot the fellow, and returned, taking both daughters home.

A cargo of 15,000 bricks has been conveyed to Liverpool from Shanghae, in China, in a vessel called the Annio. They are said to be of a quality which will render them applicable to general purposes.

A large bear was killed at St. Peter's Bay, N. H., by the discharge of a gun, which had been placed for the purpose with a piece of meat on the muzzle attached by a string to the trigger.

Mr. Pell, of Pelham Farm, has written a letter to the Editors of the New York Journal of Commerce, detailing the great advantages he has experienced from using Coal Ashes as a manure upon grass land.

An iron church, the entire cost of which was but little more than £1000, was recently sent from Scotland to Jamaica, as a specimen of Iron architecture.

A colored man belonging to the estate of the late John Sparks, died near Centreville, Md., at the advanced age of one hundred and twenty-two years.

It is said that thirty thousand copies of the sacred Scriptures have been sold by the colporteurs of France during the last three months.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

Elihu Burritt, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in Advance.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

THE WEEKLY CHRONOTYPE,

IS published weekly by White, Potter & Wright, at No 2 Devonshire Street, near State Street, Boston. Terms—$2 a year, in advance. For $5 three copies will be sent to one address. A liberal discount will be made to Agents who pay for a larger number of copies. Edited by

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

This paper is not bound to the creed or cause of any clique, association, party, sect or set of men, but expresses freely the opinions of its editor at the time, and of such contributors as may honor it with their thoughts, or be supposed by the editor to do so. It will be his endeavor to give such a variety and quantity of matter as to meet the wants of every enlightened family, and especially of those which seek more light. He will not only give the daguerreotype likeness of Time as he passes, but will examine every new thing that he meets, and some things that are old, without fear or favor. Where he cannot convince, he will try to be good-natured. Where he cannot satisfy himself of the truth, he will be contented to confess his ignorance. In short, he will endeavor to help forward, in a neighborly way, every thing but Humbug. That he will endeavor to knock down and drag out, even if it should cling to the throne of political power or the horns of the sacred altar.

He will not take an oath never to be wiser. He will not scorn truth, though it may come from an enemy. He will not flatter the poor because he is one of them. He will not hate and abuse the rich because he is not one of them. But he will endeavor to establish a better understanding between the extremes of society—showing both ends that happiness is most likely to be found between them—consisting in a great measure in a mutual endeavor to abolish idleness, disease, poverty and roguery.

With these general purposes, it is the prime object of the editor of this paper to get an honest living.

Miscellaneous.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The Annual Message of the President of the United States was read before Congress on Tuesday, the 8th inst. Considering its great length, and the probability that most of our readers will have access to it through some other medium, we have thought best not to publish it entire. The following abstract, however, will be found to contain the substance of it:—

The Message states in the outset, that there has been no period in our past history when all the elements of national prosperity have been so fully developed. Since the last session of Congress no afflicting dispensation has visited our country; general good health has prevailed; abundance has crowned the toil of the husbandman; and labor in all its branches is receiving ample reward, while education, science, and the arts, are rapidly enlarging the means of social happiness. For this our devout and sincere acknowledgments are due to the gracious Giver of all good.

The relations of the United States with all other nations, with the single exception of Mexico, are of the most amicable character.

The War with Mexico.

"The existing war with Mexico was neither desired nor provoked by the United States. On the contrary, all honorable means were resorted to, to avert it. After years of endurance of aggravated and unredressed wrongs on our part, Mexico, in violation of solemn treaty stipulations, and of every principle of justice recognized by civilized nations, commenced hostilities; and thus, by her own act, forced the war upon us. Long before the advance of our army to the left bank of the Rio Grande, we had ample cause of war against Mexico; and had the United States resorted to this extremity, we might have appealed to the whole civilized world for the justice of our cause. I deem it to be my duty to present to you, on the present occasion, a condensed review of the injuries we had sustained, of the causes which led to the war, and of its progress since its commencement. * * * * * *

"Scarcely had Mexico achieved her independence, which the United States was the first among the nations to acknowledge, when she commenced the system of insult and spoliation, which she has ever since pursued. Our citizens engaged in lawful commerce were imprisoned, their vessels seized, and our flag insulted in her ports. If money was wanted, the lawless seizure and confiscation of our merchant vessels and their cargoes was a ready resource; and if, to accomplish their purposes, it became necessary to imprison the owners, captains, and crews, it was done. Rulers superseded rulers in Mexico in rapid succession, but still there was no change in this system of depredation. The Government of the United States made repeated reclamations on behalf of its citizens, but these were answered by the perpetration of new outrages. Promises of redress made by Mexico in the most solemn forms were postponed or evaded. The files and records of the Department of State contain conclusive proofs of numerous lawless acts perpetrated upon the property and persons of our citizens by Mexico, and of wanton insult to our national flag. The interposition of our Government to obtain redress was again and again invoked, under circumstances which no nation ought to disregard.

"It was hoped that these outrages would cease, and that Mexico would be restrained by the laws which regulate the conduct of civilized nations in their intercourse with each other, after the treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation of the 5th of April, 1831, was concluded between the two republics; but this hope soon proved to be vain. The course of seizure and confiscation of the property of our citizens, the violation of their persons, and the insults to our flag, pursued by Mexico previous to that time, were scarcely suspended for even a brief period, although the treaty so clearly defines the rights and duties of the respective parties that it is impossible to misunderstand or mistake them. In less than seven years after the conclusion of that treaty, our grievances had become so intolerable that, in the opinion of President Jackson, they should no longer be endured. In his Message to Congress in February, 1837, he presented them to the consideration of that body, and declared that 'the length of time since some of the injuries have been committed, the repeated and unavailing application for redress, the wanton character of some of the outrages upon the property and persons of our citizens, upon the officers and flag of the United States, independent of recent insults to this Government and people by the late extraordinary Mexican Minister, would justify in the eyes of all nations immediate war.' In a spirit of kindness and forbearance, however, he recommended reprisals as a milder mode of redress. * * *

"Committees of both Houses of Congress, to which this message of this President was referred, fully sustained his views of the character of the wrongs which we had suffered from Mexco, and recommended that another demand for redress should be made before authorizing war or reprisals. The Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, in their report, say: "After such a demand, should prompt justice be refused by the Mexican Government, we may appeal to all nations, not only for the equity and moderation with which we shall have acted towards a sister republic, but for the necessity which will then compel us to seek redress for our wrongs, either by actual war or by reprisals. The subject will then be presented before Congress, at the commencement of the next session, in a clear and distinct form; and the Committee cannot doubt but that such measures will be immediately adopted as may be necessary to vindicate the honor of the country, and ensure ample reparation to our injured citizens."

"The Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives made a similar recommendation. * * *

"No difference of opinion upon the subject is believed to have existed in Congress at that time; the Executive and Legislative departments concurred; and yet such has been our forbearance, and desire to preserve peace with Mexico, that the wrongs of which we then complained, and which gave rise to these solemn proceedings, not only remain unredressed to this day, but additional causes of complaint, of an aggravated character, have ever since been accumulating.

"Shortly after these proceedings, a special messenger was dispatched to Mexico, to make a final demand for redress; and on the twentieth of July, 1837, the demand was made. The reply of the Mexican Government bears date on the twenty-ninth of the same month, and contains assurances of the 'anxious wish' of the Mexican Government 'not to delay the moment of that final and equitable adjustment which is to terminate the existing difficulties between the two Governments;' that 'nothing should be left undone which may contribute to the most speedy equitable determination of the subjects which have so seriously engaged the attention of the American Government;' that the 'Mexican Government would adopt, as the only guides for its conduct, the plainest principles of public right, the sacred obligation imposed by international law, and the religious faith of treaties;' and that 'whatever reason and justice may dictate respecting each case will be done.' The assurance was farther given, that the decision of the Mexican Government upon each case of complaint, for which redress had been demanded, should be communicated to the Government of the United States by the Mexican Minister at Washington.

"These solemn assurances, in answer to our demand for redress, were disregarded. By making them, however, Mexico obtained farther delay. President Van Buren, in his annual message to Congress of the fifth of December, 1837, states, that 'although the larger number' of our demands for redress, and 'many of them aggravated cases of personal wrong, have been now for years before the Mexican Government, and some of the causes of national complaint, and those of the most offensive character, admitted of immediate, simple, and satisfactory replies, it is only within a few days past that any specific communication in answer to our demand, made five months ago, has been received from the Mexican minister;' and that 'for not one of our public complaints has satisfaction been given or offered; that but one of the cases of personal wrong has been favorably considered, and that but four cases of both descriptions, out of all those formally presented, and earnestly pressed, have as yet been decided upon by the Mexican Government.' President Van Buren, believing that it would be vain to make any farther attempt to obtain redress by the ordinary means within the power of the Executive, communicated this opinion to Congress, in the message referred to. * * * *

"Instead of taking redress into our own hands, a new negotiation was entered upon with fair promises on the part of Mexico, but with the real purpose, as the event has proved, of indefinitely postponing the reparation which we demanded, and which was so justly due. This negotiation, after more than a year's delay, resulted in the Convention of the 11th of April, 1839, 'for the adjustment of claims of citizens of the United States of America upon the Government of the Mexican Republic.' The joint Board of Commissioners created by this Convention to examine and decide upon these claims was not organized until the month of August, 1840, and under the terms of the Convention they were to terminate their duties within eighteen months from that time. Four of the eighteen months were consumed in preliminary discussion on frivolous and dilatory points raised by the Mexican Commissioners; and it was not until the month of December, 1840, that they commenced the examination of the claims of our citizens upon Mexico. Fourteen months only remained to examine and decide upon these numerous and complicated cases. In the month of Feb., 1842, the term of the commission expired, leaving many claims undisposed of for want of time. The claims which were allowed by the Board, and by the umpire authorized by the Convention to decide in case of disagreement between the Mexican and American commissioners, amounted to two millions twenty-six thousand one hundred and thirty-nine dollars and sixty-eight cents. There were pending before the umpire when the commission expired, additional claims which had been examined and awarded by the American commissioners, and had not been allowed by the Mexican commissioners, amounting to nine hundred and twenty-eight thousand six hundred and twenty-seven dollars and eighty-eight cents, upon which he did not decide, alledging that his authority had ceased with the termination of the joint commission. Besides these claims, there were others of American citizens amounting to three million three hundred and thirty-six thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven dollars and five cents, which had been submitted to the Board, and upon which they had not time to decide before their final adjournment.

"The sum of two million twenty-six thousand one hundred and thirty-nine dollars and sixty-eight cents, which had been awarded to the claimants, was a liquidated and ascertained debt due by Mexico, about which there could be no dispute, and which she was bound to pay according to the terms of the Convention. Soon after the final awards for this amount had been made, the Mexican Government asked for a postponement of the time of making payment, alledging that it would be inconvenient to make the payment at the time stipulated. In the spirit of forbearing kindness towards a sister Republic, which Mexico had so long abused, the United States promptly complied with her request. A second Convention was accordingly concluded between the two Governments on the thirtieth of January, 1843, which upon its face declares that 'this new arrangement is entered into for the accommodation of Mexico.' By the terms of this Convention, all the interest due on the awards which had been made in favor of the claimants under the Convention of the eleventh of April, 1839, was to be paid to them on the thirtieth of April, 1843, and 'the principal of the said awards, and the interest accruing thereon,' was stipulated to 'be paid in five years, in equal installments every three months.' Notwithstanding this new Convention was entered into at the request of Mexico, and for the purpose of relieving her from embarrassment, the claimants have only received the interest due on the thirtieth of April, 1843, and three of the twenty installments. Although the payment of the sum thus liquidated, and confessedly due by Mexico to our citizens as indemnity for acknowledged acts of outrage and wrong, was secured by treaty, the obligations of which are ever held sacred by all just nations, yet Mexico has violated this solemn engagement by failing and refusing to make the payment. The two installments due in April and July, 1844, under the peculiar circumstances connected with them, have been assumed by the United States and discharged to the claimants, but they are still due by Mexico. But this is not all of which we have just cause of complaint. To provide a remedy for the claimants whose cases were not decided by the joint commission under the Convention of April the 11th, 1839, it was expressly stipulated by the sixth article of the Convention of the 30th of January, 1843, that 'a new Convention shall be entered into for the settlement of all claims of the Government and citizens of the United States against the republic of Mexico which were not finally decided by the late commission, which met in the city of Washington, and of claims of the Government and citizens of Mexico against the United States.'

"In conformity with this stipulation, a third Convention was concluded and signed at the City of Mexico on the 20th of November, 1843, by the Plenipotentiaries of the two Governments, by which provision was made for ascertaining and paying these claims. In January, 1844, this Convention was ratified by the Senate of the United States with two amendments, which were manifestly reasonable in their character. Upon a reference of the amendments proposed to the Government of Mexico, the same evasions, difficulties, and delays were interposed which have so long marked the policy of that Government to the United States. It has not even yet decided whether it would or would not accede to them, although the subject has been repeatedly pressed upon its consideration. Mexico has thus violated a second time the faith of treaties, by failing or refusing to carry into effect the sixth article of the Convention of January, 1843."

[Such is the history which the President gives of the causes of the war. Then follows a lengthy review of the movements which led to the separation of Texas from Mexico, and its annexation to the United States. It is maintained, that Texas has all along embraced the territory between the Nueces and the Rio Grande; that Mexico has never justified the war which she has waged upon the ground of our army's occupying that territory; that she had claimed Texas as a rebellious province, and has threatened to commence a war with the United States to reconquer Texas. In view of these threats, the army was ordered to occupy a frontier military post, to resist a Mexican invasion.]

"The war will continue to be prosecuted with vigor, as the best means of securing peace. It is hoped that the decision of the Mexican Congress, to which our last overture has been referred, may result in a speedy and honorable peace. With our experience, however, of the unreasonable course of the Mexican authorities, it is the part of wisdom not to relax in the energy of our military operations until the result is made known. In this view, it is deemed important to hold military possession of all the provinces which have been taken, until a definite treaty of peace shall have been concluded and ratified by the two countries. The war has not been waged with a view to conquest; but having been commenced by Mexico, it has been carried into the enemy's country, and will be vigorously prosecuted there, with a view to obtain an honorable peace, and thereby secure ample indemnity for the expenses of the war, as well as to our much injured citizens, who hold large pecuniary demands against Mexico."

State of the Treasury.

"The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury will exhibit a detailed statement of the condition of the finances. The imports for the fiscal year ending the 13th of June last were of the value of one hundred and twenty-one million six hundred and ninety-one thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven dollars; of which the amount exported was eleven million three hundred and forty-six thousand six hundred and twenty-three dollars, leaving the amount retained in the country for domestic consumption one hundred and ten million three hundred and forty-five thousand one hundred and seventy-four dollars. The value of the exports for the same period was one hundred and thirteen million four hundred and eighty-eight thousand five hundred and sixteen dollars; of which one hundred and two million one hundred and forty-one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three dollars consisted of domestic productions, and eleven million three hundred and forty-six thousand six hundred and twenty-three dollars of foreign articles.

The receipts into the Treasury for the same year were twenty-nine million four hundred and ninety-nine thousand two hundred and forty-seven dollars and six cents; of which there was derived from customs twenty-six million seven hundred and twelve thousand six hundred and sixty-seven dollars and eighty-seven cents; from sales of public lands two million six hundred and ninety-five thousand four hundred and fifty-two dollars and forty-eight cents, and from incidental and miscellaneous sources ninety-two thousand one hundred and twenty-six dollars and seventy-one cents. The expenditures for the same period were twenty-eight million thirty-one thousand one hundred and fourteen dollars and twenty cents, and the balance in the Treasury on the 1st day of July last was nine million one hundred and twenty-six thousand four hundred and thirty-nine dollars and eight cents. The amount of the Public Debt, including Treasury Notes, the 1st of the present month, was twenty-four millions two hundred and fifty-six thousand four hundred and ninety-four dollars and sixty cents; of which the sum of seventeen million seven hundred and eighty-eight thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine dollars and sixty-two cents was outstanding on the 4th of March, 1845, leaving the amount incurred since that time six million four hundred and sixty-seven thousand six hundred and ninety-four dollars and ninety-eight cents.

In order to prosecute the war with Mexico with vigor and energy, as the best means of bringing it to a speedy and honorable termination, a farther loan will be necessary, to meet the expenditures for the present and the next fiscal years. If the war should be continued until the 30th of June, 1848—being the end of the next fiscal year—it is estimated that an additional loan of twenty-three millions of dollars will be required."

The Tariff.

"In my annual message of December last, a tariff of revenue duties based upon the principles of the existing law was recommended, and I have seen no reason to change the opinions then expressed. In view of the probable beneficial effects of that law, I recommend that the policy establish by it be maintained. It has but just commenced to operate; and to abandon or modify it without giving it a fair trial, would be inexpedient and unwise. Should defects in any of its details be ascertained by actual experience to exist, these may be hereafter corrected; but until such defects shall become manifest, the act should be fairly tested. It is submitted for your consideration, whether it may not be proper, as a war measure, to impose revenue duties on some of the articles now embraced in the free list. Should it be deemed proper to impose such duties, with a view to raise revenue to meet the expenses of the war with Mexico, or to avoid to that extent the creation of a public debt, they may be replaced when the emergency which gave rise to them shall cease to exist, and constitute no part of the permanent policy of the country."

Graduating the Price of Lands.

"The importance of graduating and reducing the price of such of the public lands as have been long offered in the market at the minimum rate authorized by existing laws, and remain unsold, induces me again to recommed the subject to your favorable consideration. Many millions of acres of these lands have been offered in the market for more than thirty years, and larger quantities for more than ten or twenty years; and being of an inferior quality, they must remain unsaleable for an indefinite period, unless the price at which they may be purchased shall be reduced.

"A large portion of the public lands containing copper and other ores is represented to be very valuable, and I recommend that provisions be made authorizing the sale of these lands, upon such terms and conditions as their supposed value may, in the judgment of Congress, be deemed advisable, having due regard to the interests of such of our citizens as may be located upon them."

Government of Oregon.

"It will be important, during your present session, to establish a territorial government and to extend the jurisdiction and laws of the United States over the Territory of Oregon. Our laws regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes east of the Rocky Mountains should be extended to the Pacific ocean; and for the purpose of executing them, and preserving friendly relations with the Indian tribes within our limits, an additional number of Indian agencies will be required, and should be authorized by law. The establishment of Custom Houses, and of Post Offices and Post Roads, and provision for the transportation of the mail on such routes as the public convenience will suggest, require legislative authority."

Relations with the Indians.

"Our relations with the various Indian tribes continue to be of a pacific character. The unhappy dissensions which have existed among the Cherokees for many years past have been healed. Since my last annual message important treaties have been negotiated with some of the tribes, by which the Indian title to large tracts of valuable land within the limits of the States and Territories has been extinguished, and arrangements made for removing them to the country west of the Mississippi. Between three and four thousand, of different tribes, have been removed to the country provided for them by treaty stipulations, and arrangements have been made for others to follow. In our intercourse with the several tribes particular attention has been given to the important subject of education. The number of schools established among them has been increased, and additional means provided, not only for teaching them the rudiments of education, but of instructing them in agriculture and the arts."

Post Office Department.

'The progress and condition of the mail service for the past year are fully presented in the report of the Postmaster General. The revenue for the year ending on the thirtieth of June last amounted to three million four hundred and eighty-seven thousand one hundred and ninety-nine dollars, which is eight hundred and two thousand six hundred and forty-two dollars and forty-five cents less than that of the preceding year. The payments for that department during the same time amounted to four million eighty-four thousand two hundred and ninety-seven dollars and twenty-two cents. Of this sum five hundred and ninety-seven thousand and ninety-seven dollars and eighty cents have been drawn from the treasury. The disbursements for the year were two hundred and thirty-six thousand four hundred and thirty-four dollars and seventy-seven cents less than those of the preceding year. While the disbursements have been thus diminished, the mail facilities have been enlarged by new mail routes of five thousand seven hundred and thirty-nine miles; an increase of transportation of one million seven hundred and sixty-four thousand one hundred and forty-five miles, and the establishment of four hundred and eighteen new post offices. Contractors, postmasters, and others, engaged in this branch of the service, have performed their duties with energy and faithfulness deserving commendation. For many interesting details connected with the operations of this establishment, you are referred to the report of the Postmaster General; and his suggestions for improving its revenues are recommended to your favorable consideration. I repeat the opinion expressed in my last annual message, that the business of this department should be so regulated that the revenues derived from it should be made to equal the expenditures; and it is believed that this may be done by proper modifications of the present laws, as suggested in the report of the Postmaster General, without changing the present rates of postage.

With full reliance upon the wisdom and patriotism of your deliberations, it will be my duty, as it will be my anxious desire, to co-operate with you in every constitutional effort to promote the welfare and maintain the honor of our common country. JAMES K. POLK.

WASHINGTON, December 8, 1846.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

A FARM FOR SALE,

IN the township of Piscataway, State of New Jersey, lying north-east from New Brunswick, half a mile from the Bridge, half a mile from Snyder's Mills, and in full view of the railroad car-house. Said farm consists of about ninety five acres of land, in a good state of cultivation, and well adapted to raising grain and vegetables. It has a good variety of fruit trees, considerable wood, and five acres of salt meadow. The house is in good repair, and has a well of water at the door. There is also a new barn, sheds, &c. For farther particulars call on Dr. NELSON STELLE, No. 146 Grand-st., N. Y.—Mr. Bufris, No. 1 Oliver-st.—or on the premises of JONATHAN S. DUNHAM.

THE ORIGINAL SABBATH UNCHANGED.

SECTION V. [Concluded.

The Observance of the Weekly Sabbath enjoined upon the Israelites.

We do not, however, speak with certainity of this as the meaning of the prohibition, although we certainly can see nothing in its nature applicable to the Israelites, that we should not regard as equally applicable to Gentiles in similar circumstances. Now the objection to the continuing obligation of the seventh day as the Christian Sabbath, founded upon this prohibition, proceeds upon the very idea that in some lands such a prohibition would be absolutely intolerable, and is, therefore, not to be supposed to apply to the inhabitants of countries less favorably situated. That the Sabbath, blessed of the Lord, is not designed to be a day of penance and rigor, we believe, and our faith in this we have already sufficiently indicated. And if the application of the principle of the objection necessarily imply deprivation of needed comfort for spiritual exercises, or danger to health, we unhesitatingly declare our conviction that the application must be erroneous.

Let us then consider what would be its bearing upon the Israelites themselves, were the prohibition regarded as directed against all use of common fires for warmth and culinary purposes—applied in all time, and under all circumstances. In the wilderness of Sinai, the prohibition even so understood might occasion little privation; while in other situations, and especially in after epochs of their eventful history, its enforcement would be most severely felt. Even in their own lovely land, toward its northern boundary, on the mountains of Lebanon, and therefore near the line of perpetual snow, fire, both for comfort and cooking, would doubtless be much desired upon the Sabbath, as well as on other days. The prohibition so understood as to bear againt this, would press still more generally, if not more severely, when the Ten Tribes, on account of their iniquities, were carried to the mountainous regions of northern Assyria, and planted "in the cities of the Medes," considerably farther north; (2 Kings 17: 6,) and when, at a later period, there were Jews in all the extensive empire of King Ahasueras, who "reigned from India even unto Ethiopia, over an hundred and seven and twenty provinces." (Esther i. 1; iii. 8; viii. 9; ix. 20, 30.) And still more ungenial would it become, when their kingdom was entirely destroyed, and, as predicted by Moses, they were uprooted from the land of their inheritance, and scattered into all lands, "unto the utmost parts of heaven." The Sabbath obligation unquestionably followed the Israelite, at least, through all the countries of his dispersion. "The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy her Sabbath, while she lieth desolate without them." Lev. xxvi. 43. From this their present state of degradation and dispersion, God has promised to recall them; but the promise to this effect, as recorded by Moses, stands connected with their previous observance not only of the Sabbath, but their observance of all the Mosaic institutions. "Thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, and shall return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey His voice, according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thine heart, and with all thy soul; that then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee. If any of thine be driven out unto the utmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will He fetch thee; and the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and He will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers." Deut. xxx. 1—5.

Now there is no such constitutional difference between the people of Israel and those of other lands, as will enable the former better to bear the rigors of a northern winter than the native inhabitants of such regions. Yet certain it is, that there are no lands whose population is Christian, into which Jews have not passed, as predicted. They are, therefore, exposed to all the severity of the Scottish, or Russian, or American Winter Sabbath, just as much as the Christian inhabitants are. If, then, the Christian, in the way of objection to his own keeping of the Sabbath, shall first interpret the prohibition against kindling fires as applying to domestic fires, and then declare that the rigor would be intolerable; and that, therefore, such a keeping of the Sabbath is impossible, what is to become of the Jew, on whom, even while resident in the same climates, the whole Mosaic code is thus divinely made imperative? Is it consistent with the gracious character of the God of Israel, with the merciful consideration of His people's necessities, which pervades the provisions of the law, to imagine that he has enjoined upon the Israelites an obligation which it is impossible for them to sustain? In its due observance, it is divinely required that the worshiper shall account and "call the Sabbath a delight;" (Is. lviii. 13,) but how would this be possible, if fire is to be denied for both comfort and cooking, in circumstances where those would be indispensable to the Christian?

The Jews themselves do, indeed, understand the prohibition in the same sense as the objector to whom we are replying; but, they satisfy their consciences, in cold climates, by the employment of Gentile servants to kindle and maintain their Sabbath fires. This we regard as a mere evasion. For even if they were right in so interpreting the prohibition against kindling fires, its obligation must be viewed as explanatory of the provisions of the fourth commandment. Now the commandment is not more stringent upon the master than it is upon the servant and upon the stranger within his gates.

If viewed as a prohibition against "kindling" fire, merely, on the Sabbath, we are aware the objection could be obviated. Ovens can be so constructed as in some measure to serve their purpose without attendance during sacred time, and arrangements of a similar nature could be adapted for preserving dwelling houses at a more comfortable temperature. But our objector must equally regard these contrivances as evasions of the law, else his objection would be wholly destitute of force; for that which will enable the Jew to sanctify God's Sabbath, would equally enable the Christian to do so, without perverting it from the day appointed.

The objector necessarily, therefore, supposes God to have made it imperative upon the Israelite, that he shall hallow the Sabbath in all discomfort, and even at the risk of impairing health, while yet making provision for its being found a delight. We, on the contrary, believe—the Sabbath having been made for man—that, in such circumstances, He who enjoined the Sabbath maintenance of fire in His temple, and who approves the loosing the ox and the ass from their stalls, and leading them to water on the Sabbath, is not less considerate of the necessities of His own people in the act, and in the time, of their obedience.

Horne confines the prohibition to "fire for culinary purposes;" (Introduction to the Bible, Vol. 3, p. 300.) And in reference to it, the author of the Pictorial Palestine, says, "It was not understood that this prevented a fire or light kindled before the Sabbath from being kept burning. They, therefore, had fires, as now, in cold weather, to warm themselves, but not to dress victuals."

Carpenter, in his Biblical Companion, (p. 294,) says the prohibition "must be understood with some limitation," that "it would have been a breach of the divine law of mercy not to kindle a fire for the sick and infirm. The meaning of the precept, therefore, is that no fire was to be kindled on the Sabbath day for cooking meat, which is elsewhere forbidden, or for any other servile purpose."

Michaelis, who also regards the prohibition as directed against the cooking of food, says, "Whether the prohibition of kindling fire extended to fire necessary for warmth, or only to fire for cooking, I cannot say; but, allowing that they understood it in its strictest sense, they might easily hold out, even in winter, in so mild a climate, if immediately before sunset, they made such a fire as to keep heat until next day; more especially as in southern countries, they usually fortify themselves against frost more by the aid of warm clothing than by the heat of fires." "In fact, however," he continues, "I believe the prohibition only affected kitchen fires; for had fire for warmth been forbidden, I should have supposed, considering that in some parts of Palestine, such as those about Mount Lebanon, the cold in winter is pretty severe, that necessity would have taught the Israelites the discovery of some contrivance resembling the oven. Yet, in their buildings, before the Babylonish captivity, we find no mention of either ovens or chimneys; for even their kings, in winter, instead of having a fire on a hearth, had only a portable stone, or pipkins, in their apartments, filled with hot coals." Michaelis' Commentaries, vol. iii. p. 166.

A necessity has thus been felt by writers little disposed to favor our views, to limit the prohibition against the kindling of fires, while their mode of explanation is suggested by circumstances wholly independant of the connection of the text. A consideration of the context suggests a less arbitrary limitation, and, as such, seems preferable. It refers to work that is neither of necessity nor of mercy, and forbids it, leaving unaffected the question of whether fires are lawful in other cases. That they are so, where life, health or comfort cannot be maintained without them, we firmly believe, both as respects Jew and Gentile. The prohibition stands embodied among the laws given to Israel, but grievously have their circumstances changed since they received it. Exposed, as we know many of their sons and daughters to be, to the frosts and the snows of the most intemperate climes, we need scarcely ask, if they were denied the advantage and comfort of domestic fires, whether the Sabbath would be to them a delight, or whether it would not rather be an occasion of apprehension? We may surely assume in favor of the divine law, that, from those so circumstanced, so essential an element of human comfort was not designed to be withheld. And if we have succeeded in making it evident that the prohibition could not be intended to mar the comfort of the Israelite himself in the observance of the seventh day, then, also, have we succeeded in repelling the objection to its sanctification by the Christian. The hapless destiny of Israel seems to afford sufficient illustration of its inconclusiveness in regard to both.

A TRIP TO MOUNT AUBURN.

The writer describes several of the most remarkable monuments there, and among others, one bearing upon it no other inscription than the simple name "Emily," with the following touching stanza beneath:

> "Shed not for her the bitter tear,
> Nor give the heart to vain regret,
> 'Tis but the casket that lies here,
> The gem that filled it sparkles yet."

And he goes on to say that he is a great admirer of simple epitaphs, and to relate that, in an old church-yard in South Wales, he once met with one on a simple stone, which affected him deeply; telling more about the parents' sorrowing for their lost infant than the most labored epitaph could have done. In the old, quaint spelling, on a plain slab, were carved in rude letters, only the words:

"DEERE CHILDE!"

What could be more pathetic, excepting this, which is to be found in the Kensal Greene Cemetery, Hanover Road, London?

"TO THE MEMORY OF LITTLE KATE."

At Laurel Hill Cemetery, in Philadelphia, there is also a touching inscription. A white marble slab has on it a simple word:

"WILLIE."

No more. Nothing else. But how plainly to thoughtful hearts does it tell that bright, golden-haired little "Willie," in spite of love, had gone down, in life's young spring, to darkness and the worm!

THE COSTUME OF THE KARENS.

"When we first arrived in Burmah, we had expected to have found the people in nearly a savage condition, but were happily disappointed in finding all these large nations of the east in a kind of half-civilized state, which renders a residence among them far more agreeable, and our facilities for giving them instruction far better than among the wandering tribes of our country. On meeting a Karen for the first time, as he emerges from his native jungles, the attention would naturally be directed to the extreme simplicity and labor-saving style of his dress. Make a large bag, of coarse, thick, white cotton cloth, and turning it bottom upwards, make a hole for the arms in the corners, and one for the head in the middle between them, and you have a complete Karen dress. A similar border of stripes of such colors as are most easily obtained, is woven from the bottom to above the knees, in the garment of the men and boys, while that for the girls, though made in the same fashion, is entirely white. This dress, extending, more or less, nearly to the ankles, with a turban for the head, similar to that worn by the Burmese, forms the common dress for the men, though they have a coarse kind of cotton blanket, which is thrown around them when the weather is cool, and they are not at work. This blanket also serves for bedding; for a few leaves, and a stone for a pillow, forms for them, when traveling, a comfortable substitute for their mat and wooden pillow at home. Though this is the entire original dress of the Karens, yet the more civilized, and particularly the Christians, have adopted, as an addition, the Burman white cotton gown; and when this is worn, as the bosom of their dress is long, they slip it down over the arms, and binding it around the waist, it reaches quite to the ankles, and, with the gown, forms a neat and becoming dress.

"The entire Burman dress is also worn by Karens, and when put on in a proper manner, is also a becoming and suitable dress for a hot climate. But to see little girls dressed in this bag-fashioned garment must look frightfully, you will naturally fancy. But you would hesitate a moment before expressing your dislike, if, with right Christian feeling, you could hear the remarks the more intelligent Karens make, upon the time we spend in cutting up our cloth and sewing it together again to make a garment, which they say they 'could not breathe in.' But to return to my Karen girls. When a troop of my female pupils, from six to ten years of age, all dressed in this simple garment, clean and white, extending to the ankles, all exactly alike, and with a handsome silk or cotton handkerchief thrown carelessly over the head and shoulders, have been walking out with me at evening, I have often been stopped by English gentlemen and ladies, that they might notice the neat and becoming manner in which the pupils were dressed.

"As a Karen girl approaches the size and age of womanhood, her mother teaches her to spin, color, and weave, a handsome, dark colored petticoat, and after making a dress considerably shorter than usual, colors it a good black, and then the young miss may be seen, from day to day, busily engaged, during every leisure moment, in ornamenting this black dress with a small white seed, which they cultivate in their gardens, and which very nearly resembles white glass beads. With the aid of strips of bright red cloth, she makes a handsome, deep border around the lower part, while the upper part is covered with figures of a pretty pattern, made with the seeds, and embroidery of needle work with bright colors, so that the original coarse black cotton is only seen as a ground work. At this age, too, the Karen girl learns to make herself a turban, in the form of a small scarf, with a deep, handsome border of bright colors at the ends, and finished with a fringe, which is made to hang carelessly in the place of curls, on each side of the head. Many of these turbans are really handsome, and executed with much skill and taste, and are often purchased, together with the ornamented dresses, and sent to England, and other countries. The other tribe of Karens, which is called Pwo, or Tho, are accustomed to weave a similar border for the dresses of the men and boys, which is a great labor, and when done with silk instead of cotton, are really beautiful."

OBEYING GOD.

When God says, "Sun, shine in the skies!" the sun directly answers, not in words, but in deeds, "Here am I, to do my Maker's will, to light up earth and heaven with my glory, to gild all things with gold, and to make the whole creation rejoice."

When God says to moon, "Appear!" the moon replies, "Here am I, with my silver light, to scatter the darkness, and render night lovely."

When God says to the stars, "Shine forth!" they instantly answer, "We are thy servants, and gladly do thy bidding. Already we are in the skies, and there will we keep watch till thou givest us leave to retire."

Thus do the sun, and the moon, and the stars, obey their Almighty Maker.

When God says to the spring, "Come forth with thy flowers!" does she tarry, or refuse to answer? No; "I come," says the spring. "Here are my greenest leaves. Here are my freshest flowers, wherewith to beautify the earth. The snowdrop is in the garden, and the primrose on the bank and in the coppice."

When God says to the summer, "Gladden the earth!" the answer of summer is this: "At thy voice I spread my influence abroad; the birds are warbling, the flowers are blooming, the trees are blossoming, and nature is rejoicing."

When God says to the autumn, "Withhold not thy fruits." "They are here!" is autumn's reply. "The bush is laden with berries, and the trees with fruit, and the fields are waving the golden grain, ready for the sickle of the husbandman."

When God says to the winter, "Where art thou, and where are thy storms?" "They are abroad at thy command," replies winter. "Frost has bound up the earth and the waters; snow has covered the ground, and the wings of the howling wind are flying through the air. Who shall stand before thy cold?"

Thus do spring, summer, autumn, and winter, obey the command of the Holy One.

And shall the sun with his glory, the moon with her beams, and the stars with their light, obey their Maker? Shall spring with her flowers, summer with his blossoms, autumn with his fruits, and surly winter with his storms, gladly hasten to do the commandment of the Lord; and thou refuse to obey him? O! let thy language be—

> While sun, and moon, and stars are seen,
> And seasons round me roll,
> I will obey the Lord my God
> With all my heart and soul!

WHAT IS GOD?

There is one anecdote connected with the formation of the Shorter Catechism, both full of interest, and so very beautiful, that it must not be omitted. In one of the earliest meetings of the committee, the subject of deliberation was to frame an answer to the question, What is God? Each man felt the unapproachable sublimity of the divine idea suggested by these words; but who could venture to give it expression in human language! All shrunk from the too sacred task in awe-struck reverential fear. At length it was resolved, as an expression of the committee's deep humility, that the youngest member should first make the attempt. He consented; but begged that the brethren first unite with him in prayer for divine enlightenment. Then in slow and solemn accents he thus began his prayer:—"O God, thou art a spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangable, in thy being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth." When he ceased, the first sentence of his prayer was immediately written down and adopted, as the most perfect answer that could be conceived; as, indeed, in a very sacred sense, God's own answer, descriptive of himself. Who, then, was the youngest member of the committee? When we compare the birth-dates of the respective members of the committee, we find that George Gillespie was the youngest by more than a dozen years. We may, therefore, safely conclude, that George Gillespie was the man who was thus guided to frame this marvelous answer. [Presb. Armory.

CONSTANT MIRACLES.

There is an eastern story, of a boy having challenged his teacher to prove to him the existence of a God by working a miracle. The teacher, who was a priest, procured a large vessel filled with earth, in which he deposited a kernel, in the boy's presence, and bade him pay attention. In the place where the kernel was put, a green shoot soon appeared, the shoot became a stem, the stem put forth leaves and branches, which soon spread over the whole apartment. It then budded with blossoms, which, dropping off, left golden fruits in their place, and in the short space of an hour there appeared a noble tree in the place of the little seed. The youth, overcome with amazement, exclaimed, 'Now I know there is a God, for I have seen his power!' The priest smiled at him, and said, 'Simple child, do you only now believe? Does not what you have just seen take place in innumerable instances, year after year, only by a slower process? But is it the less marvelous on that account?'

"Now we, my friends, are but too often like such simple children. Suppose, at rising in the morning, we found a loaf added to our stores, which we could be certain that neither we nor any human being had put there, we should then have no difficulty in saying that the Lord had sent it. Yet we actually find such a loaf every morning added to our provisions, and it is equally plain that God has been the bearer; but because he has sent it in a less direct and extraordinary manner, namely, by strengthening our own powers, and blessing our labor to obtain it, and because this is the ordinary case, and what is taking place all the world over, therefore—how unreasonable such a therefore may be—we find it difficult to realize in it his goodness, his providence, and himself. And let me tell you, that supposing he were to manifest himself in any wondrous manner, so as to compel us to exclaim, 'This is indeed a marvelous interposition of God;' yet, let any such manifestation only become continual, and it will be no longer accounted marvelous; yea, it will be well if it do not cease to be regarded even as Divine. The manna falls once or twice in the wilderness, and it is wondrous to the eyes of all, and the Lord God is praised. But if it falls every day, its coming is a matter of course; and men learn to contemplate it as a natural event; they behold the manna, but not the hand that sends it. Water is produced miraculously from the rock; and if it be succeeded by heat and drought, men learn to award to God the glory. But the smitten rock in the wilderness virtually follows the Israelitish host; its streams attend them in their daily course; they have no lack of water; and what is the consequence? They are ungrateful; and so are we. God is hourly performing miracles for his people; but in order to learn this, it is good for us sometimes to undergo privations." [Dr. Krummacher.

THE HUGUENOT'S PUZZLE.

No doctrine that has ever been broached in the world, could lead to greater and more supremely ridiculous absurdities, than that of transubstantiation, even as treated in the monkish writers, who are full of stories which are too satirically disgusting to repeat at the present day; what, therefore, must they be in the hands of the witty scoffer? They become matters of scornful jest between the reformer and the Catholic, even in the daily intercourse of life. We may quote an example which is said to have occurred in a town of France, at the time of the earlier religious troubles in that country. It was the custom among the zealous Catholics, when the consecrated host was carried to or from church in procession, to bare their heads, fall on their knees, and worship it as they passed. One day two such processions issued at the same moment, from the churches on the opposite sides of the street, as a man of some weight by his station and learning, hated by the Catholics as an obstinate and able leader of the Huguenots, came by. The fearless reformer kept his upright position, with his hat on his head. The leader of one of the processions, a violent and persecuting priest, approached him fiercely, and said, "Impious man, why dost thou not fall down and worship thy Creator—the God whom we carry?" The Huguenot looked for a moment at the priest, and the two processions, and then deliberately inquired, "Which of the two?" The priest was utterly confounded by this unexpected question, rejoined his procession without replying, and continued his way.

'THE FLOATING POPULATION.'—Four years ago, says the Boston Recorder, a man was passing one of the 'plebeian' churches of this city on the Sabbath, when one of the deacons of said church accosted him, and asked him to go in and take a seat. The stranger declined pointing to his coarse and worn-out clothes, and saying that he was not fit, and had not been at meeting on the Sabbath for several years. 'No matter for that,' said the deacon, 'there is room enough, go in and sit down among the congregation, and nobody will notice your clothes.' He went in, and heard the preaching. He was from that time a regular attendant in that house of worship, was soon converted, and for three years past he has paid forty dollars a year for the support of that gospel which has been a savor of life to his soul. Let all the deacons, and ministers, and members of our churches remember, that the floating people are worth saving, and that he is Christ-like who makes suitable efforts to save them.

SPIRITUAL DYSPEPSIA.—This is in some places a prevailing disease. Allow me in a word to point out its cause, signs, and remedy. It is caused by a want of active spiritual exercise adequate to digest the amount of instruction received. Those afflicted by it listen to a great deal of preaching, but they do not obey. They are hearers of the word, and not doers. It is indicated by great fastidiousness of appetite. They can eat nothing unless it is that which is prepared solely to gratify the palate. Every dish must be of the nicest kind, or their stomachs nauseate it. Every sermon must be as spruce, as neat, as beautiful, as the choicest words or the flowers of rhetoric can possibly make it, or it disgusts them. The remedy, as well as the preservative is, to eat plain food, and go to work. Be content to have plain preaching, and practice what you hear, "being doers of the word, and not hearers only." [Morn. Star.

EMOTION AND FAITH.—There are two clases of Christians—those who live chiefly by emotion, and those who live chiefly by faith. The first class, those who live chiefly by emotion, remind one of ships that move by the outward impulses of wind operating upon sails. They are often at a dead calm, often out of their course, and sometimes driven back. And it is only when the winds are fair and powerful that they move onward with rapidity. The other class, those who live chiefly by faith, remind one of the magnificent steamers which cross the Atlantic, which are moved by an interior and permanent principle, and which, setting at defiance all obstacles, advance steadily and swiftly to their destination, through calm and storm, through cold and sunshine. [Upham.

Somebody has said, "What an inextricable confusion must the world have been in, but for the variety which we find in the face and handwriting of men! No security of person, of possession; no justice between men; no distinction between good and bad, friends and foes, father and child, husband and wife, male and female. All would have been exposed to malice, fraud, forgery, and lust. But now, every man's face can distinguish him in the light, his voice in the dark, and his writings can speak for him, though absent, and be his witness to all generations. Did all this happen by chance?"

The Sabbath Recorder.

York, December 24, 1846.

THE SUPPOSED LIMITATION OF THE SABBATH TO THE NATION OF ISRAEL.

On Sunday evening last Mr. Brown delivered the fourth of his series of lectures on the Sabbath. He commenced by remarking, that some supposed the sabbatic institution to have been designed for the Israelites only. He admitted that it had never, before the transaction at Mount Sinai, been given to any people precisely in the same form, in which it was given to the Israelites then. It was then written upon a tablet of stone, and that form of engrossing it may have been designed only for that nation. But he was not willing to admit, that the duty itself of keeping the Sabbath devolved upon none but Jews. On the contrary, he maintained, that it concerned the whole race of mankind.

To establish this doctrine he referred, first, to the nature of the Institution as developed in the fourth commandment. It was designed to commemorate the work of creation; and were Israelites the only people that were interested in that work? Jehovah was the Maker not only of the Israelites, but of all men—not only of the land of Canaan, in which they dwelt, but of the whole earth. There was, therefore, the same reason why the whole world of mankind should observe the Sabbath, as there was for the Israelites to observe it. In carrying out this idea Mr. B. remarked, that whatever duties devolved upon the children of Israel, devolved also upon all others, so far as the same reasons would apply. This is the way we reason about all duties, even those specified in the New Testament. If, for example, we find a duty enjoined directly upon the church at Corinth, we do not limit its application to that church, but we suppose it to be binding upon all other churches in all parts of the world, so far as the reasons for the duty may be the same. Sabbath-keeping was a duty grounded on a reason which concerns all men alike; yet, contrary to the principles of interpretation adopted in every other case, it was supposed by some to have been intended for a very small fraction of the human race.

The lecturer then proceeded to consider Deut. 5: 15—a text much on to prove, that the Sabbath was meant for none but Israelites. He said that the text, so far from proving the exclusive limitation of the Sabbath to the Israelites, merely proved that there might be two reasons for doing the same thing. The redemption of that nation from Egyptian bondage was one of the reasons, why they were bound to regard the Sabbath, and it was a reason which concerned no other people. If no other reason for the Institution had been given, we should never think of urging it upon Gentiles. But inasmuch as there was another reason of a general nature, it was fair to conclude that the Sabbath was designed for all.

Ex. 31: 13—17, was then brought under review where God says of the Sabbath, "it is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever." It was called a "sign" for a reason which could not but be applicable to all of every nation, who might become the worshipers of Jehovah. To the Jews it was a sign, that the God who sanctified them was—not one of the false gods of the heathen, by whom they were surrounded, but—the Maker of all things. By receiving and keeping the Sabbath the Jews declared in a public manner, that they were not Idolaters, nor Atheists. The same God, that once sanctified the Jews to be his people, has now sanctified the Gentiles. It is just as important, that converted Gentiles should be distinguished from Idolaters and Atheists, as it was that the Jews should. Since the Sabbath is, in its own nature, exactly adapted to mark the distinction, it becomes a sign between God and them, just as it was between God and the Israelites. Those that are afraid that such a sign will mark them as "Judaizers," had better take care, that they do not, in their zeal to escape Judaism, deny one of the very first items of the Christian faith; for so far from its being anti-evangelical to raise up the mind to the great work of creation, it is "through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God." Heb. 11: 3. Christianity, so far from being opposed to a mode of expressing our faith, which recognizes the wisdom, and power, and goodness, displayed in the work of creation, encourages it.

The lecturer then remarked, that although the fourth commandment is itself sufficient to prove, that the Sabbath concerns all men, and not the Israelites alone, yet there was another argument of great weight; viz., that before there were any Jews in existence, before man had sinned, and while he was yet in Eden, the Sabbath was instituted. Gen. 2: 2, 3, proved this. God, immediately after he had finished his works, "blessed the seventh day and sanctified it." But even this passage had been wrested from its proper meaning, and the strange ground taken that man did not actually receive and enter upon the sabbatic rest then, nor until more than two thousand years afterwards—that Moses, in recording the history of creation, means merely to say, that this [the seventh] is the day, which God at Mount Sinai blessed and sanctified, because two thousand years before he had rested upon it from all his works!

To confute this notion the lecturer appealed to the language of Paul. In the 4th chap. of Heb. Paul urges his brethren to labor to enter into a rest, into which they had not yet entered, by an argument which would have no force at all, unless the Sabbath had actually been instituted at the finishing of creation. He urges it by showing that the same duty had been urged by David more than a thousand years before. The very language which David used to enforce the duty then, Paul uses to enforce the duty now. David said, in the 95th Psalm, "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hears." "So I swear in my wrath, they shall not enter into my rest." v. 7—11. But in order to show just what David meant by that rest, he makes reference to two other rests. The one was that given to the Israelites in the land of Canaan; the other, the sabbatic rest. Now he argues, that David could not have meant either of these, inasmuch as he was urging them to labor after some rest yet future. He could not have meant the rest in Canaan; for it was after they had received that, that he says "To-day if ye will hear his voice," &c.—which he could not have said with any propriety, if Joshua had given them the rest he was speaking of. v. 8. Still less could he have meant the sabbatic rest, for that they had received as long ago as the foundation of the world. v. 3. He must, therefore, have meant the heavenly rest.

Such is Paul's reasoning upon this passage in David. But his reasoning seems to be without point, and altogether wanting in propriety, if the Sabbath was not actually instituted from the foundation of the world, why, otherwise, does he mention the foundation of the world at all? He has only to allude to the giving of the fourth commandment upon Sinai, or at most to the falling of the manna in the wilderness, (Ex. 16,) if the Sabbath were not instituted till then. But as if the Holy Ghost meant, that we should have an unanswerable argument against those who take this strange ground, he orders Paul to go back to the very foundation of the world.

After bringing under review the argument founded upon the penalty of death, by which the Sabbath was enforce under the Old Dispensation, and showing that this no more proved it a Jewish Institution, then it proved almost all the other precepts of the Declogue to have been Jewish Institutions; and after having insisted upon our Saviour's declaration, that "the Sabbath was made for man"—the speaker asks, what business have Christians with the term "Jewish Sabbath?" It is neither a Bible term, nor a Bible idea, It was but little used, until, the idea of calling the first day of the week the Sabbath originated with the Puritans. Then, to distinguish it from the Sabbath of the Bible, the latter was nicknamed Jewish Sabbath; the former, with great show of sanctity, was baptized Christian Sabbath.

Mr. Brown intends to prosecute this part of his subject still farther next Sunday evening. The supposed repeal of the weekly Sabbath will then be treated more fully. The foregoing is but a mere outline of the lecture. Those, who wish to hear the views of Sabbath-keepers stated more in detail, would do well to attend, and judge for themselves. Five more lectures remain to complete the course; and it is not yet too late to learn something of the strength of the argument in favor of an institution, which almost every one has agreed to despise. Seats are free. Hour of commencing, 7 1-2 P. M.

THE SABBATH IN PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The following paragraph is taken from a letter of the Rhode Island Correspondent of the New York Baptist Register:—

> "The Sabbath is receiving some attention among us; not the observance of it only, but the day to be observed. A few months since the Rhode Island Sabbath Union issued a circular, calling on the good people of R. I., or rather the people good and bad, to secure a better observance of the Sabbath. The circular was commented on by the Sabbath Recorder, a paper conducted by the Seventh-day Baptists, and subsequently replied to by a committee appointed by that denomination. Lately a meeting of Sunday-school teachers was held in Providence, where, among other questions the following was discussed:—'Is there sufficient in the New Testament to prove the first day of the week, the Sabbath?' The time would not allow arguments sufficient on both sides; the meeting was adjourned to meet in the lecture room of the 1st Baptist church, the third Monday evening in December, to renew this discussion. Friends of the seventh-day Sabbath are invited to be present and advocate their views. It is said that Rev. Dr. Cleveland, of the Congregational church, and Rev. Mr. Granger, of the Baptist, are to take a prominent part in the discussion—of course in favor of the first day Sabbath."

A MELANCHOLY DECREASE.—The New York Baptist Register says that, according to the statement of the number of members of the Baptist denomination in this State, given in the table of Associations appended to the annual report of the Convention Board, it appears that the present aggregate is 89,292. Some two years ago the aggregate was put at 98,000, and rising, showing at this time a melancholy falling off. It would be a matter of lamentation did we remain in statu quo, but how much greater the occasion for sorrow when we see such a decrease; it surely ought to bring all down in the dust before the Mercy Seat, with the earnest entreaty, "Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thy heritage to reproach!"

APOLOGY.—The editor has been absent from the city for a few days. This will account for the non-appearance of the list of letters and receipts, and also for non-attendance to the various letters which have reached the office since Thursday last.

EQUALITY OF RELIGIOUS RIGHTS.

Every argument tending to elucidate and establish the important question of equal religious privileges, and every suggestion to remove the ban under which we, as a denomination, suffer, in this land of vaunted liberty and equality, is deeply interesting to the friends of religious freedom, at all times, and particularly so to the persecuted for conscience sake, at present, when they contemplate making another effort for redress of their grievances. Opposed, as I am, to beg for what belongs to me as an inherent and unalienable right, from any man, or set of men, still, should our friends, the Sabbath-keepers, go to Legislative Halls again, with an application for the restoration of their rights, I trust that they will no longer ask for exemptions, which have been so frequently denied, but go on the broad principle of right, and demand equality—decided and unrestricted equality—in privileges and immunities, with all the other members of the republican family, and nothing short of it.

Equality of rights and privileges is the fundamental principle of our republican fabric. Destroy it, and we are no longer a Democracy, but a nation of privileged orders. Our glorious Constitution disclaims all distictions of civil and religious privileges among the citizens of the Union, and denies any exclusive rights and immunities, to any privileged class or order, or any preference whatever to be given to any religious sect or establishment of religion in respect to time or form of worship. Yet it is unblushingly assumed, and assumed with an effrontery as audacious as it is inimical to the rights of their compeers, to coerce them into obedience and support of the usurpation, whether the usurpation be that of an individual or a body of men, actuated and controlled by ecclesiastical dominations.

Aside from the ridiculous absurdity of the pretension of forcing independent freemen to relinquish their charter-privileges, and succumb to arbitrary power in sanctifying a day that they do not regard as holy-time, it is preposterous to attempt it, when the most strenuous advocates for it do not, themselves, strictly comply with its requisitions—do not truly respect and sanctify the day in the spirit and to the purpose of the law. Sabbath-keepers, however sincere in their religious sentiments, and however rigid in sanctifying the seventh day unto the Lord, which the Scriptures declare is "the Sabbath of the Lord," are prohibited from engaging in any secular or commercial transactions on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, while all the ministers of the land make merchandize of their office, with impunity, in performing the marriage ceremony, and taking fees for it, on that day. Is not performing civil service and taking pay for it on first day, trading, to all intents and purposes? I say nothing of receiving pay for the regular discharge of their sacerdotal functions on Sunday; but this making money by marrying folks, and pocketing it too, on that day, is no better in the abstract, than trading in any other species of traffic. Yet it is tolerated in their case, and connived at by the law, while men, quite as honest, who make their living by the sweat of their brow, are mulcted in fines and penalties for exercising a no less questionable right.

Where, in the Scriptures, is it made the duty of ministers to marry folks? Where are they authorized, by precept or example, to take money for it, on any occasion, much less on the day they regard as the Sabbath? Where does the Constitution, or any law of the land, make the ministers of the Gospel a privileged class, to transact civil matters, ad libitum, and take fees for labor performed on first day, while any acts performed for gain, by others, are penal, and their transactions declared null and void? If all civil transactions entered upon on first day are null and void, so all marriages consummated on that day are equally illegal, for the highest courts of the land have declared marriage to be a civil contract, and if trading and receiving pay for labor on goods on that day, is penal, the minister who marries and takes fees on Sunday is equally criminal.

Why, in justice and common-sense, is not a hardy son of the soil, who toils diligently six days of the week, tilling the ground, and devotes the seventh day, faithfully and conscientiously, to the Lord, "according to the commandment," entitled to dispose to his needy neighbor, whose occupation carries him from his home the whole week, and returning late on Saturday night, calls on him on Sunday morning for a bushel of potatoes and some flour to keep his family during his absence the ensuing week, without subjecting himself to fines and vexatious prosecution? Why, I ask, cannot he sell the fruit of his industry, when he does not violate any injunction of his Maker, or interfere with the rights of his Pharisaical oppressor in the act, while the minister, who should be an ensample to the flock, violates the spirit of the statute in performing extra clerical service, for fees and emoluments? No reasonable man can admit any difference in the two transactions—they are both civil contracts—both money-making traffic; yet the one is tolerated and the other declared penal.

Again, the apothecary keeps open shop on Sunday, and sells, with impunity, not only medicines of immediate and urgent necessity, but traffics in drugs, perfumery, and refreshments; keeping, in fact, no day to the Lord. Yet he is tolerated, while the conscientious observer of the seventh day is denied the like privilege. Is this republicanism? Is this justice? Is this equality of rights? Further, the tavern-keeper, who makes no distinction of days in his business, and gives no day to the Lord, is tolerated and protected, without any plea whatever of any necessity in the case, or any apology for the distinction of privilege; for the very law which interdicts the Sabbath-keeper from trading on Sunday, prohibits traveling on that day; therefore there can be no necessity for inns to be kept open to accommodate the public. Yet whatever be the necessity of the necessitous, a Sabbath-keeper cannot dispose to his needy neighbor that which is essential to the preservation of life, without becoming amenable to that unequal, iniquitous law. Thus men who regard no day, can traffic in that which may even destroy the soul, while the conscientious Sabbath-keeper is denied the disposal of the staff of life. The barber plies his razor and curling tongs, and retails segars and cavendish, openly and freely; and the cake-house is accessible, at all hours, from sun-rise till mid-night, to dispense, for ready cash, gingerbread and small-beer. And who says any thing against these infractions of the law?—for if they are not exonerated by the law, still the exemption obtains in the administration of the law—they are winked at—they pass unheeded; neither do I wish to interfere with them, for I do not regard them as infringing on holy-time, but only now allude to them to show the inequality of privileges in the same republican family; and I should be the very last person to make any complaint that would tend in the least to inflict more stringent measures, to sanctify a day I do not regard as possessing any peculiar sacredness. I have no sympathy with any coercion laws, to enforce any day as a Sabbath, or to enforce any religious duty, believing that their inherent truth, loveliness, and perfection, are their best recommendation to acceptance, and the surest incentive to their observance. I would be as much opposed to enforcing, by law, the observance of the seventh day, as I am to statutes to sanctify the first day. That is an affair with which human legislation has nothing to do. Coercion, by the secular power, to secure religious obedience, is truly a tyrant's argument, and the most puerile and degrading commentary on God's moral law; for not any thing can detract so much from the divine origin and authority of religious institutions, as the vain attempts of meddling man to mend his Maker's work. We leave such matters entirely to the consciences of men and their God. The Lord having done all that is needful in the case, the issue is between man and his Maker—not between man and man, party and party, sect and sect, but between man and the "Lord of the Sabbath"—between man and the written Word, which is to be his Judge.

Once more—the milkman—a member of the church—who professes to sanctify the first day as the Sabbath, attends the morning service, partakes of the holy communion, and exhorts in the prayer-meeting in the afternoon; then jumps into his milk-cart and flies, Jehu-like, through the town, with clattering bell in hand, much to the annoyance of other congregations assembled for worship, selling his milk and taking money for it with perfect impunity; forsooth, he prefers to regard the day, and is tolerated; while it is not permitted to a Sabbath-keeper to dispose, on that day, of the least article, milk, or any thing else, not even on his retired premises. What justice or what republicanism is there in such partial laws? These things I know to be practiced weekly, not only in large cities, but in quiet country villages. It is an insult upon the name of republicanism, to tolerate and sustain such invidious distinctions among citizens of the same republic; it is tyranny, foul tyranny, to force peaceable, conscientious citizens, who faithfully and religiously sanctify the seventh day to the Lord—to require them to yield obedience to another day, or interfere with them in the ordinary pursuits of life to obtain a livelihood for their families on other days.

Are we ready to recognize this usurpation, and succumb to this tyranny, by appealing to the sympathies of our self-constituted masters, and praying for the small favor of limited exemption? I, for one, am not; and I trust that no Sabbath-keeper will be found, so derelict to duty, to God and his country, as to compound for any thing short of perfect equality, in all rights and privileges.

The main object of Sabbath-keepers, if I estimate the feelings and sentiments of our people correctly, is to have our equal rights, as American citizens, to all civil and religious privileges, recognized by the removal of restrictions put upon us for the transaction of regular business on first day, and that we may enjoy the same immunities on that day that the observers of first day do on seventh day—that we no longer be constrained to yield two-sevenths of our time, while others are only required to rest one-seventh; that having religiously observed the seventh day to the Lord, we may have full liberty to employ all the remainder of the week in the pursuits of life, unmolested.

This we claim as an indefeasible right, no power to legislate or interfere in any respect with the conscientious belief or practice of the humblest member of the compact having ever been delegated to the body politic, to determine any distinction between days, or to exercise any ecclesiastical control over the citizens of the Republic. With the writer, it is the principle, and the principle alone, for which he is contending. As respects himself, he cares not a farthing for the law and all its penalties. It interferes not in the least with him, or any of his pursuits. But he does feel concerned for the rights of others, and for the honor of his beloved country. He feels degraded that he has the name of being a freeman, in a free country, and yet has not the liberty to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience, on the day of the Lord's own appointing, and to employ the other six days of the week in the pursuit of happiness, as other citizens do, without having an odious law hanging over him, and menacing him to bow to the commandments of men.

While that outrage on the rights of a respectable body of citizens of the State remains on the statute book, though we have the name of being freemen, and our country the name of being a free country, yet it is but a name; and if we suffer ourselves quietly to be robbed of our heaven-born liberty, we are veritable slaves, not worthy the name of freemen. That there are many bigots who do not understand the true principles of genuine liberty, is not surprising to us; but that those who ought to be better informed should require a fellow compeer to succumb to their own prejudices and predilections, in religion as well as in politics, is passing strange; yet it is evidently seen and felt in the unrelenting pertinacity they exhibit in opposing our claims for redress, and in their unrelaxed efforts to coerce all others into the observance of the day they choose to sanctify and impose.

Who made them our masters and keepers? Not the fundamental law of the land, nor any known principle of republicanism. The infatuation, for it is nothing less than blind infatuation, is the offspring of Ignorance and Bigotry. Believing that the Constitution of the Union secures, most unequivocally, equal rights and religious privileges to all classes of citizens of the Republic, I shall continue to regard all laws which abridge religious freedom, as usurpations of power, not warranted by the Charter of our Liberties, and at direct variance with vested rights which no state government has any authority to impair—shall regard them as a nullity, until tested at the proper tribunal. In the mean time, I shall not debase a freeman's high prerogative, and a patriot's sense of duty, by stooping to beg the repeal of such an iniquitous usurpation; for that would imply power to grant and withhold. I do not beg it as a gift; I demand it as a right. No man, no body of men, can grant it; it belongs to me in virtue of my citizenship; it is my birthright! Yet while my brethren may view the matter differently, and have determined to make another appeal to the sense of justice of our Legislators, I shall be sorry to find them ask for less than perfect freedom and equality in all privileges and immunities enjoyed by other denominations. To ask for nothing less than a bill of Equal Rights, something like the one presented to the Legislature of New Jersey last winter, amended so as to declare distinctly its full purport, and remove all jealous misapprehensions. Somewhat after the following form:—

An Act to Restore Religious Rights:

Whereas, the Constitution of the State of New Jersey guarantees equal rights and religious privileges to all classes, sects, and denominations of citizens of the Commonwealth; and whereas the law, entitled "An Act for the suppression of Vice and Immorality," passed March 4, A. D. 1798, and re-enacted under the revised code, at the last session of the Legislature, impairs the Constitutional rights of a highly-respectable class of citizens of the State—an irreproachable body of professing Christians—and is alike repugnant to the genius of our institutions and the principles of our government; therefore—

Be it enacted, That every inhabitant of this State who religiously observes the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, as the Sabbath, shall enjoy the same religious privileges and immunities on said seventh-day that the observers of the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, enjoy on that day. And be it further enacted, that all such observers of the seventh day, shall be protected to the same extent, in their ordinary avocations of life, on the first day of the week, that the observers of first day are on seventh day, any laws to the contrary notwithstanding; provided always, that not any thing in this act shall be so construed as to restrain any observer of first day from laboring on seventh day.

This rough outline, thrown into proper legal phraseology, into which I have not been particular to mould it, will place Sabbath-keepers on a perfect equality with others. Any thing short of this, would be derogatory to us as freemen, and destructive to us as a denomination.

BORDENTOWN, N. J. Dec. 11, 1846.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE AND SLAVERY.—At the great meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, in August last, the organization of several branches in the different countries was recommended. The branch for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland has been organized. The subject of slavery came up at the first meeting, and was disposed of by the passage of this resolution:—"That whereas the Provisional Committee, during its session at Birmingham, resolved that no slaveholder should be invited to attend the meeting which was to be held in London for the formation of the Evangelical Alliance; and whereas, it is known that some British subjects are holders of slaves; the British Organization, in pursuance of the course adopted by the Provisional Committee, and upon on mature deliberation of the whole case, but without pronouncing any judgment on the personal Christianity of slaveholders, agrees to declare that no holder of a slave shall be eligible to its membership."

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The SENATE was in session but four days last week. On Monday the report of the Treasury Department, showing the number of vessels employed in the coasting trade, together with the annual report on Commerce and Navigation; and also the report of the State Department on its expenditures for the year, was presented by the Vice President. Mr. Crittenden presented a petition for paying $65,000 of bonds issued by Texas. Mr. Benton offered a resolution instructing the Military Committee to inquire into the expediency of allowing three months' extra pay to officers and soldiers, regulars and volunteers, and placing them on the same footing with the Navy in regard to prize money. On motion of Mr. Sevier, the Senate proceeded to ballot for Standing Committees, and elected Mr. Bagby Chairman of Indian Affairs; Mr. Pennybacker of Claims; Mr. Johnson, La., of Pensions; Mr. Turney of Retrenchments, and Mr. Bright of Public Buildings. Tuesday a report was presented from the Secretary of the Treasury on the expediency of requiring vessels navigating Delaware Bay to carry lights in the night time. Ordered printed. Mr. Semple introduced a bill providing for the extension of the National Road to Alton, Ill. Also a bill to grant public lands to complete the Illinois and Michigan Canal. Wednesday nothing of importance. Friday met and adjourned to Monday.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES on Monday the Speaker announced the Standing Committees. The changes in the Chairman, are: Mr. Jos. Vance of Ohio, Committee on Manufactures, in the place of John Q. Adams; Jas. McDowell, Va., on the District of Columbia, in place of R. M. T. Hunter; James Faran, on Public Buildings and Grounds, in place of Orlando Ficklin. Mr. Bowden, of Alabama, announced the death of Felix G. McConnell, in a few appropriate remarks, and after passing the customary resolutions to wear crape thirty days, in taken of respect for the memory of the deceased, the House adjourned. On Tuesday, the first business in order was the resolution offered by Garret Davis, calling on the President to furnish copies of instructions to Generals and Commodores relative to civil Governments in conquered territories. The report from the State Department, on the U. S. Consular system was presented, and 2,500 extra copies ordered printed. A joint resolution, offered by Mr. Hopkins, was adopted, providing for the election of Chaplains from different religious denominations. Reports were received from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and the Commissioner of Pensions. Friday, Mr. Boyd reported a bill to increase the pay of volunteers and regulars engaged in the Mexican war $2 per month from the commencement of the war, and to grant 160 acres of land to all of both classes serving to the end of the war. The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole. The House refused to take it up to-day. Mr. McKay remarking, that it was too important a bill for hasty action. A large number of private bills were passed.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

The New Orleans Picaynne of Dec. 10, says:—We received yesterday papers from the city of Mexico to the 17th of November. One of the first things we notice in the papers is a correspondence between Gen. Taylor and Santa Anna in relation to the termination of the armistice. Out of this correspondence proceeded the release of seven American prisoners who were with the Mexican army at San Luis. Santa Anna's letters breathe war so long as the Mexican soil shall be polluted by the foot of a single American in arms. Such too, is the tone of the papers before us, though we think their denunciations are somewhat less violent than they were a short while ago. The official journal says the Executive is anxious for the assembling of Congress, even before the day fixed by law, in consequence of the urgent nature of the subjects to be brought before it. As first in importance are enumerated "the events of the war with the United States of the north, the necessity of great resources to sustain it, and to some other points relative to this important business." This is the nearest allusion which we see to the offers of our Government to negotiate for peace. We see no indications that Gen. Almonte will leave the War Department, as reported at the north. In an urgent appeal to the new Congress made from San Luis, the deputies are entreated to entrust Santa Anna with dictatorial powers for the prosecution of the war. There is nothing definite in relation to the army concentrated at San Luis; nor do we find any mention whatever of the dissensions which are reported by way of Tampico, to exist in Santa Anna's ranks. We find a paragraph indicating that the American army under Gen. Taylor might be expected from the north by way of Saltillo, about the 21st of Nov., threatning San Luis. It will receive a terrible thrashing, says the editor, as the reward of its temerity.

TWO MURDERS.—From Le Messager, published at Bringier, parish of St. James, La., we learn that Mr. Emile Dichary, of that parish, was killed on the 25th inst., by two runaway slaves, a man and his wife. Mr. Dichary was out hunting when he encountered the two runaways. He attempted to arrest them, when the man advanced upon him in a menacing manner. Mr. Dichary thereupon took aim at him, intending to shoot him, but both barrels of his gun missed fire. The negro then rushed upon him and wounded him with a knife. Mr. Dichary attempted to regain his horse which he had left in the edge of the woods, but the negress, seizing the gun which he dropped, rushed upon him and beat him over the head with it. The two blacks were too much for him, and beat him till they supposed him dead. After some moments he revived, succeeded in mounting his horse, and reached the plantation of Mr. Jacob. He there told the incidents of the affair, and died in a few hours. The slaves were pursued, and after an obstinate resistance the negro was killed. Before he fell he shot two balls through the hat of his master, Mr. Colcomb. The woman was taken.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Cambria arrived at Boston Wednesday, the 16th inst. The news which she brings is not of great interest to the general reader; the following is a summary of the most important:—

There had been a great excitement in the cotton market, with a slight advance in price. Indian corn was at 56s. to 58s. per quarter. American flour had advanced 1s. a bbl. in Liverpool, closing the 3d inst. with a downward tendency.

The official tables of the trade of the country show that, as regards live animals, the importation this year has exceeded that of last year by more than four times. In provisions the increase this year over the last is 100 per cent.

In the month of September there was the largest delivery of sugar on record, an excess of 160,000 cwts. beyond the corresponding period of last year.

The revenue authorities have permitted iron wood, a species of cedar or mahogany, the produce of America, to be admitted free.

The New York packet ship Victoria, on her recent arrival in London, brought as part of her cargo 250 bales of American hops, which excited some attention in the city of London.

The Great Britain is still on the rock, and the underwriters seem to entertain very little hope of bringing her away from the scene of her disaster. Her hull is yet entire and to the eye there is little or no alteration preceptible.

The American ship Allen from New York was lost on the afternoon of the 20th Nov., while beating up the English Channel. She was driven ashore on the French coast. The captain and ten of the crew perished.

The Spanish papers call on France and England to establish a monarchy in Mexico, to save that country from falling into the American Union.

M. Leverrier, the discoverer of the new planet, is appointed to the new chair of Mathematics appointed to Astronomy in France.

The board of ordnance has rejected the proposal for the use of Professor Schoubein's gun-cotton in the British army.

Fresh troubles have broken out in India, and the British are preparing for new conquests.

Poland is no more! The Republic of Cracow has been obliterated by Russia, Austria, and Prussia, Thus capping the climax of this monstrous iniquity, by blotting out the last remaining vestige of the once great Polish nation—the last narrow strip of land that remained of poor Poland—the last and only spot on which a Pole dare call himself a Pole.

It would appear by private letters from Vienna that the incorporation of Cracow with Austria did not take place without a strong opposition on the part of several members of the Cabinet. Count Kollowrath, finding himself in a minority on that important question, had tentered his resignation, with the firm determina tion to retire from public life. That resolution had produced the greatest sensation at Vienna.

A letter from the Prussian capital, dated Nov. 16, says:—"The news of the occupation of Cracow, which has been circulated in this city, has produced the livliest sensation throughout the entire population, and especially among the middle classes. It is said that the Government, in order to modify the effect of this act, proposes calling together the States General in the month of February. It is the first time of the States being convoked, and it is expected that when 500 representatives shall be assembled together, they will not separate without giving the country a constitution."

Lord Palmerston has dispatched the protest of the British Government against the occupation of Cracow, to Lord Ponsonby at Vienna. In the document Lord Palmerston argues on the assumption that the usurpation of Cracow is as yet but a project, and he exerts himself to demonstrate the mischief (inconvenience) of such a measure.

The regular employment now so generally given to the peasantry, in Ireland, together with the reduction in the prices of provisions, has already produced a sensible improvement in the condition of the people. Still there remains much distress to be relieved. The accounts from the country districts are extremely unfavorable, particularly from the south and west, where there is no doubt the prevalence of distress affords a pretext for the wholesale system of plunder and outrage, which for some time past, renders it unsafe for the peaceable disposed to pursue their usual avocations, even in the broad glare of day.

Mr. Newman arrived at Rome on the 29th ult., and was received by his holiness the Pope and the higher clergy with every mark of distinction and regard. It is expected that Mr. Newman will receive the sacred orders at Rome.

Advices from the eastern part of Asia Minor, of the 15th ult. state that the cholera had now positively advanced and spread throughout all that province. The mortality had been very severe, but those who adopt the exaggerated [illegible]a of its having amounted to 40,000 or 50,000, are certainly at a great distance from the mark. The latest intelligence certainly mentions the presence of that malady at Mossoul, Orfa, Diarbekir, Aleppo, Damascus, &c. From a letter of recent date from Teheran, it appears that from the 1st to the 7th ult. the mortality was so great that there was no time for the decent burial of the dead; they were brought out of the city in loads, to be thrown into large pits dug for that purpose. In Kermanshah, the ovens and shops were closed, the butchers and bakers refusing to supply the city with provisions, and most families were by this reduced to such a state of famine that there were considerable apprehensions of a general revolt against the government. In other parts of the country the population had fled to the mountains, often abandoning their families, goods and property; and happy is the family indeed that has not lost one of its members. The statistics of the number of deaths in the large cities of Persia, from this disease are as follows: Teheran, 14,000 to 17,000; Kermanshah, 9,000; Ispahan, 7,000; Reschd, 3,000; Hamadan, 3,700; Meded, 2,000; Shiraz, 750. A letter of the 14th, from Tabriz, mentions the breaking out of the cholera; 200 victims fell on the first day of which we have any record. It has also made its appearance in Spain.

ASYLUM FOR AGED AND INDIGENT WOMEN.—There is in the city of New York an excellent institution of this kind. It has just had an anniversary, which the Boston Transcript notices as follows:—

At the present time there are eighty inmates in the Asylum, and these have just celebrated a most happy anniversary, with an address at St. Thomas' Church from the Rev. Dr. Whitehouse. In the course of the address, the Doctor, in depicting the blessedness of such a home for those venerable but poor mothers, contrasted the difference between such a sanctuary from destitution, and the usual abodes of the poor, placed by severe necessity in crowded neighborhoods, and with only a thin partition between the virtuous and the vicious. His remarks are reported in the New York Express. "Instead," said he, "of a constant wearing resistance to all that is passing around—jarred by every sound, offended by filth, blasphemy, drunkenness and misery, where a solitary life is the only means of resisting the offence and contagion—in a home like this, there is repose and confidence. The moral air is healthful and congenial, the moral nature acts in secure expansion, and peace, and progress in what is good are attainable states. Hence this home in many cases effects what neither the home of childhood nor the home of riper years did produce."

A RUM-SELLER INDICTED FOR MANSLAUGHTER.—A rum-seller in New Bedford, as we learn from the Mercury, by the name of John Britnell, lately furnished one of his victims with brandy until he fell sensless to the floor. The helpless man was then dragged into a cellar, where he was laid near a window with neither sash nor shutter, the thermometer being at 17 degrees, and cold water poured upon him. He was then taken from the cellar, with no signs of life about him except breathing, and the rum-seller wishing to close his shop for the night, he was left in an outer room, lying on his face, with his head within fourteen inches of a red-hot stove. On that same spot he was found in the morning dead. He had not stirred. The Jury of Inquest returned the followiug verdict:

"That Philip G. Simmons came to his death by congestion of the brain, caused by the excessive use of brandy, and subsequent exposure to the cold, and of the head to extreme heat, upon the premises of John Britnell, of whom the brandy was obtained, and through whose recklessness the exposure took place.

J. B. CONGDON, Foreman."

Britnell was under arrest on Thursday last, and held to bail in the sum of $1000, on a charge of manslaughter.

A BASE CRIME.—Dr. Paschal B. Brooks, of Manchester, N. H., aged 41, recently deserted a wife and eight children to elope with Mrs. Harriet L. Davis, aged 22, wife of E. D. Davis, a worthy young printer of Manchester. Mr. and Mrs. D. had been married eighteen months, but were childless. The Doctor had abused an intimacy occasioned by the sickness of Mrs. D., on whom he attended. They were discovered in Boston a few days afterward, having changed their hotel several times to avoid a discovery. The Doctor was allowed to run on paying $1,000 to his family and giving $1,000 to Davis, who at first refused but finally accepted it, intending to devote it to the maintenance of his wife if she behaved herself. She went back to New Hampshire, while the Dr. took his winding way Texasward. It was at first intended to send the rascal to State Prison, but Mrs. D. insisted that she would go to prison too if he did. She refused to live with her husband even if he wished it.

VIOLENT GALE IN THE GULF.—The U. S. Revenue Schooner Forward, Nones, at New Orleans, from Tabasco, via. Alvarado and Tampico, reports having left Anton Lizardo on the 27th November. On the 25th ult. experienced a violent norther which has done considerable damage; the wind blew violently for twenty-four hours, and drove from their moorings the following vessels, prizes taken at Tabasco: Steamer Tabascano, schooner Tabasquena, and brig Descrada. The schooner was seen on shore about fifteen miles to the westward of Alvarado; supposed three men who were on board of her were saved. The brig and steamer had not been seen; on board the brig there were six men—no officers. Brig Somers and schooner Morris, late Laura Virginia, frigate Cumberland and prize steamer Petrita rode out the gale with the Forward, and all are safe; officers and crews well.

MACHINE FOR MEASURING VELOCITY OF RAILWAY TRAINS.—Mr. M. Ricardo laid before the late meeting of the British Association a model of his very beautiful machine for registering the velocity of railway trains. The object of it is to furnish the railway companies with a record of the work done. By this means they would be often enabled, in case of any accident, to assign correctly the nature and cause of such accident, and so prevent its re-occurrence. The machine is closed up under the seat of a railway carriage, and when placed there it marks on a strip of paper the speed of the train, the time of its passing every half mile, and the length of every stoppage at a station. It is, in short, a mechanical inspector of trains. He described the apparatus, and stated that it had gone some thousand miles without accident.

FROM CALIFORNIA.—The Washington Telegraphic correspondent of the Philadelphia North American, says: The El Locomodor of Vera Cruz, dated Nov. 18, received in this city, contains an extract from an official dispatch, stating that the people of the City of the Angels, California, on the Pacific, combined with the Indians, had taken several boats belonging o the United States Squadron, and cut the throats of one hundred and fifty soldiers found on board. This doubtful dispatch is dated Mazatlan, Oct. 28th.

The Missouri Expositor describes the newly invented machine called a Wind-awgon, which is to be used with sails and rigging as a ship, for running over the prairies. The machine is simply constructed, and the inventor says he can run up and down, across the plains, overcome a steep with a gentle ascent without difficulty, and will carry freight to Bent's Fort or Santa Fe, at $6 per hundred pounds. A gentleman who rode in the wagon says that with only one sail and a light breeze, it went at the rate of eight miles an hour.

VARIETY.

The Chevalier Don Rocco Martuscelli, the Charge d'Affaires of his Majesty the King of the Two Sicilies, was last week introduced to the President by the Secretary of State. Mr. Martuscelli is the first diplomatic representative ever accredited to the United States by his Sicilian Majesty. He expressed, in strong terms, the friendship felt for this country by his sovereign, and congratulated the President upon the conclusion of the late treaty of commerce between the two nations. The President reciprocated the friendly feeling entertained by his Majesty, and expressed his satisfaction at the conclusion of a treaty which would, he believed, prove alike advantageous to both parties, and would bind the two countries together in bonds of still more intimate friendship.

A letter from J. J. Roberts, Governor of Monrovia, dated October 10th, gives a gratifying account of the condition of the recaptives landed in the Colony of Liberia from the slave ship "Pons." The Governor says that the supplies furnished by the New York Colonization Society, have, in his opinion, been the means of saving the lives of scores of them, and will, no doubt, result in the civilization, and, he sincerely trusts, in the Christianization of hundreds of them who would otherwise, in all probability, have gone off in the country, beyond the reach of the colony and Christian influence, and perhaps have been sold again into slavery.

Mrs. Elizabeth Peters, of Boone County, Indiana, thus notices her absconding husband. Left my bed and board last Fall, thereby rendering my expenses lighter, my legal husband, John Peters, without cause or provocation. All the old maids, and young girls, and widows, of all ages and conditions, are hereby forewarned against harboring or trusting him on my account, as I am determined not to be held accountable for his debts, or more especially for his conduct, because he is a loafer, a drunkard, a gambler, a liar, and a thief.

The Havana Diario publishes the following list of the houses destroyed or injured in and about that city by the terrible hurricane of the 10th and 11th of October: Houses destroyed 1,275, more or less injured 1,038. Of the former 36 were of stone and 1,239 of wood; of the later 224 were of stone and 813 of wood. In the district of Guanabacoa there were ten persons killed and twenty-eight wounded, more or less grieviously. In Tepaste, where there were fifteen coffee plantations, the most of the plant was destroyed with a full third of the sugar cane.

There was a meeting held lately, composed of the most respectable citizens of Indianapolis, Ia., for the purpose of adopting measures for suppressing the vice of gambling in that city. Spirited resolutions were adopted and able addresses delivered, and a committee of thirteen citizens were appointed "for securing the vigilant enforcement of the laws," &c. About $200 were raised for defraying expenses in carrying out the objects of the meeting.

There are now being built at Crandall's ship yard, Bristol, R. I., seven boats, 40 feet long, 12 feet wide and 4 feet 4 inches deep, which are to be finished by the 1st of January. They are probably intended for the transportation of troops, munitions of war, &c. We also learn that there are fourteen other boats of similar dimensions building in Warren and Newport for Government. This does not look like closing the war with Mexico.

The Norwich News gives the number of passengers on board the Atlantic on her last fatal trip at 57—viz: Saved 29, lost 22, missing 6. Of the crew, the same paper states there were 58—viz: Saved 49, lost 6, missing 3. Parts of two bodies found on the island. Making a total of 117, all told.

The news from Mexico shows that country in an awful state of anarchy. Santa Anna has gone back to Mexico, and there are only 16,000 disaffected, half-starved troops at Potosi. Gen. Taylor ought to be there now with 9,000 or 10,000 troops. It is said Herrera will be elected President, and in that event peace will be certain."

An affray occurred at Richmond, Va., on the 14th inst., between Mr. Botts, the Editor of the Southern Standard, and Mr. Lambert, the son of the Mayor of that city. Mr. Botts was slightly wounded after twelve shots were exchanged. The quarrel was occasioned by a newspaper atticle.

The Bermuda Royal Gazette publishes the prospectus of the West India and U. S. Steamboat Company, proposing to establish a semi-monthly line of steamers to ply between this city and the West India Islands. It is intended to have the steamers arrive here so as to connect with the Liverpool Line.

Gov. Brown, of Tennessee, has appointed "the last Sabbath day of the present year as a day of thanksgiving and prayer."

The President's Message was conveyed from Wheeling, Pa., to Columbus, Ohio, (135 miles,) in the short space of six hours and a half.

Ex-Senator Henderson of Mississippi, expresses a very high opinion of the Whitney Railroad and that the entire expense would be reimbursed to the Treasury in less than twenty years, and in the same time add fifty fold to the wealth of the nation. We are anxious to see the subject acted on by Congress, and to know who, in that body, would oppose the enterprise.

The celebrated volcano, which vomited forth lava after the earthquake in Tuscany, is still active; eruptions occur so frequently, that at day the smoke forms a huge pillar. Great rains and inundations have taken place in the districts at the foot of the mountains, causing great loss of life and property.

It is stated in the New Haven papers that the Canal Railroad has been located, that the grading will be commenced this week, and that there is not the least doubt of the speedy completion of the work. The Hartford people will be compelled, in self-defence, to extend a branch to meet this road at Plainville.

On account of the difficulty attending the navigation of the Missouri river, it is proposed to construct a railroad direct from St. Josephs Mo., to some point on the Mississippi.

The barque Canton, a vessel sixty three years old but perfectly sound, was lately wrecked on the Muscle ridge, on the coast of Maine.

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The next Semi-Annual Session of the Central Association will be held with the church in DeRuyter, on the third and fourth days of the week before the first Sabbath in January, (Dec. 29 and 30,) to attend to our Missionary Operations, and to consider the subject of obtaining Legal Protection on the Sabbath for all Sabbath-keepers. It is desirable that the delegates from all the churches come prepared to act efficiently in these matters. Any church or individual desiring to aid any of the benevolent operations of the denomination can now do so through the Executive Board of the Association.

Education Society.

The Education Society of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association will hold a session during the Semi-Annual Meeting of the Association, to be held with the First Church in Alfred on the fourth day of the week before the first Sabbath in January, 1847.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

ELIHU BURRITT, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in ADVANCE.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

THE WEEKLY CHRONOTYPE,

IS published weekly by WHITE, POTTER & WRIGHT, at No 2 Devonshire Street, near State Street, Boston. Terms—$2 a year, in advance. For $5 three copies will be sent to one address. A liberal discount will be made to Agents who pay for a larger number of copies. Edited by

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

This paper is not bound to the creed or cause of any clique, association, party, sect or set of men, but expresses freely the opinions of its editor at the time, and of such contributors as may honor it with their thoughts, or be supposed by the editor to do so. It will be his endeavor to give such a variety and quantity of matter as to meet the wants of every enlightened family, and especially of those which seek more light. He will not only give the daguerreotype likeness of Time as he passes, but will examine every new thing that he meets, and some things that are old, without fear or favor. Where he cannot convince, he will try to be good-natured. Where he cannot satisfy himself of the truth, he will be contented to confess his ignorance. In short, he will endeavor to help forward, in a neighborly way, every thing but Humbug. That he will endeavor to knock down and drag out, even if it should cling to the throne of political power or the horns of the sacred altar.

He will not take an oath never to be wiser. He will not scorn truth, though it may come from an enemy. He will not flatter the poor because he is one of them. He will not hate and abuse the rich because he is not one of them. But he will endeavor to establish a better understanding between the extremes of society—showing both ends that happiness is most likely to be found between them—consisting in a great measure in a mutual endeavor to abolish idleness, disease, poverty and roguery.

With these general purposes, it is the prime object of the editor of this paper to get an honest living.

Miscellaneous.

THE CHINESE.

As every thing relating to this singular people is of interest, especially to those who desire their conversion to Christianity, we copy from the Banner and Pioneer the following plain expositions of common matters, furnished by Rev. I. J. Roberts, who has spent many years as a missionary in that country.

1. What are the Customs of the Chinese?

Ans. This is really so wide a question that I can hardly encompass its branches. They have the custom of building houses, marrying wives or husbands as the case may be, eating, sleeping, walking, talking, worshiping idols, making money, and a hundred other little things, many of which I think will come out under other questions.

2. What is the Chinese Complexion?

Ans. Rather of a copper color, near the complexion of a light mulatto. But their features and hair are quite different from that of the African breed. Their hair is jet black, and very straight, and rather coarse, coarser than ours generally, and their eyes are black. There is no variety with respect to the color of their eyes and hair, as there is with us! Their features are generally comely among the better class, and some of the ladies are quite pretty and fair, but if exposed to the sun will soon become brown.

3. What are their Habits?

Ans. The women are in the habit of binding their feet, and making them small from their infancy. This is looked upon as the indication of a well-bred lady! but one is not esteemed really a lady, and entitled to be exempt from drudgery, without very small feet! And from their efforts to get them very, very small, one would think the smaller the feet, the more lady-like in their own estimation! The men are in the habit of shaving their heads, and having a long tail or cue plaited down their backs near to their ankles, from a little spot of hair left for that purpose about the crown of their heads. This is a universal habit, from the emperor on the throne to the humblest beggar that prowls the streets. One would hardly be esteemed a Chinaman without this long tail!

4. What do they live on; Pork, Beef, Mutton, Poultry, or what?

Ans. They use a great deal of pork. This is a choice dish, if they are able to afford it. One of their principal sacrifices to their gods, is a whole roasted hog, which they are careful to eat themselves, after presenting it to their idol! They all eat beef, mutton, and poultry; eggs, fruit, and indeed every thing that we do, and some things that we do not—for instance, this morning I was passing where they were cleaning a mess of dogs, say four or five, to eat themselves, or sell to others to eat! And it is not uncommon for them to eat both dogs and cats, and rats—good fat rats are considered a delicate dish!

5. Do they sit at the Table and eat with Knives and Forks?

Ans. They have small tables, say from two to three feet square, at which from four to eight persons may sit. Should they have forty persons at dinner, they have many tables of this kind; and divide off to the different tables as it may chance to fall to each one's lot, without much reference to first and last, excepting those at the same table sit down together. They do not use knives and forks; but the food is cut up into small pieces before it comes to the table, and then they use a couple of round straight sticks, called chop-sticks, by foreigners, about six inches long, with their right hand, and bring their bowl to their mouth with the left hand, and dish out of the bowl into their mouths with the two sticks. It takes a stranger some time to get used to this manœuver, so as not to spill his victuals on the floor or in his lap. Were I there, you would ask me if I ever tried it? Yes, I have become rather proficient in the art.

6. Do they ride on Horseback, in Chairs, or go on Foot?

Ans. In the city, and indeed every place, the great majority go on foot; in the streets and elswhere, I perhaps meet one in five hundred riding in a kind of sedan chair—nothing like it in the West—carried on the shoulders of men, two men most generally, but sometimes four. And though there are a few found on horseback, they are very few, not more than one in ten thousand, and that generally a government officer.

7. Do they marry and live with Wives as we do?

Ans. They marry and live with wives, but vary a little from us in some particulars, viz: 1. They are often betrothed several years beforehand. 2. There is no courting about the matter; they take each other for better or worse without a single interview beforehand. 3. They generally employ a go-between, who is to have interviews with both parties, and he makes the whole arrangement between them. 4. The bride is brought to the bridegroom's house in an elegant sedan chair, to be married. She comes crying the first half of the way, according to custom, and rejoicing the balance. All goes by rule here, even how much one must cry, and how much laugh. I have often heard them performing the crying part myself. 5. The marriage ceremonies. I have married three or four couples in Christian order, but have never seen a pair married in Chinese style; but I called up one of my assistants last night, who has been married, and inquired particularly in this matter. His account was something like what follows: The bridegroom, of course, secures the indispensable services of some old conjuror, to ascertain when will be the lucky day for taking a wife, and at what hour of that day the ceremony should be performed. For the execution of this delicate duty, the services of some old lady are engaged, who has been lucky, and rather famous for bringing forth prolifically. When the hour arrives, she proceeds to celebrate the nuptials, by placing a vessel of rice on the floor, in the middle of which a lamp is placed, with two wicks burning separately; before which, stuck down in the rice, is placed two lighted candles, two boiled eggs with the shells taken off, and two cups of spirits. The loving pair, who have never seen each other before, worship together before this affair, put the two wicks of the lamp together, and thus the dear two become one. They eat two eggs, drink the two cups of spirits, and it is understood that they are married. Then they sit down and look on, to see which of the candles will burn out first, having already determined which is he and which is she, and conclude that the one that burns out first will die first. 6. They may, if they choose, purchase a concubine or two, or more, if able to support them. I doubt, however, whether more than one in twenty avail themselves of this privilege. I have just inquired of my assistant, what portion of the people take concubines? He thinks among the citizens of Canton, especially within the city, about one-third; but among the villages in the country, not more than one in a hundred. Should the first wife, however, prove childless, they esteem it not only a privilege, but a duty, to take a second, in order to have an heir to build up their posterity.

8. Do they dress as we do? Are they kind and hospitable?

Ans. They do not dress exactly as we do. Their hats have no brims, their shirts and coats no collars; their breeches no buttons; and their shoes no ears. Their stockings are long, and are tied just under the knees; the coat is long, coming down like a lady's dress, near to the ankles. I think they may be esteemed both kind and hospitable, when one associates with them as an equal, and they are peculiarly polite, especially the better class—not exceeded by the French themselves. But their kindness and hospitality are shown in their own way, viz. in their shops or stores—not in the family circle, as is the case with us.

9. What kind of Houses do they live in?

Ans. Generally in comfortable brick houses. Most commonly, however, but one story high. Their shops are generally two, and sometimes I have seen houses three stories high, but these are very few. But the minutiæ of the internal construction of their houses are as different from ours as their clothes. They have not at all patronized our ideas, but have thought for themselves in all these matters. They generally proceed in their buildings on a cheap scale, and they have no windows in their dwelling houses.

10. Do they worship every thing, or nothing?

They worship idols made with their own hands. They are chiefly Boodhists. They have a considerable variety of gods, one for the cooking place, one for the door, and one under the table; and a set of household gods upon the shelf, consisting of six or seven. Their ancestor's tablet is also set on the shelf by these, to be worshiped too. They worship, however, they know not what. And I think when the gospel begins to take effect properly, these dumb idols must fall as dagon before the ark. I am happy to say that I now have five families in Canton in my connection, besides individuals, who have cast down their idols and set up the worship of the true God instead. For which let the Lord have the praise.

11. Have they any Servants?

Ans. Nearly all have servants, either bought or hired. The servants, however, are all Chinese, none foreign. The bought servants are generally females, and when grown up are either sold again to some gentleman for a concubine, where they are esteemed but little better than a servant; or they are appropriated to a worse purpose, for the object of making money for the master. I should think their system of slavery was of a mild character, and objectionable chiefly on account of its tendency to prostitution. These poor pitiable creatures are generally owned by some person as slaves, and are compelled thus to make money for their master.

12. What kind of Amusements do they engage in?

Ans. Gambling is the chief, almost the only one; playing with cards, mostly native cards, also dice; they smoke opium, go to theatres, make processions; but they are chiefly taken up with making a livelihood. This is an old country, and the inhabitants find but little time to attend to any thing else than making money—money is their one great thing needful from morning till night.

NEW PLAN OF COURTSHIP.

At a wedding, recently celebrated, were some twenty-five young persons, all of them in a condition which, for various reasons, they generally concurred in regarding as undesirable, viz., the unengaged. One of the gentlemen of the party suspected the prevalence among them of feelings that might easily be exchanged for others infinitely more fixed and agreeable. He accordingly proposed the selection of a President, a person worthy of all confidence, whose duty it should be to receive from each individual a folded paper inscribed with the name of the person handing it in, and also with the name of another person, of the other sex, whom the first would be willing to marry. The President, in addition to the restraints of his own sense of honor, was to be put under a solemn pledge of eternal secresy. All refusing to accede to the proposition, were for the time to leave the room. Those whose choice was reciprocal, that is, whose papers contained the same two names, were to be privately informed; while the selections of the others were to remain undisclosed. The result was, that the trial was made—all shared in the experiment—and eleven couple were found to have made themselves happy, and their several unions were subsequently consummated.

GERMAN EMIGRATION.

In a late number of Littell's Living Age, is an article on German Emigration, from Chamber's Journal, containing some interesting statistics. It appears that since the year 1840, Germany has sent out 60,000 settlers, and during the last year, the number is stated in English journals at 70,000. One peculiarity of this German population is stated to be, that it is directed almost exclusively to the United States of America. These emigrants are chiefly from the Upper and Middle Rhine, the Grand Duchy of Baden, Wurtemburg, the two Hesses and Bavaria. In Bavaria especially, whole village communities sell their property for what they can get, and set out with their clergymen at their head. These people do not leave their native homes from poverty, for a large proportion of them it is reckoned take with them at least thirty pounds' worth of goods and money; but the principal cause of this almost national movement is said to be a desire for absolute political and national freedom.

Dr. Johnson.—The pomposity of Dr. Johnson, and his vain display of learning amongst those who assumed an acquaintance with literature, are very well known. Old Macklin, the player, who was a genuine Hibernian, one day paid the doctor a visit as a literary man; and after a few introductory words, the doctor observed in a sneering way, that literary men should not converse in the vulgar tongue, but in the learned languages, and immediately addressed the dramatist in a long sentence of Latin. Macklin, after expressing his accedence to the doctor's proposition, said he would rather converse in Greek, and commenced in a long sentence of equal length in Irish. The doctor again retorted in the English tongue, and observed, "Sir, you may speak very good Greek, but I am not sufficiently versed in that dialect to converse fluently. Macklin burst out a laughing, made his bow, and retired.

A Rich Country.—It is asserted in one of the French scientific Journals, that Siberia is so affluent in gold mines, that the gold there found will ere long be sufficient to effect a financial revolution in Europe equal in its results to that produced by the discovery and subsequent successful working of the Peruvian mines. The produce of the Siberian mines, has, it is said, doubled within the last fourteen years. The washing of the mineral alone, employs eleven thousand hands, while the prodigious quantity of the ore obtained, would, no doubt, afford constant and unintermitted employment to three times that number. The scarcity of labor prevents the mines from being wrought to the extent they would be, and the markets of Europe from being literally overflowed with their produce.

Gerrit Smith's Bounty.—Samuel D. Porter, of Rochester, has been made the almoner of Mr. Smith's benevolence in the gift of about fourteen hundred acres of land to the colored men of Monroe County. Mr. Smith proposes to divide this land into thirty-four parts, to be deeded to the same number of individuals. Twenty-four persons have already been designated, to whom Mr. Smith has made conveyances, and the deeds are nearly all in Mr. Porter's hands. Mr. P. has published a list of these persons, in order that, if any of them should be known to be unworthy of Mr. Smith's beneficence, the land can be given to others who are known to be of good character.

VARIETY.

Write we know is written right
Where we see it written write;
But when we see it written wright,
We know it is not written right,
For write, to have it written right,
Must not be written right or wright;
Nor yet should it be written rite:
But WRITE, for so 'tis written right.

Straching of linen was brought into England in 1565, by Mrs. Dinghen Van Plasse, born in Flanders, who came over here at the invitation of some of the nobility, and professed herself a starcher; for which purpose she opened a kind of seminary. Her price was £5 to teach ladies to starch, and £20 to teach them how to make it, that is, how to boil it to a right consistency.

How delicious that conversation is, which is accompanied with a mutual confidence, freedom, courtesy, and complacency! How calm the mind, how composed the affections, how serene the countenance, how melodious the voice, how sweet the sleep, how contentful the whole life, that neither deviseth mischief against others, nor suspects any to be contrived against himself!

Bonaparte once at a party placed himself directly before a witty and beautiful lady, and said very abruptly, "Madam, I don't like that women should meddle with politics." "You are very right, General," she replied; "but in a country where women are beheaded, it is natural they should desire to know the reason."

Alexander the great, seeing Diogenes looking attentively at a parcel of human bones, asked the philosopher what he was looking for. "That which I cannot find," was the reply; "the difference between your father's bones and those of his slaves."

A school-boy in the Literary Emporium being asked to define the word admission, said it meant twenty-five cents. Twenty-five cents! echoed the master, "what sort of a definition is that?" "I don't know," sulkily replied the boy, "but I'm sure it says so on the advertisement down here at the show." "Yes," said another boy, "and children half price!"

Howison, in his history of Virginia, states the fact, not generally known, that the first slave introduced into that colony was in August, 1620, when a Dutch man-of-war sailed up the James River, landed twenty negroes from the African coast, which they sold to the planters, who were most anxious to avail themselves of this class of laborers.

If the body is cheated of its repose at the proper time by the excitement of pleasure, the moral part of the man—as if in revenge—ceases to watch; and like one walking in his sleep, falls into every sin and snare that lies in his path.

For a stiff, unbending, self-important person, we have no affection. Approach him whichever way you please, and you are sure to see the great "I myself," and get nothing but disappointment and chagrin for your pains.

A celebrated author justly observes, that "Agriculture is the nursery of patriotism and virtue—aided by science, it makes a great man. All the energy of the hero and the science of the philosopher may find scope in the cultivation of a single farm."

If public speakers are affected with bronchial difficulties, let them wash the throat and stomach externally with cold water in the morning, rubbing these parts hard. This, if done in season, will effect a cure.

The three most beautiful words in the English language are, Mother, Home, and Heaven.

At a trial before a Justice, in Vede Pache, Louisiana, the Justice after the cause was submitted, asked, whether any of the jury could read or write. It was proved on examination that not one could read or write.

A Quebec paper advertises a trotting match to come off "immediately after divine service." Morals must be in a high state of cultivation in the British Provinces.

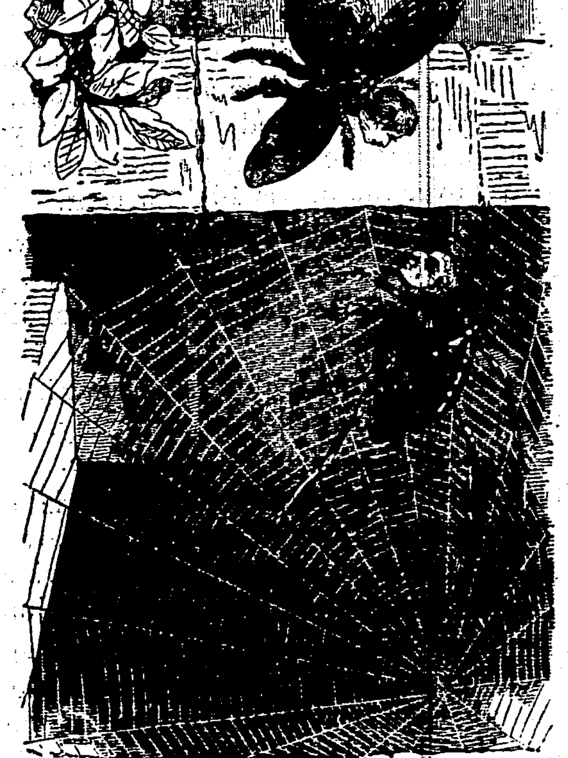
THE SPIDER AND THE HONEY-BEE:

A Fable for many in general, and some in particular.

BY FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH.

I.

A Bee who had chased after pleasure all day,
And homeward was lazily wending his way,
Fell in with a Spider, who called to the Bee:
"Good evening! I trust you are well," said he.



THE BEE OUTSIDE THE WEB.

II.

The Bee was quite happy to stop awhile there—
For Indolence always has moments to spare—
"Good evening!" he said, with a very low bow,
"My health, sir, alas! 'tis quite delicate now.

III.

From spring until autumn, from morning till night,
I'm obliged to be toiling with all my might—
My labors are wearing me out, and you know
I might as well starve, as to kill myself so."

IV.

The Spider pretended to pity the Bee—
For a cunning old hypocrite Spider was he—
"I am sorry to see you so ill," he said;
And he whispered his wife, "He will have to be bled."

V.

"Some people—perhaps they are wiser than I—
Some people are in a great hurry to die;
Excuse me, but candor compels me to say,
'Tis wrong to be throwing one's life away.

VI.

Your industry, sir, may do very well
For the beaver's rude hut, or the honey-bee's cell;
But it never would suit a gay fellow like me;
I love to be idle—I love to be free.

VII.

This hoarding of riches—this wasting of time,
In robbing the gardens and fields—'tis a crime!
And then to be guilty of suicide, too!
I tremble to think what a miser will do."

VIII.

'Tis strange the poor Bee was so stupid and blind—
"Mister Spider," said he, "you have spoken my mind;
There's something within me, that seems to say,
I have toiled long enough, and 'tis time to play.

IX.

But how in the world shall I manage to live?
I might beg all my life, and nobody would give.
'Tis easy enough to be merry and sing,
But living on air is a different thing."

X.

The Spider was silent, and looked very grave—
'Twas a habit he had—the scheming old knave!
No Spider, intent on his labor of love,
Had more of the serpent, or less of the dove.

XI.

"To serve you would give me great pleasure," said he;
"Come into my palace and tarry with me;
The Spider knows nothing of labor and care—
Come, you shall be welcome our bounty to share.

XII.

I live like a king, and my wife like a queen,
In meadows where flowers are blooming and green;
'Tis sweet on the violet's bosom to lie,
And list to the stream that runs merrily by.

XIII.

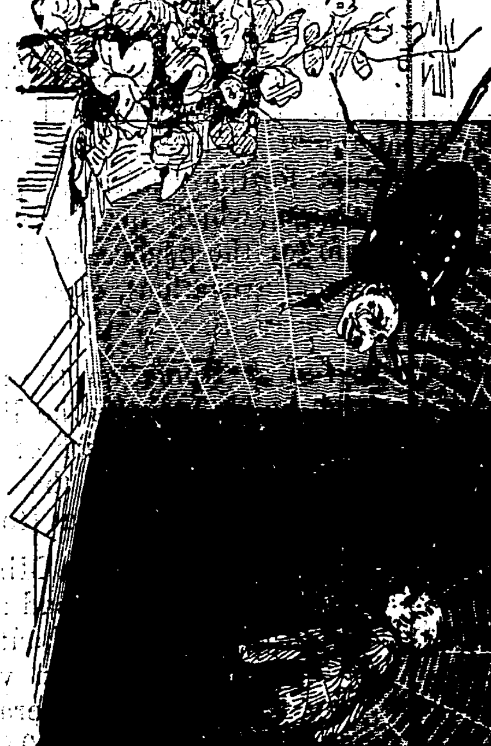
With us you shall mingle in scenes of delight,
All summer and winter, from morning till night;
And when 'neath the hills the sun sinks in the west,
Your head on a pillow of roses shall rest.

XIV.

When miserly Bees shall return from their toils,
If you will decoy them, we'll feast on the spoils—
I'll lighten their burdens—I ought to know how—
My pantry is full of such gentlemen now."

XV.

The Bee did not wait to be urged any more,
But nodded his thanks as he entered the door.
"Aha!" said the Spider, "I have you at last."
And he caught the poor urchin, and soon made him fast.



THE BEE INSIDE THE WEB.

XVI.

The Bee, when aware of his perilous fate,
Recovered his wit, though a moment too late.
"O treacherous Spider! for shame!" said he,
"Is it thus you betray a poor, innocent Bee?"

XVII.

The cunning old Spider then laughed outright;
"Poor fellow!" he said, "you are in a sad plight!
Ha! ha! what a dunce you must be to suppose
That the heart of a Spider should pity your woes!

XVIII.

I never could boast of much honor or shame,
Tho' a little acquainted with both by name;
But I think if the Bees can a brother betray,
That Spiders are quite as good people as they.

XIX.

On the whole, you have lived long enough, I opine;
So now, by your leave, I will hasten to dine;
You'll make a good dinner, it must be confess'd;
And the world, I am thinking, will pardon the rest."

XX.

A lesson for every one, little and great,
Is taught in this vagabond's tragical fate;
Of him who is scheming your friend to ensnare,
Unless you've a passion for Bleeding, beware!

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, }
IRA SAYLES, } Principals,

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

President of the Board of Trustees.

A FARM FOR SALE,

IN the township of Piscataway, State of New Jersey, lying north-east from New Brunswick, half a mile from the Bridge, half a mile from Snyder's Mills, and in full view of the railroad car-house. Said farm consists of about ninety five acres of land, in a good state of cultivation, and well adapted to raising grain and vegetables. It has a good variety of fruit trees, considerable wood, and five acres of salt meadow. The house is in good repair, and has a well of water at the door. There is also a new barn, sheds, &c. For farther particulars call on Dr. Nelson Stelle, No. 146 Grand-st., N. Y.—Mr. Burris, No. 1 Oliver-st.—or on the premises of JONATHAN S. DUNHAM.

INCONSISTENCY OF THE BAPTISTS.

It may seen strange to some people, that a charge of this sort should be brought against a denomination which has ever been characterized for carrying out convictions of truth irrespective of consequences. They have been accused of stubbornness, because they would not be borne along by the common current, and compromise their principles for worldly ease or personal advantage. They have been severely persecuted in times past, and still are in some parts of the world, because of their attachment to and practice of God's word, unadulterated with human tradition. They have said with the celebrated Chillingworth, that "the Bible, and the Bible only, is the religion of Protestants." Their standard has been the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, in spirit and letter. Not only so, but they have been very diligent in their search after truth, and have conscientiously yielded to it when discovered in the word of God, though their lives were in peril for such a line of conduct. John Bunyan might have lived a very easy life, and secured to himself many honors, and perhaps wealth, had he yielded to the dogmas of men. Had he submitted to human authority, taken the prayer book, and used it instead of praying as the Spirit dictated, and as his own wants and the wants of the people required, gone to church, and observed its formalities as the mass of mankind did, all would have been right. But he found in God's Book nothing to favor a worldly religious establishment—the basis of which was wealth—imposing a number of foolish and pompous mummeries upon the people, with an hierarchy as corrupt and proud as that of Rome. He found the religion of the Bible altogether opposed to a system like this, and therefore took his stand upon the revealed will of Heaven, and pursued such a course as was consistent with its requirements. The result of all this was imprisonment in Bedford jail twelve years. John Bunyan was a real Baptist! History furnishes us with many examples of noble-minded men in the Baptist denomination, who have suffered much for conscience's sake; and perhaps it may be said, without fear of contradiction, that the denomination has been more rigid than any other in its attachment to the simple and pure truth of the Scriptures. It is a most lamentable fact, however, that this very denomination fails, in numerous instances, at the present day, when it has grown hoary with age. During the long period of more than 1800 years, it has endured trial for the truth's sake. But the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath—the only true Sabbath of the Bible—is an impediment in the way of many of our brethren too great to be overcome. What is in the way? Are they but partially convinced that it is really the Sabbath? Nay, many in the churches frankly acknowledge, that the Sabbatarian has all the argument on his side, and that they would become Sabbath-keepers if they lived among those who are so. Is not practical religion, then, a personal thing? The brethren who talk in this strain would not think of denying that. Are Baptists then seeking popularity in preference to truth? Let every Baptist brother blush at the thought. Again, we ask, What is in the way? Are they afraid of persecution? It may lead to persecution, as some know by bitter experience. But shall Baptists be afraid of persecution, when their Master was crucified for them, and their primitive leaders were all persecuted, and all but one died martyrs for the truth? Shall they fly from their banner because it is stained with blood? Surely they will all say, No. We repeat the inquiry, What is in the way? Is singularity the great stumbling-block? Why, who ever knew a real Baptist to be afraid of being singular, though he might be so in the most emphatic sense, and though he might be the only one in the neighborhood? If singularity is the bugbear, that may be easily disposed of by a simultaneous movement of the brethren whose judgments are convinced that the seventh day is the Sabbath. Such a movement, too, would wake up all the churches to a consideration of the subject, and tend to bring about a most desirable event, namely, a fraternity of all Baptists, in the most literal sense. Lastly, the question returns upon us, What is in the way? Is worldly interest to be injured in any manner? Will they sacrifice a little in trade, and will their neighbors get it who pursue their callings and engage in their mercantile labors on that holy day? Perhaps it may be so, and perhaps not. It cannot be easily proved, that a person has been eventually the loser by obeying God from the heart. It is to be feared that many hold back from the practice of keeping the real Sabbath, because they think they shall miss taking a few dollars and cents in the way of trade. Oh, brethren, blush to crimson at the thought. What will your dollars and cents do for you when an account of your stewardship is demanded, and the Lord says to your heart, when you are about to be ushered into his presence, "Ye knew my will, but did it not?" What a small sacrifice will a little wealth appear, when made for him who shed his blood for your salvation, in that moment when a thousand worlds of wealth will appear to you as trifling as the chaff which the wind bloweth away. W—R.

LUTHER'S VISIT TO ROME.

The vivid and instructive account of Luther's first visit to Rome, which follows, is taken from D'Aubigné's graphic history of the Reformation:—

At last, after a fatiguing journey under the burning sun of Italy, he approached the seven-hilled city. His heart was moved within him. His eyes longed to behold the queen of the earth and of the Church! As soon as he discovered from a distance the Eternal City—the city of St. Peter and St. Paul, the metropolis of the Catholic World, he threw himself on the earth, exclaiming, 'Holy Rome, I salute thee!'

Luther was now in Rome; the professor of Wittemberg was in the midst of the eloquent ruins of the Rome of Consuls and of Emperors, the Rome of Confessors of Christ and of Martyrs. There had lived Plautus and Virgil, whose works he had carried with him into his cloister; and all those great men whose history had so often stirred his heart. He beheld their statutes, and the ruined monuments which still attested their glory. But all this glory and power had passed away. He trod under foot the dust of them. He called to mind, at every step he took, the melancholy presentiments of Scipio, when, shedding tears over the ruins of Carthage, its palaces in flames, and its walls broken down, he exclaimed—'It will one day be thus with Rome!' 'And truly,' said Luther, 'the Rome of Scipios and Cæsars is but a corpse.' There are such heaps of ruin that the foundations of the houses rests at this hour where once the roofs were. 'There,' said he, turning a melancholy look on its ruins, 'there were once the riches and treasures of this world!' All these fragments of wreck which his foot encountered whispered to Luther, within Rome herself, that what is strongest in the sight of men may be destroyed by the breath of the Lord.

But with these profaner ruins were mixed holy ashes; the thought of this came to his mind. The burial places of the martyrs are hard by those of Roman generals and conquerors. Christian Rome and her trials had more power over the heart of the Saxon monk, than Pagan Rome with all her glory. In this very place arrived that epistle wherein Paul wrote, 'the just shall live by faith.' He is not far from the forum of Appius, and the Three Taverns. In that spot was the house of Narcissus; here stood the palace of Cæsar, where the Lord delivered the Apostle from the jaws of the lion. O how did these recollections strengthen the heart of the monk of Wittemberg!

Rome then presented a widely different aspect. The warlike Julius II. filled the pontifical chair, and not Leo X., as some distinguished historians of Germany have said, doubtless for want of attention. Luther often related an incident of this Pope's life. When the news was brought him that his army had been defeated by the French before Ravenna, he was reading his prayers; he threw the book on the floor, exclaiming with a dreadful oath, 'Well, now thou art become a Frenchman. Is it thus thou guardest thy church?' Then, turning himself in the direction of the country to whose arms he thought to have recourse, he uttered these words, 'Holy Swiss! pray for us.' Ignorance, levity, and dissolute morals, a profane contempt of every thing sacred, and a shameful traffic in divine things; such was the spectacle presented by this wretched city. Yet the pious monk continued for a while in his illusions.

Having arrived about the period of the festival of St. John, he heard the Romans repeating around him a proverb current among the people: 'Blessed is that mother,' said they, 'whose son says mass on St. John's eve.' O, thought Luther, how gladly would I make my mother blessed. The pious son of Margaret made some attempts to say mass on that day, but he could not, the crowd was too great. Warm in his feeling, and confiding in his disposition, he visited all the churches and chapels, gave credit to all the marvelous stories there told him, went through with devotion the observances required, and was pleased at being able to perform so many pious acts, from which his friends at home were debarred. 'How do I regret,' thought the pious monk, 'that my father and mother are still living; how happy should I be to deliver them from the fire of purgatory by masses, my prayers, and other admirable works.' He had found the light, but the darkness was far from being wholly chased from his mind; he had the faith and love of the gospel, but not the knowledge of it. It was not an easy matter to emerge from that deep gloom that had for so many ages overspread the earth.

Luther said mass several times at Rome. He went through it with all the unction and dignity that such an act seemed to him to require. But how was the heart of the Saxon monk distressed, when he saw the profane and heartless formality with which the Roman clergy celebrated this Sacrament. The priests, on their part, laughed at his simplicity. One day, when he was officiating, he found that at the altar they had read seven masses while he was reading one. 'Quick! quick!' said one of the priests, 'send Our Lady her Son back speedily;' thus impiously alluding to the transubstantiation of the bread into the body and blood of Christ. Another time Luther had only got as far as the Gospel, when the priest who was at his side had already finished the mass: 'Make haste, make haste!' whispered the latter, 'do have done with it.'

His astonishment was still greater, when he found, in the dignitaries of the church, the same corruption he had observed in the inferior clergy. He had hoped better things of them. It was the fashion at the papal court to attack Christianity; and a person was not counted a man of sense, if he did not hold some eccentric and heretical opinion in relation to the dogmas of the church. Some would have convinced Erasmus, by certain passages from Pliny, that there was no difference between the souls of men and of beasts; and there were young courtiers of the Pope, who affirmed that the orthodox faith was the growth of the cunning invention of the saints.

Luther's office of envoy from the Augustines of Germany, procured him invitations to several meetings of distinguished ecclesiastics. One day, in particular, he was at table with several prelates; the latter exhibited openly their buffoonery in manners and impious conversation; and did not scruple to give utterance before him to many indecent jokes, doubtless thinking him one like themselves. They related, amongst other things, laughing, and priding themselves upon it, how when saying mass at the altar, instead of the sacramental words which were to transform the elements into the body and blood of the Saviour, they pronounced over the bread and wine these sarcastic words: 'Bread thou art, and bread thou shalt remain; wine thou art, and wine thou shalt remain—Panis es et panis manebis; vinum es et vinum manebis.' 'Then,' continued they, 'we elevate the pyx, and all the people worship.' Luther could scarcely believe his ears. His mind, gifted with much vivacity, and even gaiety, in the society of his friends, was remarkable for gravity when treating of serious things. These Romish mockeries shocked him. 'I,' says he, 'was a serious and pious young monk; such language deeply grieved me. If at Rome they speak thus openly at table, thought I, what if their actions should correspond with their words, and pope, cardinals, and courtiers, should thus say mass. And I who have so often heard them recite it so devoutly, how, in that case, must I have been deceived?'

THE SABBATH.

"O dear, I wish it wasn't Sabbath-day," said George Nelson, as he cast a wishful look upon a dissected map, which lay upon a table in the room, where he was lolling upon a chair.

"And so do I," said his brother Robert, who was leaning his body half-way out an open window. "It is so tiresome to keep still and do nothing that we want to do, all day. There's Roger Prentice walking in his father's field. I wish father would let us just walk in the garden."

"But you know he won't," said George. "He says it is wicked."

"I don't see how it can be wicked to walk quietly in the garden."

"Nor I. And I don't see any harm in looking at a map, or drawing on a slate either. The day is always so long, so much longer than other days."

"So it seems to me, but there is Maria and Henry Jones, who say it is the shortest day in all the week."

"Well, I don't see how that can be. It"—

Before he had time to finish what he had begun to say, his father came into the room. He told the boys that it was time to prepare for church, and so they went to their own room to make preparation.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, the parents of George and Robert, were sincere Christians. They reverenced the Sabbath, and were anxious that their children should keep it holy. But they made a wide mistake in the means which they used to attain this result. They were exact in requiring abstinence from play, and all weekly occupations, but they made no attempt to interest or instruct their children in accordance with the duties of the day. They adapted neither their conversations nor their directions to their young capacities. They did not think of furnishing them interesting books, suitable for Sabbath reading, or of selecting stories from the Bible, or of explaining its truths in a familiar manner. Mr. and Mrs. Jones managed much better. The Sabbath was a happy day both to them and to their children. In the first place, they were careful to secure proper reading for their young minds. They purchased juvenile books, and they subscribed for one or two little papers, suitable for Sabbath reading. They selected passages from the Bible, and read to them, and they explained its doctrines to them in an interesting and simple manner. The consequence was, that the Sabbath, instead of being considered a weariness, was welcomed by the children with delight.

THE EAGLE.

"But why is the eagle called the king of birds?" little Humphrey asked his father. His father replied, "Because, my child, he exceeds all the feathered race in strength and courage. He lives and builds his nest in the highest clifts of rocks, nearest to the vault of heaven; his keen sparkling eye does not avoid the bright splendor of the sun. But it is in storms that he chiefly displays his majesty. When threatening clouds obscure the sky—when lightning flashes, and when the terrific voice of thunder is heard, all other birds are frightened, and fly for shelter to the wood, and hide themselves in the leafy trees; then the eagle is undismayed and heedless of the storm; and soaring with his powerful wings to the sun, sports in its light, while it thunders and lightens beneath him. Every noble and God-fearing Christian, dear Humphrey, I compare to the eagle. Although he is formed out of the dust, yet his spirit and affections are nearer heaven than earth. When the hour of adversity or of sorrow causes weak and ungodly men to tremble, he is without fear; his affections rise to heaven in confidence, and his hope reposes on God, even as a child on its mother's breast. We find it written in scripture, 'They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings, as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint.'"

THE CROWDED STREET.

BY WILLIAM C. BRYANT.

Let me move slowly through the street,
  Filled with an ever-shifting train,
Amid the sound of steps that beat
  The murmuring walks like autumn rain.

How fast the flitting figures come!
  The mild, the fierce, the stony face;
Some bright with thoughtless smiles, and some
  Where secret tears have left their trace.

They pass—to toil, to strife, to rest;
  To halls in which the feast is spread;
To chambers where the funeral guest
  In silence sits beside the dead.

And some to happy homes repair,
  Where children, pressing cheek to cheek,
With mute caresses shall declare
  The tenderness they cannot speak.

And some, who walk with calmness here,
  Shall shudder as they reach the door
Where one who made their dwelling dear,
  Its flower, its light, is seen no more.

Youth, with pale cheek and slender frame,
  And dreams of greatness in thine eye!
Goest thou to build an early name,
  Or early in the task to die?

Keen son of trade, with eager brow,
  Who now is fluttering in thy snare?
Thy golden fortunes, tower they now,
  Or melt the glittering spires in air?

Who of this crowd to-night, shall tread
  The dance till daylight gleams again?
Who sorrow o'er the untimely dead?
  Who writhe in throes of mortal pain?

Some, famine-struck, shall think how long
  The cold, dark hours, how slow the light;
And some, who flaunt amid the throng,
  Shall hide in dens of shame to-night.

Each, where his tasks or pleasures call,
  They pass and heed each other not;
There is who heeds, who holds them all,
  In his large love, and boundless thought.

These struggling tides of life that seem
  In wayward, aimless course to tend,
Are eddies of the mighty stream
  That rolls to its appointed end.

HAVE WE A FATHER THERE?

"Clarinda, do you think we shall live again . . . . . after we are dead?"

"I don't know," was the answer, in a mournful tone.

"It seems," continued he, "as if I had been alive a very, very short time. I have lived . . . . and done nothing else; and now I feel sorry to go into darkness and nothingness again. Do you think I shall?"

"Then you think you shall die!" . . . . said she, with her usual abruptness, but with a bitterness inexpressible in her accent.

"I think I must," was the answer.

And for all this reply, she retired to her station at the foot of the bed, shrank into a heap of garments, crouched down her head, and buried her face again between her arms, and under her hair. But this time she did not look through between those arms. This time, she hides the very light of day from her forlorn, yet dry eyes.

There was a silence; and the boy breathed painfully. At last he said—

"Our Father who art in heaven!"

"What does that mean, Clarinda?"

"Our Father?—a father—who art in heaven. Have we a father there, Clarinda? Is there some one in this wide, wide universe—this vast vault—this large vessel in which we are floating. Is there a Father in it, do you think, Clarinda?"

She lifted up her face, shook her head sorrowfully, and said:

"I don't know."

"Oh! if there were a Father," said the boy, "how glad I should be to go to him!"

"Go to him!" said she mournfully.

"Ah, Clarinda! how glad we should be to go to him!"

She nodded assent, and sank down into her former position.

"I think," said the boy, after another long pause, "if I were but sure I should find him—I should be very glad to die."

"And I would be almost glad to let you," she replied in a low voice, and her head sank down again; and hidden by the clothes, tears, still and silent as soft summer rain, literally poured from her eyes.

Another pause!

"Clarinda, what are you thinking about all the time you are at church?"

"I do not know," said she again, raising her head—"any thing—nothing. I used to look about when I was a child; and amuse myself as well as I could, and now I think about—that is all the difference."

"Well, that is just what I do. It is very strange that we have neither of us thought more about it. Do you ever say your prayers?" whispered he, mysteriously. "Some people do, every night and morning."

"I never was taught my prayers, except by my old nurse, when I was a little thing—I used to say: 'Pray, God bless papa and mama, and make me a good girl.' I left it off when I left the nursery, and had no one to bid me kneel down. Brother, if there be a God!"

"My children," said the old man, softly opening the door, "how are you both, and what was that you said last, my pretty lady Clarinda? If there be? To be sure there is. Have I not shown him to you in the flowers? My children, comfort your poor hearts. There is a God—a Father to the fatherless, a——"

"Then he shall be my God," faltered the boy.

"—And will he raise the dead?"

"'We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed; in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound; and the dead shall be raised; and this corruption shall put on incorruption; and this mortal, immortality;'" replied the old man, "but wherefore, now, my children? Surely this is not the first time you have asked of yourselves these things?"

"Nay," said the boy, "you know, sir, how it is with us. We are two poor, ignorant, ill-educated beings, wandering about on this earth—coming from we know not whence—going we know not whither. We are two poor, desolate orphan children. We were content to wander together, but now we both believe that we must part. And she would know what will become of me when I am dead; and I would know what will become of her when, like a poor withered leaf, she is left to be blown about the world. If there be a Father to the fatherless, why have we never been told of him?"

"It would have been a great comfort," said the girl.

—"I should have asked him a great many things, if I thought he would have heard me."

"Ask, then, for he will hear you."

—"And grant my prayers?" said she doubtingly.

"Or do better," said the old man.

"I understand you," said she, sinking down again.

"What I would ask is his life," repeated she to herself; "poor, unhappy boy! and will he not be better with his Father? No, I will not ask that, but I will ask Him to pity me, when He takes him to himself, and to take poor little Clarinda home too."

The good and simple old man now resumed his favorite subject. He talked of creation, and its beauties, and its excellencies, and long he pursued the lovely theme, consoling the hearts of the young inquirers; and then he fetched his little black Bible, and he read of life and immortality, and the touching words of the tender and pitying Lord Jesus; and he laid these two trembling children at their Saviour's feet.

THE BIBLE AND FREEDOM.

The spirit of literature, more especially of Christian literature, is free and friendly to freedom. And now that the eye of the master is opened, and his sensibility is quickened by public discussion of the system of American slavery, he cannot read a volume of poetry, cannot run over a romance or novel of the day, without meeting a contradiction of his philosophy of life, or encountering a rebuke for his inhumanity to man. He cannot admire the pictures of our common Shakspeare; he cannot be elevated by the grandeur of our destiny, and the wonders of our redemption, in Milton; he cannot inhale the sweet breath of Cowper, without being impressed with respect for human nature in its lowest estate, and detestation for slavery in its mildest form.

Were there no book but the Bible, it were itself enough to stifle slavery. I do not care if Abraham had servants born to him in his house, if Moses recognized slavery in his civil code, if our blessed Lord said not a word in condemnation; still there is in the Bible a deep-seated, essential hostility to every degree or form or servitude. Its fundamental doctrines of the original equality of all men before God, of the common redemption by the same blood, of a practical experience of the same grace, and a common inheritance of the same heaven—these living and glorious truths of the Gospel are all so many instruments of universal freedom. They that sit down together at the communion of the body and blood of Jesus, and converse together, as strangers upon earth, fellow-travelers to the New Jeruselem, in which their common hopes center, and to which their weary and anxious feet are passing with a common zeal, cannot be master and slave, they are all brethren. [Prof. Haddock's Address.

A PARENTAL MISTAKE.

The most frequent and fatal of all parental mistakes is, in suffering anxiety for the temporial prosperity of children to supersede anxiety for their soul's welfare. "I have done all," says a father, lamenting the shameless profligacy of his son, "I have done all for him that I could. I have warned him against evil associates; I have insisted on the indispensableness of a good character, in order to success in business, and I have placed him in a situation in which it will be his own fault if he does not succeed." Perhaps it might be replied to that father, that the counsel he gave to that son was only such as might be suggested by worldly wisdom; that he had not asked heavenly direction for him; had not followed him with his prayers; and had selected a situation for him without any regard to the religious privileges connected with it, and solely for the promise it afforded of a speedy accumulation of this world's wealth. In doing every thing for his son, he had done little or nothing. He had sent him forth from the paternal roof to make the experiment of life, without any proper preliminary training; he had exposed him to all the artifices of the world and the devil, in the inexperience of youth, without first seeing that his heart was fortified by the principles of religion. Under such circumstances, it would have been a miracle had he not been ruined. [Presbyterian.

God's Dealing.—Learn, says Leighton, to put a right construction on all God's dealings with his church and with thy soul. For his church there may be a time wherein thou shalt see it tossed, and, to thy thinking, covered and swallowed up with tears; but wait a little, it shall arrive safe. This is a common stumbling-stone; but walk by the light of the word, and the eye of faith, looking on it, and thou shalt pass by, and not stumble at it. The church mourns, and Babylon sings, sits as a queen; but for how long? She shall come down, and sit in the dust; and Zion shall be glorious, and put on her beautiful garments; while Babylon shall not look for another revelation to raise her again; no, she shall never rise. The "angel took up a stone, like a great mill-stone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall the great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 31, 1846.

THE SUPPOSED REPEAL OF THE SABBATH.

The object of Mr. Brown's Fifth Lecture, delivered on Sunday evening last, was to consider the supposed repeal of the weekly Sabbath. He commenced by saying, that many persons regard the topics thus far examined as having no necessary connection with the question at issue between us and other denominations; they therefore look forward to the consideration of the change of the Sabbath to the first day of the week, as the most interesting point of the whole discussion. He thought differently. Indeed, if it be proved conclusively, that the Sabbath was designed to be a standing witness against Atheism and Idolatry; that it is a necessary part of the Moral Law; that it was designed for the whole race of mankind, and not for the Israelites in particular; then the duty of observing the seventh day of the week follows as a natural consequence. The idea of a distinction between the sabbatic rest, and the day on which it is to be observed, is absurd. God blessed the seventh day. If therefore the blessing be taken away from that day, it is taken from the institution itself.

Before proceeding to examine the grounds from which the repeal of the Sabbath is inferred, the lecturer premised, that an act repealing a law must be just as explicit as the law itself. This repealing act may refer directly to the Sabbath, or it may relate to the entire system of which the Sabbath is a component part. In either case, the Sabbath is effectually repealed.

The first text brought under consideration, which is supposed to repeal the Sabbath directly, was Col. 2: 16—"Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy-day, or of the new-moon, or of the Sabbath days; which are a shadow of good things to come." In order to understand this, we must consider, that there were, under the old dispensation, many rest-days, which were called sabbaths, besides the weekly rest-day; such, for instance, as the first and eighth days of the Passover, the feast of tabernacles, of trumpets, &c. It is more likely that the Apostle referred to these than to the weekly Sabbath. 1st. The Apostle evidently speaks of a class of institutions which were a burden—"a yoke which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear." This could not have been said of the weekly Sabbath, which was "made for man," Jesus Christ himself being witness. 2d. He speaks of those Sabbath days which were a shadow of things to come. But the weekly Sabbath was not a shadow, since it was instituted before man had sinned, and stood in need of a Redeemer, or of types and shadows pointing to a Redeemer. 3d. The weekly Sabbath is a commemorative institution, designed to perpetuate the memory of the work of creation. How can such an institution be viewed as a shadow, to be blotted out thousands of years before the fact which it commemorates is blotted out? In this connection, the speaker answered, at considerable length, the objection, that there were commemorative institutions peculiar to Judaism, which Christ blotted out. He showed the difference between the Sabbath and those institutions, and that while it is the duty of all men to observe the Sabbath, it may be the duty of the Israelites now to observe some of their commemorative institutions—not as a means of justification, but simply to commemorate the great facts in connection with which they were established.

The typical character of the Sabbath was next brought under review. It was maintained, that if the Sabbath is a type at all, it is a type of the rest, or sabbatism, spoken of in the epistle to the Hebrews, which remains for the people of God in heaven. Now if the weekly Sabbath, while it typified the heavenly state, did also typify the Gospel dispensation, it differed from every other type of the Bible by being at the same time a type of two entirely distinct events. Be that as it may, however, if the Sabbath was a type of heaven as well as of the Gospel dispensation, it is contrary to all reason to suppose it blotted out until heaven itself has taken its place, since every type must remain until the substance of it has come.

Mr. Brown here introduced the well-known maxim, that "as long as the reason of a law remains, the law itself remains." Now the reason for the law of the Sabbath has never yet ceased. Not so of the rites and sacrifices of the Jewish economy, the reasons for which ceased as soon as Christ offered himself a sacrifice. The work of creation is the reason given for the law of the Sabbath; and lest we should mistake on this point, and class it with the laws of the Levitical service, the reason is embodied in the law itself. This reason possesses now all the force it ever did; hence the law itself must remain in force.

There is one circumstance, which it seems impossible to account for, if the Sabbath was repealed by Christ; and that is, that no charge of Sabbath-breaking was ever preferred by the Jews against the early Christians. The believing Jews were exceedingly tenacious of their old customs, and desirous to impose them upon the Gentiles. Their attachment to the Sabbath is unquestionable. Now how shall we account for the silence of history, both sacred and profane, concerning complaints of the nature referred to, except by supposing that the early Christians kept the Sabbath, and thus gave no occasion for such complaints? We are sometimes told, that although the Sabbath was actually repealed when Christ died, yet the Apostles did not think it prudent to divulge this doctrine, lest it should hinder their influence among the Jews; and therefore they kept the Sabbath for many years, or until after the destruction of Jerusalem. There is not a particle of evidence to support such a conceit. But supposing it to be true, is not the same reason applicable now? Only a very small number of the Jews have yet received Christ; and if it was the duty of the early Christians to regard the Sabbath, in order that they might thereby commend Christianity to the Jews, is it not equally the duty of Christians now? Strange that those who make so much of the example of the early Christians in one respect, should refuse to follow what they acknowledge to have been their example in another respect. Instead of following this inspired example, however, they adopt the very spirit, as well as the practice, of Constantine the Great, who was so governed by enmity to that unfortunate race, that he said, "Let us have nothing in common with that odious brood, the Jews." This is the true reason why the Sabbath was set aside by Christians in the later ages of the Church. The Apostles give it no sanction by precept or practice. To charge them with teaching its abrogation, while they continued to observe it, is to impute to them a truckling and time-serving spirit of which they were never guilty. It is a libel upon them.

SABBATH DISCUSSION IN PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The readers of the Recorder were informed last week, that the subject of the Sabbath was receiving some attention in Providence, R. I. The question under consideration has been, whether there is sufficient authority for keeping the first day of the week as the Sabbath? Monday evening, Dec. 21st, was appointed for continuing the discussion of this question before the Sunday-School Teachers' Association. The occasion drew together a large audience, embracing most of the Clergymen and Sunday-School Teachers in the City. After the usual religious exercises, the minutes of the previous meeting were read, in which all the arguments which had been presented in favor of the first day were enumerated. It was maintained, that the change of the Sabbath was hinted at in the 118th Psalm; that it was prophesied of in the 65th chapter of Isaiah; that it was clearly inferable from the appearances of Christ to his disciples on the first day, the breaking of bread at Troas, the collection at Corinth, and the expression "Lord's day" in the Apocalypse.

Rev. Dr. Cleveland, who had been appointed to lead in the discussion, was not present. A letter from him was read, however, in which he declined to fulfill the appointment, mainly on the ground that the question had already been sufficiently debated, and that to continue it farther would promote neither the designs nor the interests of the Association.

Rev. Lucius Crandall, who was named at the previous meeting as an advocate of the seventh day, being present, was invited to go forward and present the views of the Seventh-day Baptists in opposition to the positions which had been taken at that meeting. This he did in a manner calculated to convince the audience, that those who observe the seventh day are well acquainted with the common arguments from Scripture in favor of the first day, and well prepared to meet them.

Mr. Crandall was followed by Rev. Thorndike C. Jameson, who reviewed the objections which had been presented, and asserted, in conclusion, that whatever difficulty there might be in sustaining the first day from the Scriptures, it was plain from history that the first day had been observed by the great mass of Christians from the times of the apostles.

Geo. B. Utter replied to Mr. Jameson, and endeavored to show, by numerous extracts from the most authentic histories, that during the first six centuries of the Christian church the Lord's day was regarded, not as a Sabbath, but only as a festival, upon which labor of various kinds might be performed; that during this period the Sabbath was strictly observed in many of the churches; and that the notion of the Lord's day having taken the place of the Sabbath, and being kept in obedience to the fourth commandment, instead of originating with the apostles, could only be traced back some two hundred and fifty years.

Rev. Mr. Granger followed. He was pleased with the Christian spirit manifested by his Seventh-day Baptist brethren, and could not deny that the positions which they had taken appeared very plausible. Indeed, if he were living among those who observe the seventh day, he was not certain but that he might deem it expedient to keep that day with them. He could not agree with those who saw evidence of a change of the Sabbath in the Psalms, or in the prophecy of Isaiah. Nevertheless, there were many delightful associations clustering around the first day of the week, which made him love it, and desire to keep it. Upon the whole, he thought there might be very good Christians observing both days, and he did not think it worth while, therefore, to contend very sharply about the matter.

Rev. Lucius Crandall closed the debate. He spoke of the necessary connection between the sabbatic institution and the day which God had seen fit to bless. In view of this connection, he made a powerful appeal to those who are endeavoring to secure a better observance of the weekly rest, to direct their efforts to the day which God has commanded, and upon which alone he has pronounced his blessing.

ANOTHER FORM OF PETITION.

Since the publication of the various Forms of Petition, the following has come to hand. As it presents the desired object in a very clear manner, and may meet the views of some persons better than a more specific form, we give it an insertion:—

To the Honorable the Legislature of the State of New York:

We the undersigned, inhabitants of the County of   and vicinity, respectfully represent—1st. That the Constitution of this State now, as heretofore, guarantees to all mankind the "free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference;"—2d. That it has pleased the people of this State to secure by legislative enactments, to the observers of the first-day of the week as a day of worship, the uninterrupted enjoyment of their profession, and protection against the liability to be compelled to serve as jurors, witnesses, or parties in civil suits, or in the military in times of peace, on that day; whereas the observers of the seventh day of the week, (called Saturday,) as the Sabbath devoted to religion and the worship of God, are subject, by reason of this discriminating law, to be compelled to defend suits at law or suffer judgment without being able to obtain redress for losses and sacrifices made therefrom, and are liable also to be called to act as jurors and witnesses, and in other respects to suffer inconvenience or interruption on that day. We therefore respectfully request, that such laws may be enacted by your Honorable Body as will secure to them that equal protection guaranteed to them by the Constitution. And, as in duty bound, we will ever pray.

☞ The following communication was designed for our last week's paper, and would have appeared then if it had reached us in time. It contains suggestions, however, which are worthy of grave consideration, on which account we give it a place this week, although the meetings of the Associations, to which it alludes, are past:—

LEGAL PROTECTION OF SABBATH-KEEPERS.

DeRuyter, Dec. 18, 1846.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I am well pleased with the interest that Seventh-day Baptists generally manifest in the subject of legal protection in the observance of the Sabbath. By the efforts now being made, we hope to gain our constitutional rights, and also bring the Sabbath into notice in high places, and eventually secure the repeal of those laws that give a preference to one day as holy time above another. Might and popular prejudice are now against us. We have as yet failed in obtaining our just rights at the hands of our law-makers. Our best efforts will doubtless be required to secure these rights. The wrongs which we have suffered urge us to these efforts; and how any Sabbath-keeper can be uninterested in this matter, I know not. Indeed, I am not so much afraid of inaction as overaction. I see that some are striking at once for a repeal of all laws that acknowledge the first day of the week as holy time. And I must suppose, of course, that the advocates of this measure hope to succeed. Many, I know, are unprepared for it, and see, or seem to see, in it the defeat of the efforts for Sabbath protection. Union in our efforts is as important as the objects for which those efforts are made. If there is not good hope of success in the greater of these objects, a wise policy would not sacrifice the less. It then should first be settled generally, if not unanimously, whether our efforts should be directed for a repeal of Sunday-sanctification laws, or for Sabbath protection. This matter, I hope, the Associations will consider in their semi-annual sessions. And the three other churches in the State will doubtless act in concert with them.

There can be no question but that the Sunday-sanctification laws should be repealed, as they are both partial and unconstitutional, and all should be left free to make their selection of days for worship and for labor. But he must be madly visionary who hopes, by a few efforts, to cause right to triumph over might, when that might is sustained by such an overwhelming majority, and strengthened by prejudices, interests, and superstitions of immemorial origin. It is much easier to persuade sinners to be reconciled to God, than to induce professors of religion to be reconciled to the observance of his Sabbath. Our law-makers are either conscientious observers of Sunday, or of their own popularity, and are as careful of the one as of the other. A repeal of Sunday-sanctification laws would be opposed by nearly all but Seventh-day Baptists, and perhaps Quakers. And until a mighty agitation should shake the prejudices and superstitions of the mass of community, there could be but little hope of success. The most that can be hoped, by an agitation of this question, is that the attention of some may be seriously called to the claims of the Bible Sabbath. And may not all this be effected by our petition for a redress of grievances? The recital of the wrongs that we, as observers of the Sabbath, have suffered in consequence of that observation, while it might induce our legislature to grant us relief, would lead many to examine the reasons of our faith and practice, some of whom, at least, we have reason to hope, would be led, by the scriptural authority for our course, to go and do likewise. So soon as we can secure the protection which our Constitution guarantees in the observance of the Sabbath, as guardians of the truth it will probably be our duty to be as clamorous against these organic sins as against individual sins. But till then I hope we may not awake the slumbering energies of a corrupted Christianity to oppose the passage of a Bill giving us the privileges that others enjoy. The opposition that we shall meet in petitioning for our rights, will be small in comparison with the deluge of wrath and execration that will fall on our pitiless heads when we attack the strongholds of Christianized sin, and legalized religion. If we make war upon these strongholds before we are safely entrenched behind statutary laws fully protecting us, then may we ask in vain for help, and be left to the merciless harrassment of evil-disposed persons.

I hope the act attached to a petition in a late Recorder may be detatched therefrom before it shall be sent to the Legislature. 1st. Because we are not petitioning for what most of the citizens enjoy already; sufficient protection is already granted to Sunday observers, and this act would not help them. We want a special act for ourselves, equal to the one now on our statute books for others. 2d. A bill was sent last year, drawn by hands unskilled in legal technicalities, which served as a basis for a very deficient bill that was reported to the House. There are members of the present Legislature, who are friendly to our cause, who are better prepared to frame laws than most men who have another calling.

J. BAILEY.

EQUALITY OF RELIGIOUS RIGHTS.

In consequence of the failure to receive, in time, the proof-sheet of the article under the above caption, which was sent to our correspondent, W. M. F, for him to revise, but being delayed in its return through the inattention of the bearer until too late, it appeared without the author's corrections and additions. The former are no longer available; but the latter we give to complete it.

The first addition, thus omitted was intended to be inserted after the word PENAL, at the end of the paragraph near the bottom of the first column; and the second portion, to run in at the end of the article.

If not irrelevant, it might be deemed descending to trifling, if not to levity, to discuss and carry out the legitimate principles, predicated on the decision, that marriage is a civil contract, and show, that all matters connected with it partake of the same nature; consequently, while our Sunday laws vitiate all civil contracts, they apply equally to marriage and betrothment. If this be a just deduction, young ladies will have to be careful not to engage themselve on Sunday, lest it destroy their claims to damages in case of breach of promise. A receipt given on Sunday, does not stand in law; a bargain made on Sunday, is not binding; why, then, should betrothments? If both betrothment and marriage are civil contracts, why not invalidate them, at pleasure, when entered into on Sunday? and why not fine the minister for executing judicial functions and taking fees on that day? If the sticklers for Sunday laws can acquire a claim to a man's purse, by an engagement or bargain, and become a copartner in property, by a matrimonial speculation, consummated on that day, and the minister drive the almighty Dollar to the greatest advantage, by certifying to civil contracts—why cannot an irreproachable Sabbath-keeper, who conscientiously observes the seventh day to the Lord, and attaches no sacredness to first day, nor entertains any veneration for penal laws to enforce its observance—why, I ask, cannot he enjoy a like immunity, and employ the same time to his own benefit?

While we should be careful, in seeking redress, not to ask for too little, or what might compromise our rights and dignity as freemen, we must, also, be careful not to ask for too much, or that which may forfeit our principles and condemn our sincerity, in resisting measures to legalize a Sabbath; for in some of the suggestions to obtain our object—equal right, equal privileges—it is proposed to legalize fourth day, or part of it, as well as first day, and Christmas also. Our constant professions have been against legalizing any day for religious purposes, but leaving it entirely to the consciences of men and their God, and we have uniformly protested against the right to legislate in the premises at all. We disclaim all right to legislate and legalize any special day as a day of religious rest; and I am confident that no Sabbath-keeper would ever demand any legislation to secure any peculiar privileges to himself or his denomination; but legislation having been made to bear onerously and unequally upon us, we ask, and shall persist in demanding, the restoration of our religious rights; and this, most undoubtedly, would be best accomplished, (and all Sabbath-keepers would be satisfied with it,) by repealing the existing (blue) laws, and passing a general law to protect all persons from molestation, at all times, when they meet to worship Almighty God, without giving any preference to any one or two days in each week, and one special day every year; and also securing all persons against any legal process or civil service on such weekly day as they believe the Almighty has required of them, and they regularly and conscientiously devote to religious worship; but as we cannot look for this recognition of the true and broad principles of primitive republicanism, in these degenerate days, we must be circumspect in any appeals we make, that we do not sacrifice principle and compound with the oppressor to gain our end. We contend that no human power has authority to legislate and enforce any day of rest, or confer any sacredness on any portion of time; therefore, to be consistent, we must not ask any legislative body to legalize any day, or part of a day, for religious purposes, but merely to yield equal privileges, to all persons, to worship their Maker, according to the dictates of their own consciences, without any favor, distinction, or constraint.

Sabbath Lectures and Discussion at Mystic Bridge, Ct.—On Monday evening, 14th inst., according to notice previously given, Eld. Lucius Crandall lectured upon the subject of the Sabbath at Mystic Bridge, Ct. At the close of his lecture, opportunity was given for any who pleased, to ask questions or raise objections. Some time was spent in presenting and answering objections; and at the close of the exercises it was determined to hold a meeting for the same purpose on the following evening. This second meeting was well attended; and at its close notice was given that a similar meeting would be held on the next evening. Thus the discussion was kept up for three evenings in succession, during which the claims of the Sabbath were presented, and the objections of those who observe the first-day answered, in the presence of a large and interested audience. Those who were present express their satisfaction with the course which the discussion took, and a hope that it will lead to good results.

Secession from the Roman Church.—A meeting of rather a novel character took place at the Broadway Tabernacle, in this city, on Sunday, Dec. 13. It seems that a body of German Catholics, numbering some two hundred, among whom is a priest, have been for several months past in the habit of meeting regularly for the purpose of studying the Bible. There has been no Protestant among them, nor was it known beyond their own circle, until quite lately, that they were thus engaged. Having matured their views, they engaged the Tabernacle for the purpose of making them known, and formally seceding from the Roman Church. The statement which was read says that they are convinced that a catholic church was established by Christ and his Apostles, but that Rome has superadded to that church many things not originally authorized, and some which were distinctly forbidden. This movement seems to be somewhat like that of John Ronge and his adherents, and if we rightly understand it, they do not propose to become Protestants, but to commence a reformation of their own church.

American Tract Society.—The Secretaries of the American Tract Society have issued a circular, in which they inform the public that the new Tract House is completed. It has been erected by means of a loan, which they expect to pay from the annual rents of parts of the building not occupied by the Society. From the circular it appears, that during twenty-one years of the Society's operations more than 1,200 different publications, including 200 books, have been prepared and stereotyped in the various languages spoken on this continent, of which more than 85,000,000 copies, or more than 1,700,000,000 pages, have been circulated. More than 2,000 publications have been prepared and issued abroad, under the sanction of the Committee, in nearly one hundred different languages and dialects, and $292,000 have been remitted to various missionary stations and to societies and individuals on the continent of Europe, to multiply these "leaves of the tree of life for the healing of the nations."

Revival in the Navy.—A letter from an officer of the United States frigate Congress, published in the Phliadelphia North American, states that there is a remarkable attention to religion among the seamen in this ship. It commenced in a Bible-class, held by the chaplain Mr. Colton, and the interest became such that prayer meetings were held three evenings in the week, at which perhaps some sixty seamen would be seen on their knees at prayer. At some of them several would be heard making confession of their sins and asking for prayers, and others expressing their joy and hope in the Saviour. Quite a number profess to have had their hearts renewed. The work proceeds without opposition from the officers, or any of those on board.

Rome and the New Pope.—One of our exchanges says that five new daily and weekly papers are announced for publication in Rome. Criminal trials are hereafter to be in public, and the code is to be revised. An income tax is said to be intended. The tax on salt, and corn ground at the mill, are to be abolished. Attempts, by poison, on the Pope's life, are hinted at. His meals are said to be inspected by a chemist, and the elements with which the mass is celebrated are provided from his own household, when he is to celebrate it any where. These rumors may be unfounded, but the anonymous attacks on him continue, and indicate bitter feelings of opposition.

The Youth's Cabinet.—The January number of this popular monthly commences the second volume. It contains not only a great variety of interesting reading matter, but several original embellishments, and a steel vignette which equals any thing furnished by the most costly magazines. We cannot too highly commend the diligence and taste of both editor and publisher. They deserve the success which during the past year has attended their efforts to please and instruct. Edited by Rev. Francis C. Woodworth. Published by D. Austin Woodworth, 135 Nassau-st. Terms one dollar a year in advance.

Phonotypy.—Messrs. Andrews & Boyle have commenced publishing, at Boston, a weekly sheet in the Phonotypic Alphabet, called "The Anglo Saxon." It is to be a good family paper as well as an advocate and specimen of the language reform. Terms $2 per annum.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Congress was in session only four days last week, having adjourned over from Thursday to Monday on account of Christmas.

In the SENATE, bills were introduced, to remodel the consular system; to create the office of Surveyor of Oregon; for the relief of the widow of Alex. Hamilton; to instruct the Post Office Committee to inquire into the expediency of transporting free mails to the army; to instruct the Committee on Naval Affairs to inquire into the utility of iron as a material for constructing vessels of war, and providing for the repairs of government vessels by contract. A bill was reported establishing general pre-emption to actual settlers of public lands, and providing for the sale of the mineral lands. J. M. Clayton presented a petition, signed by men of all parties, praying that Congress should use speedy and efficient means for terminating the war with Mexico, and ensuring an honorable peace. The bill from the House, for the admission of Iowa, was passed.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, bills were introduced to graduate the sales of the Public Lands; to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of claims for French spoliations; for the improvement of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Arkansas rivers; to remove obstructions in the Savannah river; for a new Custom House at Savannah. The bill for the admission of Iowa was passed. Mr. Douglass reported a bill to establish a Territorial Government in Oregon, which was made the order of the day for the first Tuesday of January. Much time was spent in Committee of the Whole on the President's Message, particularly that part of it which relates to the war. Several speeches were made, in which the war was pronounced unjust and unnecessary.

LATER FROM MEXICO.

The packet ship Norma arrived at New York from Havana, on the 23d inst., bringing Mexican dates several days later than previously received. The following is from the Sun:—

Our advices by this arrival lead to only one conclusion—a desperate battle is to be fought at or near San Luis Potosi. Mexico will have thirty thousand of her best troops in that conflict, and the United States will probably have at least half that number.

Accounts from San Luis praise the discipline and valor of the army. There were twenty-five thousand men, with fifty-two pieces of artillery. Five thousand additional troops were expected daily. The magazines of powder and the stores of balls and other missiles are said to exceed belief. Every piece of iron that can be found is converted into pikes or other deadly weapons. In one store-house alone there are two hundred mechanics working day and night, mounting guns and manufacturing munitions of war. There are five hundred more at work in the fortifications, which are being strengthened in every possible manner. One thousand women, filled with enthusiasm in the national cause, had come down to the camp from San Diego and Tlascala, to aid in making articles for the soldiers.

Santa Anna had a grand review of the whole army on the 13th November. It is described as a magnificent pageant. So overpowered was he by the boundless enthusiasm which greeted him as he passed along the lines, that his feelings overcame him, and the tears rolled down his swarthy cheeks, amid the prolonged huzzas of the various regiments, and cries of "Victory or Death!" "God and Liberty!" "Long live Santa Anna!" "We will beat the Yankees this time!" &c. &c.

The Church has been pressed into the service of the country, Government having exacted contributions upon the property of "the secular and regular clergy of both sexes," to the amount of two millions of dollars, for which drafts have been issued as follows: Archbishop $1,000,000; on the Bishop of Puebla $400,000; on the Bishop of Guadalaxara $200,000; on the Bishop of Michoacan $170,000; on the Bishop of Oajaca $100,000; on the Bishop of Durango $80,000. Popular opinion was in favor of this exaction, as the Church had recently shown itself too officious in the cause of the monarchists.

PEACE OR WAR WITH MEXICO.—The N. Y. Tribune of Thursday morning last says that private advices from most reliable sources in Washington assure us that the Executive now meditates the appointment of a High Commission to proceed to Mexico and make one commanding effort to close the war in that country either by negotiation or the sword. The Commissioners, as at present in contemplation, are Senator Thomas H. Benton, (who is to be invested with the chief command of our military and naval forces under the title of Lieutenant General,) Senator John J. Crittenden, of Ky., and Governor Silas Wright of our State. They are to be clothed with almost unlimited powers to prosecute the war in such manner as to them shall seem most expedient and to terminate it whenever terms shall be proffered by Mexico which they may deem admissible. Any adjustment they might make would of course be subject to the approval or rejection of the Senate, but there can be no shadow of doubt of its ratification.

THE STEAMER ATLANTIC.—The New London Star says that the body of another victim of the wreck was found about fifty rods from the scene of disaster, supposed to be that of Dr. Tourney, a boot on one leg having his name as a mark. The manufacturer's name was chafed off, but the number of his stand, 265 North Market-st., remained, and was intelligible. It was entirely divested of clothing, and of every kind of apparel except the boot before mentioned, was much bruised and mangled, the skull was gone, and one leg wrenched off. Two skulls were picked up on the beach.

The body of John Walton, (father of the Walton family,) was also found, not much mangled, but the lineaments of the face were entirely destroyed. Mr. Walton was recognized by his dress, and articles found upon his person, among which was a silver hunting watch, a jack-knife, $295 ($285 in bills and $10 in gold,) and some other things of little worth. The money was discovered wrapped in a piece of blanket, which, it is presumed, preserved its "circulating" value. Pieces of trunks and valises, merchandize boxes, and other comparatively valueless articles, have been collected. On the fragment of one trunk were the initials "W. S."—another had "A. J. Collamore, Boston," with a dark-colored wallet, containing a small sum of money.

BREADSTUFFS.—The N. Y. Tribune says that the shipments of breadstuffs to Europe continue to be very large, and would be still larger but for the scarcity of tonnage to carry produce away. The exports in the first 22 days of December have been, flour, 149,600 bbls.; wheat, 179,500 bushels; corn, 154,000 bushels; rye, 60,000 bushels; barley, 19,450 bushels; oats, 10,300 bushels. Total, 423,250, and reducing the flour to wheat, 1,096,450 bushels. The entire shipments of flour from January 1st to 22d December, have been, flour, 1,110,100 bbls.; wheat, 1,380,100 bushels; corn, 1,397,700 bushels; rye flour, to 1st December, 11,175 bbls.; corn meal, 4,236 hhds., and 81,693 bbls. The above, with the flour and meal reduced to grain, form an aggregate of upward of eight millions of bushels. To this total a considerable amount must be added for the exports of barley, rye, and oats, not included.

HORRID MASSACRE OF NESTORIANS.

The Courier publishes from the correspondence of the London papers a long account of the massacre of a large number of Nestorian Christians by order of their great persecutor, Beder Khan Bey, in the month of October last. It seems that Beder Khan Bey collected various detachments of troops under the command of the Beys of Haidasia and Bevari, himself taking command of a large body of Kurus, and marched into the country of the defenceless and unresisting Nestorians. He then divided his force into small parties, and fell upon the villages. The correspondent of the Morning Chronicle gives the following revolting details of this expedition:—

Thirty-six of these villages at the least, have been thus made the scenes of the most harrowing wholesale murders. To speak of their having been sacked, plundered and burnt to the ground, would be to draw attention to an incident of small importance in the face of the greater horrors which these bloody barbarians committed. Men, women and children, crying for mercy, the women and children, in the agonies of terror, were put to death by every species of torture which cruelty could invent. Happy were those who were shot, or who fell by the sword, who had not their bowels ripped out of them while living, or those who were not impaled amid the shouts and laughter of the murderers. Two of the bishops of the Nestorians, if not more, were impaled, and several of the priests. But that was not the worst torture that was inflicted. Children were torn from their mothers, some from their mothers' breasts, in presence of their mothers, who were obliged, screeching, to look on, put in the most shocking manner, to death. The mothers afterward were sacrificed. The youth of both sexes underwent sacrifices which cannot be mentioned, before their throats, in disgust and satiety, were cut. The pen refuses to record more of these atrocities, though I might go on, and allude to abominations of cruelty, and worse than cruelty, which call for a retribution as nearly equal to their bestial ruthlessness in severity as can be inflicted. Three thousand of the Nestorians have perished in this massacre, on the lowest calculation. The most extensive slaughter took place at a large village, or township, called Bias, where Beder Khan Bey was himself present. Here the two bishops were impaled, and from this place were sent the three hundred heads (pickled) to the Pacha of Moussoul, with the insulting message, that if the Porte presumed to molest the sender, he would send to Constantinople, instead of Nestorian, Turkish heads enough to make a pyramid.

While these things were happening, a council, over which the Nestorian Patriarch, who has escaped from Moussoul, presided, was held at a town called, if I recollect aright, Artchy, one of the principal Nestorian settlements. Here it was determined that, as resistance was vain, the whole people of the Nestorians should emigrate, without an hour's delay, into Persia, where a numerous body of their countrymen are settled on the banks of the lake Oroomiah. The execution of this design was, however, difficult, perilous and disastrous. The fugitives were obliged to leave behind them all their property. Most of them crossed the mountains in straggling, frightened, wretched bands. But one corps of emigrants, stronger than the others—commanded, I am told, by the Patriarch—were attacked on their passage by the soldiers of Beder Khan Bey. After an obstinate conflict, in which many fell on both sides, the Nestorians gained the victory.

But the whole mountain district of Kurdistan, on the Turkish side, is at this moment filled with houseless, famished wanderers, hiding themselves in dens and caves, under all the worst circumstances and guises of misery, from their pursuers. Beder Khan Bey swore, before he started on his expedition, with all the solemnities of his creed, before two Imaums, that he would exterminate the whole Nestorian people; and all of them who have not strength to reach Persia will certainly experience the full realization of this oath.

The same correspondent says that this ruthless onset was doubtless provoked by the act of the Turkish Cabinet, in deposing Beder Khan Bey, from jealousy of his power, and this, it was supposed, had been done by an arrangement with the Nestorian Patriarch then at Mosul, who had promised the aid of the Nestorians in accomplishing this object. These people were thus exposed to the fury of the barbarians, and the Porte could take no efficient steps for their protection. Several of the foreign envoys at the Turkish Cabinet, including Mr. Wellesley and M. de Bourqueney, have sent in very strong notes upon the subject, insisting that Beder Khan Bey is a monster who must be crushed, and the Porte professes the same sentiments. This, moreover, is more easily said than done; for he has a force of 40,000 men at his command, and is virtual sovereign of the whole mountain district.

SUMMARY.

The brig Palestine, belonging to New York, put into Newport, R. I., in distress, and while there lying at anchor, the captain and mate being on shore, one of the hands, named Willis, belonging to Block Island, broke open the captain's chest and took out three thousand dollars in doubloons, and six hundred Spanish milled dollars. Willis took one of the boats belonging to the brig and made his escape. The boat has been recovered, but no trace of the robber has been found.

The steward (a negro) of one of the principal hotels at Cincinnati, was shot on the 16th under the following circumstances:—He had been in the habit of "taking observations" through a pane of glass over the door of the room occupied by a gentleman and his wife, and at the last time of his appearance, he was shot by the gentleman, who gave himself up to the Mayor, and then gave bail for his farther appearance. The negro died of the wound.

We understand, says the Newburyport Herald, that a new expedition to Oregon is fitting out in this town. A company formed for this purpose have purchased the brig Eveline, at a cost of $5,000, for the voyage. She is to be placed in charge of Mr. Goodwin, who is well acquainted on the coast, having been for some time mate of the Chenamus, when she was engaged in the Oregon and Sandwich Island trade.

The N. Y. Tribune says that the Bremen ship Ligonia, 110 days out, arrived yesterday with over 300 paupers, 34 of whom were dead, and as many more sent to the City Hospital in a hopeless situation. Another vessel, the Pontiac, arrived from Liverpool after a passage of 63 days! Nineteen passengers died on the way, and the crew were reduced nearly to starvation.

The nucleus of a new State has just appeared in the north-west. It is about to be christened the Territory of Minesota, (Mi-ne-so-ta,) and, in some few years, it will be cleared, settled, peopled, and covered with network of railroads and canals, and become a powerful State, represented in the Federal Congress by two Senators and a legion of Members.

A case is now on trial in Mississippi, which, if it takes a proper direction, will go far to abate the rage for dueling. A law of the State of Mississippi requires that a man shall pay the debts of each individual whom he kills in a duel, and if an honest jury will sustain the law, and the defendant is able to pay, he will be careful how he engages in a duel.

Another invention, and to the newspaper profession the most astounding of all, has just been brought into successful operation in this city. We allude to Clay & Rosenburgh's Steam Type Setter, which by the aid of two men and three boys can put up as much printed matter as ten compositors can by the present system.

The National Era, the new liberty paper at Washington, will appear early in January; G. Bailey, Jr., of Cincinnati, Editor; L. P. Noble, of New York, Publisher.

The Lowell Courier says—On the 10th of last June, a large new mill was commenced on the Middlesex Corporation in this city. The mill building, which is 154 feet long, 48 feet wide, and seven working stories high, and made all of brick, was finished, and weaving was commenced on the 1st of October; but the carding machines were not ready for work until twelve o'clock on Saturday night, 28th ult. On Monday morning they went into operation, and we saw a pair of blue cassimere pantaloons, the wool of which they were made having been carded, spun, dressed, wove and finished within bell-hours on the same day, in this new mill.

The Philadelphia Gazette says:—Mr. Whitney, the projector of the great Oregon Railroad, has just returned from a visit to the West. He was eminently successful in rousing public attention to the great enterprise. At Wheeling, Cincinnati, Columbus, Louisville, and many other points, public meetings were held and resolutions adopted in favor of the road. A similar demonstration will soon be made in Baltimore. We trust that Congress will act upon the subject definitely and satisfactorily during the present session.

Within the last six months, 26 vessels, ships, brigs and schooners, have been reported as missing. Some of them were last spoken, or heard of, on their outward cruise, others with the objects of their voyage accomplished, with full cargoes, and crews rejoicing at the prospect of soon again joining in the family circle around the old hearth stones at home, and yet months have passed away and all tidings of their fate are buried in obscurity.

A traveler writing from Louisville, says:—We arrived here yesterday, (Sunday) morning, prepared to discharge the freight for this city, but the Captain found himself brought up by a notice that a fine of $50 would be the consequence of discharging any goods on Sunday.

Professor Henry, of Princeton College, who has recently been appointed Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, and who is one of the most distinguished scholars and profound philosophers which our country has produced, was originally an apprentice to the silversmith's trade.

The trustees of the village of Auburn have authorized a select committee to purchase two hundred cords of wood, and to dispose of it to the destitute, at a price not exceeding its cost.

The steamer Mohegan, running as a freight-boat between New York and Bridgeport, in connection with the Housatonic Railroad, was wrecked on Saturday at 3 1-2 o'clock, by running on the Gangway Rocks, a short distance below Sand's Point Light. The accident is said to have occurred in consequence of the extreme low tide. A hole was stove in her bottom, and she was immediately run aground at Cow Bay, where she sunk within two feet of hurricane-deck.

The products of labor in the Ohio, Penitentiary during the year ending on the 30th ult., were about forty-four thousand dollars. The expenditures during the same period were $27,000—leaving a balance in favor of the institution of $17,000.

The Scientific American, says that Mr. John Scott, of Philadelphia, has invented a composition for coating cannon balls, which will become ignited by the escape of the ball from the cannon, and the burning mass being distributed among the splinters made by its passage through the timbers of houses or vessels, will produce combustion wherever it strikes.

The Hon. Amos Kendall contends that the first act of Congress, after assembling, ought to be the passage of an act appropriating the necessary funds to secure to the government the use of the telegraph from Washington to New Orleans during the progress of the war. He says that by a vigorous effort it can be placed in operation on the whole route in four months.

Two hundred and thirty-three canal boats, 16 tow boats, 7 steamboats, and 5 sloops, are laid up in the basin at Albany.

By the will of Elijah Waters, Esq., of Milbury, whose decease occurred a few days since, the First Congregational Society receives in cash $5,000, and the Parsonage $1,600 more; American Bible Society $1,500; A. B. Foreign Missions $1,000; Home Missionary Society $1,000.

It has been ascertained by Lt. Emery, that the altitude of Santa Fe is 6000 feet above St. Louis, Mo., nearly 7000 feet above the level of the sea.

Since the loss of the Atlantic, the proprietors of the Worcester and Cleopatra, have furnished those vessels with masts.

It is now confidently asserted that Queen Victoria has consented to have Canada united to the American States by a bridge over the Niagara.

The Milwaukie Sentinel says that Marshall M. Strong, of Racine, W. T., resigned his seat in the Convention, in consequence of the adoption of the article on the rights of married women, and the exemption of property from forced sale.

The President's Message was received at New Orleans by an Express of the Commercial Times forty-eight hours in advance of the mail. The distance between Montgomery and Mobile, 160 miles, was run in nine hours.

The sales of public lands in the Milwaukie District during the month of November, amounted to 22,311 acres, mostly in forty-acre lots, and the receipts to $28,642 71.

As Herr Driesbach, the celebrated lion-tamer, was in the cage of a new lion, undergoing the training process, he was attacked by the savage animal, and had his suit of clothes, made of the strongest Russian duck used for such occasions, torn from his person, but without receiving bodily injury.

The publishers of the St. Louis Republican expressed the President's Message and the late foreign news from Baltimore to St. Louis in the remarkably short space of four days. The usual mail time is seven.

It is a fact—though we can now scarcely believe it—that the bodies of the persons who perished in the steamer Atlantic, on reaching the shore, were robbed of money and valuables; and great quantities of valuable articles have been stolen from the wreck and carried to various places on the main land.

The average weight of the mails that leave New York in one week, according to the Postmaster General's report, is over sixty thousand pounds.

The Capitol of Iowa is built of marble, at a cost already of $80,000, and it is said it will cost $20,000 more to finish it.

It is ascertained that the late hurricane in Havana destroyed 1275 houses, and injured 1038 more. Most of the crops and very many cattle were destroyed.

BEALES' DAGUERRIAN GALLERIES.

MR. A. J. BEALES invites the attention of the public to his Premium One Dollar Daguerrian Galleries, at Nos. 156 and 175 Broadway, New-York. Having adopted the latest improvements, he has reducrd his prices one-half, and guarantees to take pictures equal to any in the city, in any position or dress, and with any desirable shade or color. Gold lockets of all descriptions constantly on hand. Attendance from eight in the morning until sunset.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

The Winter Term of this Institution will commence on the 6th of January, 1847, and continue fourteen weeks, under the care of J. R. IRISH & G. EVANS.
DERUYTER, Nov. 1, 1846.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.
ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

ELIHU BURRITT, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in ADVANCE.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life. It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

Miscellaneous.

BUSH AMUSEMENT IN AUSTRIALIA.

THE KANGAROO.

The Kangaroo is an extraordinary animal. There are several kinds of them, and they are of various sizes. The Kangaroo forester is about five feet high, and when pursued by dogs, it leaps or bounds from fifteen to twenty paces. The animal goes on his hind legs, steering his body with his tail. His fore legs are only about half the length of his hind legs. He is generally of the same color as the English hare, and his flesh greatly resembles in taste and appearance that of the hare. The tail, which sometimes weighs twenty pounds, is considered the best part of him. It makes excellent soup—indeed, equal to any ox-tail soup I ever tasted. His movements in his native wilds are extremely graceful. Seldom rapid, until he sees you and your dogs in full chase after him—then he hits out in right earnest, hops, skips, bounds, and if you have not fleet dogs before you, and a fleet-horse under you, he is soon out of sight. In some parts of the colony they are seen in droves, but I never saw more than five or six of them together. I have often seen them quietly feeding among my cattle, with which they seemed to live on peaceable terms.

When hard pressed, they turn about, put their backs to a tree, and for a time successfully fight the dogs, which they often rip up and disable for life. They have been known not only to drown dogs, but also to take a man in their arms, carry him towards a lagoon or deep pond, and there attempt to drown him as they commonly drown a dog, viz. by pressing his head under water. A friend of mine, a Mr. James Aitken, settler on the Clarence river, has lately received in a battle with a Kangaroo, a mark which he will necessarily carry with him to the grave. He was in chase after a Kangaroo, which at last his dogs caught, when my friend inconsiderately dismounted from his horse for the purpose of assisting his dogs. The Kangaroo now left them, and attacked Mr. Aitken, whose lip he completely tore. The Kangaroo is naturally timid, and is easily tamed. He lives entirely on grass; and the female has only two young ones at a time, which she carries in a pouch or bag under her belly. When hard pressed in the chase, she drops them one by one; you can then be certain that she is nearly beat. The skin is remarkably tough, and is converted into stock whips, and sometimes used as a substitute for a blanket in traveling through the bush. With half a dozen of these skins sewed together, a man could comfortably sleep out all night on a bleak, snowy mountain.

EXTRAORDINARY DISCOVERIES AT NINEVEH.

Mr. Layard, an English gentleman, has for the last 12 months been pursuing the track—first laid open by M. Botta—at Nimroud, near Mosul, on the Tigris. His excavations have not only settled the precise position of Nineveh—the very existence of which had become little better than a vague historic dream—but have brought to light some of its buildings, sculptures, and inscriptions. According to accounts received at Constantinople, some months since, Mr. Layard had discovered an entrance formed by two magnificent winged, human-handed lions.

This entrance led him into a hall above 150 feet long and 80 broad, entirely built of slabs of marble, covered with sculptures. The side walls are ornamented with small bas reliefs of the highest interest, battle sieges, lion hunts, &c.; many of them in the finest state of preservation, and all executed with extraordinary spirit. They afford a complete history of the military art among the Assyrians; and prove their intimate knowledge of many of those machines of war whose invention is attributed to the Greeks and Romans—such as the battering-ram, the tower moving on wheels, the catapult, &c.

Nothing can exceed the beauty and elegance of the forms of various arms, swords, daggers, bows, spears, &c. In this great hall there are several entrances, each formed by winged lions, or winged bulls. These led into other chambers, which again branch off into a hundred ramifications. Every chamber is built of slabs covered with sculptures or inscriptions, whence some idea may be formed of the number of objects discovered—the far greater part of which, in fact nearly all, are in the best preservation. Mr. Layard's excavations have been hitherto confined to a very small corner of the mound under which these antiquities have for ages been buried; it is impossible to say what may come out when they can be carried forward on an adequate scale.

MORAL COURAGE IN EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Have the courage to discharge a debt while you have the money in your pocket.

Have the courage to do without that which you do not need, however much your eyes may covet it.

Have the courage to speak your mind, when it is necessary you should do so, and to hold your tongue when it is prudent you should do so.

Have the courage to speak to a friend in a "seedy" coat, even though you are in company with a rich one, and richly attired.

Have the courage to own you are poor, and thus disarm poverty of its sharpest sting.

Have the courage to make a will, and a just one.

Have the courage to tell a man why you will not lend him your money.

Have the courage to "cut" the most agreeable acquaintance you have, when you are convinced that he lacks principle. "A friend should bear with a friend's infirmities," but not with his vices.

Have the courage to show your respect for honesty, in whatever guise it appears; and your contempt for dishonesty and duplicity, by whomsoever exhibited.

Have the courage to wear your old clothes until you can pay for new ones.

Have the courage to obey your Maker, at the risk of being ridiculed by man.

Have the courage to prefer comfort and propriety to fashion, in all things.

Have the courage to acknowledge your ignorance, rather than to seek credit for knowledge under false pretences.

Have the courage to provide an entertainment for your friends, within your means—not beyond.

Have the courage to take a good paper, and to pay for it annually in advance.

THE MOTHER OF OLIVER CROMWELL.

This lady, who is said to have been an undoubted descendant of the royal family of the Stuarts, possessed a higher distinction in her own virtues. Mr. Forester, in his Statesmen of the Commonwealth of England, pays this beautiful tribute to her worth:

"An interesting person, indeed, was this mother of Oliver Cromwell—a woman with the glorious faculty of self-help when other assistance failed her; ready for the demands of fortune in its extremest adverse time—of spirit and energy equal to her mildness and patience; who, with the labor of her own hands, gave dowries to five daughters, sufficient to marry them into families as honorable, but more wealthy than their own; whose single pride was honesty, and whose passion love; who preserved in the gorgeous palace at Whitehall the simple tastes that distinguished her in the old brewery at Huntingdon; whose only care, amid all her splendors, was for the safety of her beloved son in his dangerous eminence; finally, whose closing wish, when that anxious care had outworn her strength, accorded with her whole modest and tender history, for it implored a simple burial in some country churchyard, rather than the ill-suited trappings of state and ceremony wherewith she feared, and with reason feared, that his Highness, the Lord Protector of England, would have her carried to some royal tomb! There was a potrait of her at Hinchinbrook, which, if that were possible, would increase the interest she inspires, and the respect she claims. The mouth, so small and sweet, yet full and firm as the mouth of a hero; the large, melancholy eyes; the light, pretty hair; the expression of a quiet affectionateness suffused over the face, which is so modestly enveloped in a white satin hood; the simple beauty of the velvet cardinal she wears, and the richness of the small jewel that clasps it, seem to present before the gazer her living and breathing character."

LABORING TOO MUCH.

People do not have relaxation enough in New-England. They too generally have a care-worn expression, from infancy to age; and the fact cannot be denied, that anxiety is a weariness to the flesh. We are all utilitarians in this country, especially in the northern States, hardly affording ourselves opportunity for eating or sleeping in the manner which nature demands—for she can only conduct her chemical operations properly, and re-adjust the deranged vital machinery, while we are quietly slumbering. We recruit ourselves and grow fat during a refreshing nap—but exhaust the system, both physically and mentally, in pursuing to excess the ordinary round of every-day business. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is a proverb based on a profound knowledge of the laws of our being.

Females in New England are worse off than the other sex in the deprivation of out-of-door relaxation, as custom has made it vulgar to breathe the fresh air of heaven, unless it is done in a very lady-like manner. Hence they make feeble mothers—look thin, sallow, lank, and die by thousands, prematurely, of diseases that never had been developed had there been less education of the mind, and more of the body, in girlhood.

A sad mistake is produced by a too implicit belief in the adage that "time is money," since the first object of pursuit is, in consequence, made to be cash. Those who attempt to rest reasonably from their labors, at proper periods, are either afraid of not having enough, or are perpetually reminded that idleness ends in want. So the shuttle flies faster than it ought to go; the farmer cheats himself out of all that is worth having, health, by denying himself and his boys a holiday, because time is money and example is everything; merchants in cities toil for the immediate benefit of thieves and paupers—paying taxes in proportion to their income—and leave the world unsatisfied, having never found themselves ready to rest and take comfort. We work too much and too long in New England.

Events of a Day in New York.—A man named Thomas Sue was discovered by officers Millen and Baker in an open lot in Tenth-st., on Tuesday night, in a state of insensibility, in consequence of indulging in the free use of intoxicating liquors. On examining him, there was found a severe wound on his head, which he probably received by falling on a stone. He was taken to the station-house and a physician sent for, who dressed his wounds. He will probably recover.

About 11 o'clock the same night officer Mopper found a man and woman grossly intoxicated, wandering through the streets. Upon going toward them, he ascertained that they had with them a very young child which was nearly naked, and so much chilled and benumbed with the cold as to be almost motionless. He took the wretched creatures to the station-house, where they were taken care of during the night.

On Tuesday at noon officer Harbinson met a small girl some eight years old, apparently in a destitute condition. He stopped her, and questioned her in relation to her means of living, her name, &c. Her tale was a short, but sad one. Her name was Catharine Hope—her father was dead, and her mother was an inmate of the city prison, (but whether for crime or intoxication we did not learn,) leaving her a friendless wanderer in this large city. She was sent to the Long Island Farms.

The Coroner was called to hold an inquest, in a miserable place of abode in Thirty-first-st., upon the body of a poor German, about 30 years of age, who arrived in this country between two and three years ago, and failing to obtain a situation, commenced the humble avocation of a rag-picker, which he has pursued until compelled by sickness to remain within doors, relying upon his wife to provide a bare subsistence, and finally after parting with every article of household goods, save a favorite time-piece, and living in a cold cellar without food and without fire for several days, died on Tuesday—his death-bed consisting of a few shavings, and his old rag-bag rolled up for his pillow. It is of course needless to say that he died from starvation.

These are but the public transpirings of a single day. How much more of equal or even more painful tragedy in low life occurs every day, never known or heard of beyond the little circle of the sufferers themselves, God alone can know.

A Remarkable Case.—A remarkable lawsuit, which has been pending two years in Russia, has been decided by the Emperor. A wealthy Russian General was betrothed to the beautiful daughter of a Polish nobleman, near Warsaw, and obtained his consent to the marriage. On the day fixed for the ceremony, the bridegroom appeared, attended by a captain and two officers, the first disguised as a priest, and the latter as his witnesses, and the unsuspecting bride was married to her Russian lover by this false priest. Two years after, the General became tired of his wife, and desired her to return to her father's house, at the same time informing her how she had been deceived. She at first thought he was jesting, but her cruel husband soon convinced her of the fatal truth, and shut the door of his house upon her. Her indignant father immediately brought an action against the General; but of course, lost it in all the courts against the Russian General, till at length, the sentence came before the Emperor, who decided as follows:—As the General is not married to his wife, the marriage is null and void; but as the wife has been most scandalously imposed upon, he is dismissed with the loss of his salary and his office, without having any claim to another appointment. His whole property is given to the lady whom he has so wantonly deceived, and he is not permitted to marry again.

Moral Effects of Light.—Dark and sombre dwellings and streets are the well-known resort of the most depraved classes in all cities and towns. This may be said to be a universal law of our social economy, and hence it becomes a matter of some importance to consider whether it would not be advisable, on moral grounds also, to attend with greater care to the construction and improvement of the residences of our laboring population. Darkness produces carelessness, and depression of mind, and of the whole nervous system, especially if it be conjoined with idleness, its almost necessary companion. A dark house is generally a dirty house; and it is in dark corners that the poor accumulate filth, which they are too idle to throw out of doors. If such dwellings were exposed to the light of day, a sense of shame would often induce a superior degree of cleanliness; and the cheerfulness of mind which a light house tends to foster would be productive of still greater advantages. Mr. Clay, in his report on Preston, has well said, that "something may be hoped for a people who can feel 'a joy in flowers;'" but the poor can seldom possess even this small advantage in the miserable residence provided for them.

Effect of the absence of Sun and Air.—Dr. Moore, the eloquent and amiable author of "The Use of the Body in relation to the Mind," says—"A tadpole confined in darkness would never become a frog, and an infant being deprived of heaven's free light, will only grow into a shapeless idiot, instead of a beauteous and reasonable thing. Hence, in the deep dark gorges and ravines of the Swiss Valais, where the direct sunshine never reaches, the hideous prevalence of idocy startles the traveler. It is a strange, melancholy idiocy. Many citizens are incapable of any articulate speech; some are deaf, some are blind, some labor under all these privations, and all are misshapen in almost every part of the body. I believe there is, in all places, a marked difference in the healthiness of houses, according to their aspect with regard to the sun, and that those are decidedly the healthiest cæteris paribus, in which all the rooms are, during some part of the day, fully exposed to direct light. It is a well known fact that epidemics attack the inhabitants on the shady side of a street, and totally except those of the other side; and even in endemics, such as ague, the morbid influence is often thus partial in its action."

The First Shot Tower.—The first shot tower ever built was by a Mr. Wyatt, at Bristol, England. He was a plumber by trade, and had long directed his attention, without success, to the manufacture of shot, on a scale more extensive than was in use. One night, while lying in bed ruminating on the subject and greatly perplexed, he fell asleep and dreamed that a person appeared to him on a high tower, with a sieve in one hand, and a ladle of melted lead in the other. The lead was poured into the sieve, which the holder shook violently, and the liquid metal fell in rain drops, but in a solidified state to the lower floor. The imaginary person then descended from the tower and examined some of the shot; and among them Wyatt saw several that were either not perfectly rounded or had tails on them. To separate these from the others, the man removed the shot to an inclined plane; those that were round ran down the plane, while those that were misshapen wriggled over the side. A perfect separation was thus effected. This was a lucky dream for Wyatt, as he sold his patent for £10,000, and a similar method is still employed by manufacturers.

Polish Honey.—Poland is perhaps the greatest honey-producing country in Europe. In the provinces of Podolia, Ukaine, and Volhynia in particular, the cultivation of the honey-bee has long formed an object of national importance; and in these, bee gardens are not only very numerous and extensive, but they are also common in other parts of the kingdom. There are cottages in Poland, with very small portions of land attached to them, on which are to be seen as many as fifty hives; while there are farmers and landed proprietors who are in possession of from one hundred to ten thousand hives. There are some farmers who collect annually more than two hundred barrels of fine honey, each barrel weighing from four to five hundred pounds, exclusive of the wax. A tenant is often in this way able to pay his rent and taxes, to defray his other domestic expenses, and often to accumulate handsome dowries for his daughters.

We knew a little boy, says an exchange, whose father was dead. He was one day writing a copy in his book, "Honor thy father and mother;" he wrote a few lines more, but his memory was at work recalling to mind the happy days he had spent with his dear deceased father, and he wept. He could not go on, but sobbed aloud. "What is the matter, my boy," asked the teacher. "Oh, Mr. Blake, I can't write this copy, for father is dead. Please give me another page, and cut this leaf out—I cannot write it."

VARIETY.

A certain Jesuit preached in Arzzo against the unchaste woman. 'One amongst you, especially,' said he to his female auditory, 'distinguishes herself by her dissolute course of life; the consciousness of shame often amends sinners, and therefore I will here name the woman publicly. But no! Christian charity forbids! she might through this become scandalized. I will, however, do something to point her out; so that, through shame, she may arrive at conversion. I will throw my cap at her. She whom I hit will be the sinner.' The preacher no sooner took his cap in hand, but all stooped as low as possible. 'Good heavens!' exclaimed the priest, 'have they all bad consciences?'

The celebrated blind traveler, Lieutenant Holman, returned to England a few weeks ago, after an absence of upwards of six years, during which time he visited Portugal and Spain, Algeria, and all the places on the Mediterranean, penetrated Egypt and Syria, crossed the desert to Jerusalem, and finally made an extensive tour through the least frequented parts of the southeast of Europe, including Hungary, Transylvania, Servia, Bosinia, &c. As on all former occasions, this extraordinary man traveled perfectly alone. He returned in perfect health and spirits.

Hens require good feed in winter. Cabbages are excellent. Give them large leaves or whole heads and they will dispose of them. FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLICATION OF—
THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE FOREIGN QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical. The 'Foreign Quarterly' is purely literary, being devoted principally to criticisms on foreign Continental Works.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

Remittances and communications must be made in all cases without expense to the publishers. The former may always be done through a Post-master, by handing him the amount to be remitted, taking his receipt, and forwarding the receipt by mail, post paid; or the money may be enclosed in a letter, post paid, directed to the publishers.

N. B. The Postage on all these Periodicals is reduced by the late Post Office law, to about one-third the former rates, making a very important saving in the expense to mail subscribers.

⁂ In all the principal cities and towns throughout the United States to which there is a direct railroad or water communication from the City of New York, these Periodicals will be delivered FREE OF POSTAGE.

This paper is not bound to the creed or cause of any clique, association, party, sect or set of men, but expresses freely the opinions of its editor at the time, and of such contributors as may honor it with their thoughts, or be supposed by the editor to do so. It will be his endeavor to give such a variety and quantity of matter as to meet the wants of every enlightened family, and especially of those which seek more light. He will not only give the daguerreotype likeness of Time as he passes, but will examine every new thing that he meets, and some things that are old, without fear or favor. Where he cannot convince, he will try to be good-natured. Where he cannot satisfy himself of the truth, he will be contented to confess his ignorance. In short, he will endeavor to help forward, in a neighborly way, every thing but Humbug. That he will endeavor to knock down and drag out, even if it should cling to the throne of political power or the horns of the sacred altar.

He will not take an oath never to be wiser. He will not scorn truth, though it may come from an enemy. He will not flatter the poor because he is one of them. He will not hate and abuse the rich because he is not one of them. But he will endeavor to establish a better understanding between the extremes of society—showing both ends that happiness is most likely to be found between them—consisting in a great measure in a mutual endeavor to abolish idleness, disease, poverty and roguery.

With these general purposes, it is the prime object of the editor of this paper to get an honest living.

CLAIMS OF TEMPERANCE ON THE CHRISTIAN WORLD.

Much has been said and written upon this subject, and it is matter of rejoicing that it has not been without effect. It is true, that much has been done intemperately in the great temperance enterprise. It has been the absorbing theme of some persons, while every thing else has been comparatively overlooked. It has been treated as if temperance was religion; and the greatest satisfaction has been expressed with regard to those who have signed the pledge and become members of temperance societies, not considering, at least apparently, that a man may be reclaimed from a life of dissipation without experiencing a change of heart. Doubtless many have been brought to the reception of the truth, and to the faith of Christ Jesus, through their becoming sober men, because through that means they have been induced to visit the house of God; and the incubus on their moral sense being removed, they have been led to calm and serious reflection upon their present state and future prospects, and to the reception of the gospel as their only hope.

Much harm has been done to the cause of temperance through its advocates founding their arguments on false premises. It is alledged by some, that the Scriptures forbid the use of inebriating drinks altogether—a position which cannot be maintained. They speak against intemperance in the strongest terms, and point out its results in such a forcible manner as will make a considerate mind tremble. But total abstinence is not insisted on by the sacred writers. The temperance question has been pushed aside or resisted by many good men, on account of the arguments used by its friends to support it, and on account of the undue stress laid upon temperance in judging of the religious characters of men. But the claims of the temperance cause are very great upon the Church of Christ, whatever false views may be entertained and defended by its advocates. It is manifest to every one, that there is a vast amount of intemperance among mankind, and it is not confined to sex, or age, or condition in society. Its effects are the most appalling. It is breaking up the peace and comfort of families, blighting the fairest prospects, paralyzing the mental energies, debilitating the strongest constitutions; it dries up the strong current of natural affection; it is the fruitful source of lust, robbery, and murder; it makes a devil of a man, and is often the means of sending him to dwell for ever with an infernal fraternity. The Church of Christ suffers from this tremendous evil, as it is, in many cases, the occasion of the exclusion of individuals whose talents and circumstances might have rendered them very useful in promoting the public cause.

This evil is not to be suppressed by legislative enactments—by passing laws against making or vending ardent spirits. The curse is to be removed by moral suasion, and the force of example. The Church is to be the great engine by which all that moral machinery is to be set in motion, which will expel the devil from this beautiful world, and turn this wilderness into the garden of the Lord. If there is one vice lifting its hateful head and taking a more prominent place than any other, that ought to be assailed by the friends of virtue and religion with all the holy weapons in their possession, though at the cost of wealth and honor, inclination and comfort. The plea of some good men, that total abstinence would be injurious to them, is founded in wrong views of the real quality of ardent spirits, and of the human system. If persons could be made to understand the real nature of alcohol, and its effect upon the body, no rational being would defend the use of it, except he was bent on his own destruction.

It may be asked, perhaps, Was the wine spoken of in the Bible as so excellent, really possessed of such deleterious qualities? We answer, that if the stimulating drinks now used were as purely the juice of the grape as theirs was, and used with the moderation which the Scriptures prescribe, nobody would suffer. The stimulating drinks in common use are, however, manufactured in such a way, and made of such pernicious materials, as to produce the most baneful effects on the recipient. There is one point which I wish to press upon the brethren of the Seventh-day Baptist community, namely, let us keep pace at least with all other denominations of Christians in benevolent and self-denying efforts. Let us not say, as the Jews did, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, are we," and at the same time object to any good measure, properly carried out, which will tend to meliorate the condition of mankind by promoting sobriety and virtue in the world. Brethren, let us turn our back upon every custom which will tend to injure our neighbor, or encourage those habits which sap the very foundations of virtue, and the prosperity of our fellows. If any are rumsellers, let me entreat them, as brethren, to desist, and thus avoid the rumseller's reflections on a dying bed. The rumseller deals in disease, poverty, misery, death, often death eternal. If any take ardent spirits, let me entreat them to throw aside the bottle for ever, lest they fall into a snare, and encourage their families and neighbors to drink and die. W—R.

THE MEXICAN WAR:

WHAT SHALL BE DONE TO HASTEN ITS TERMINATION?

We think it time to press this question upon the serious consideration of our countrymen. We would call their attention to it without distinction of party, and ask every one to inquire for himself what he ought to do or attempt for the speedy termination of our present war with Mexico.

This war might be terminated very soon. If a spirit of peace should pervade both parties; if either party, actuated by such a spirit, should stop fighting, and then offer to settle the points in dispute by fair reference to competent and impartial umpires; if war passions, and semi-barbarous code, of national honor, did not goad them on in the work of mutual mischief and destruction; if the mass of the people in each or either country would call aloud for peace, or their rulers set themselves at work in earnest for a consummation so devoutly to be wished; how soon might this war come to a close, perhaps without even another drop of blood!

Such a result is confessedly possible. And does not its bare possibility impose on every good man the duty of doing all in his power to arrest the murderous, suicidal strife now going on between these republics? Does not every principle of our religion, every dictate of humanity, every motive of patriotism, every just view of all the interests at stake, require such services of us at the present crisis?

If asked what you shall do for the speedy termination of this war, we answer that a great deal may be done by every class and every individual in the community. A public sentiment, once set universally and strongly against its further prosecution, would bring it to an end very soon; and every person in the land can do something to help form such a sentiment, and give it utterance and efficacy. If this sentiment were expressed in the way of petitioning our rulers to take measures to stop the war, and such petitions were poured into Congress from men of every party at the East and the West, at the North and the South, would not their wishes be heeded, and the war be brought at once to a close? So it seems to us; and hence we would urge upon all the importance of their petitioning Congress to use its constitutional powers in arresting this war, and securing a just and honorable peace, without any more bloodshed.

May we not appeal especially to Christians? They believe in a gospel of peace; they are the professed followers of the Prince of Peace; and are bound, as we conceive, by every principle of their religion, to do all they can to stay the crimes and miseries of war. There are said to be in the United States some 45,000 Christian churches of every name, with three or four millions of members; and, if half these millions, in every sect and party through the land, would only unite in earnest against the further continuance of this war, would they not be sure to succeed?

Still more earnestly would we appeal to ministers of the gospel. They are the moral guides of the people; and, commissioned from the Prince of Peace, and the God of Peace, as preachers of a peaceful religion, ought they not to lead the van of efforts for the restoration and continuance of peace? Can they, without being recreant to God and humanity, shrink from such services at a time like the present? There are in the whole country, it is said, some 35,000 such heralds of peace; and, if they should all lift up their voices against the continuance of this war, would it not come to an end very soon? And what service would be more important, or more appropriate to their office?

More powerful still is the periodical press upon the mass of minds through the community. There are in the United States more than 100 religious papers, and some 1500 or more of every class, reaching every neighborhood, and every leading mind, with their daily or weekly issues. How easy for such a multitude of papers, if only united and earnest for peace, to insure its speedy, almost instant restoration!

Permit us, then, to bespeak, gentlemen of the press, your special coöperation for this purpose. We ask it without distinction of party. We do not wish you in this case to lift your voice either for or against any party as such; nor do we see why honest men of all parties cannot consistently coöperate for an object which every one of them desires. You are the law-givers of that public sentiment which must, sooner or later, determine what measures shall be taken to stop this war between sister republics whose hearts ought to be one, now and ever. Will you not then use your best endeavors for peace by opening your columns to its claims, and inditing articles yourselves in its behalf? NUMA.

SCRIPTURE ANECDOTES.

Matt. iii. 7—"But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers! who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?"

An irreligious young man went to hear Whitefield, who took the above passage for his text. "Mr. Whitefield," said the young man, "described the Sadducean character; this did not touch me,—I thought myself as good a Christian as any man in England. From this he went to that of the Pharisees; he described their exterior decency, but observed that the poison of the viper rankled in their hearts. This rather shook me. At length, in the course of his sermon, he abruptly broke off, paused for a few moments, then burst into a flood of tears, lifted up his hands and eyes, and exclaimed, 'Oh, my hearers! the wrath to come!' These words sunk deep into my heart, like lead in the waters. I wept, and when the sermon was ended, retired alone. For days and weeks I could think of little else. Those awful words would follow me wherever I went—'The wrath to come! the wrath to come!'" The result was, that the young man soon after made a public profession of religion, and in a short time became a very eminent preacher.

Matt. x. 25—"It is enough for the disciple, that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord."

When the Mexican Emperor Gautemozin, was put upon the rack by the soldiers of Cortez, one of his nobles, who lay in tortures at the same time, complained piteously to his sovereign of the pain he endured. "Do you think," said Gautemozin, "that I lie upon roses?" The nobleman ceased mourning, and expired in silence. "When a Christian," adds the pious Bishop Horne, "thinks his sufferings for sin, in sickness, pain, &c., intolerable, let him remember those of his Lord, endured patiently on that bed of sorrow, the cross, and he will think so no longer."

Matt. xi. 26—"Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight"

Several gentlemen visited a school in which was a boy who was both deaf and dumb. One of the gentlemen asked him, Who made the world? The boy took his slate, and wrote the very first verse of the Bible: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." He was then asked, How do you hope to be saved? The child wrote, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." The last question proposed was—How is it that God has made you deaf and dumb, while all around you can hear and speak? The poor boy seemed puzzled for a moment, and a suggestion of unbelief seemed to pass through his mind; but quickly recovering himself, he wrote, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

[Anecdotes on the New Testament.

LUTHER AT ROME.

Luther often mixed with the monks and citizens of Rome. If some amongst them extolled the Pope and the clergy, the greatest number gave free vent to their complaints and sarcasms. What stories had they to tell of the reigning Pope, of Alexander VI., and of so many others! One day, his Roman friends related how Cæsar Borgia, having fled from Rome, had been taken in Spain. On the eve of trial, he prayed for mercy, and asked for a priest to visit him in his prison. They sent him a monk. He murdered him, disguised himself in his cowl, and effected his escape. 'I heard that at Rome; it is a thing well known,' says Luther. Another day, passing along the principal street that led to St. Peter's church, he stopped in astonishment before a statue, representing a pope, under the figure of a woman holding a sceptre, clothed in the papal mantle, bearing a child in her arms. 'It is a girl of Mentz,' said the people, 'who was chosen Pope by the cardinals, and was delivered of a child on this spot; therefore no pope ever passes through this street.' 'I wonder,' observed Luther, 'that the popes allow the statue to remain.'

Luther had expected to find the edifice of the church encompassed with splendor and strength; but its doors were broken in, and its walls consumed by fire. He saw the desolation of the sanctuary, and drew back in alarm. He had dreamed of sanctity; he found nothing but profanation.

He was not less struck with the disorders committed in the streets 'The police is strict and severe in Rome,' said he. 'The judge, or captain, rides through the city every night, with three hundred attendants. He stops all he finds in the streets; if he meets an armed man, he hangs him, or throws him into the Tiber. And yet the city is full of disorders and murders; whilst, in places where the word of God is truly and faithfully preached, we see peace and order prevail, without the necessity for law or severity.' 'It is incredible what sins and atrocities are committed in Rome,' he says again; 'they must be seen and heard to be believed. So that it is usual to say, 'If there be a hell, Rome is built above it; it is an abyss from whence all sins proceed.''

The sight made, at the time, a great impression on Luther's mind; an impression which was afterwards deepened. 'The nearer we approach to Rome, the greater number of bad Christians do we find,' said he, several years after. 'It is commonly observed, that he who goes to Rome for the first time, goes to seek a knave there; the second time, he finds him; and the third time, he brings him away with him, under his cloak. But now, people are become so clever, that they make the three journeys in one.' One of the most profound geniuses of Italy, though of deplorable celebrity, Macchiavelli, who was living at Florence when Luther passed through that city to go to Rome, has made a similar remark: 'The greatest symptom,' said he, 'of the approaching ruin of Christianity, (by which he meant the Roman Catholic religion,) is that the nearer we approach the capitol of Christendom, the less do we find of the Christian spirit in the people. The scandalous example and the crimes of the court of Rome have caused Italy to lose every principle of piety, and every religious sentiment.' 'We Italians,' continues the great historian, 'are principally indebted to the church and to the priests, for having become impious and profligate.' Luther felt, later in life, all the importance of this journey; 'If any one would give me a hundred thousand florins,' said he, 'I would not have missed seeing Rome.'

This journey was also of advantage to him in regard to learning. Like Reuchlin, Luther profited by his residence in Italy to obtain a deeper understanding of the Holy Scriptures. He there took lessons in Hebrew from a celebrated rabbin, named Elias Levita. He acquired partly at Rome the knowledge of that divine word under the assault of which Rome was doomed to fall.

But this journey was above all of great importance to Luther in another respect. Not only was the veil withdrawn, and the sardonic laugh, the jesting incredulity, which lay concealed behind the Romish superstitions, revealed to the future Reformer; but also the living faith which God had implanted in him was then powerfully strengthened.

We have seen how he had at first submitted to all the vain practices which the church enjoins in order to purchase the remission of sins. One day, in particular, wishing to obtain an indulgence, promised by the Pope to any one who should ascend on his knees what is called Pilate's staircase, the poor Saxon monk was slowly climbing those steps which they told him had been miraculously transported from Jerusalem to Rome. But, whilst he was going through this meritorious work, he thought he heard a voice, like thunder, speaking from the depth of his heart: 'The just shall live by faith.' These words, which already on two occasions had struck upon his ear as the voice of an angel of God, resounded instantaneously and powerfully within him. He started up in terror on the steps up which he had been crawling; he was horrified at himself; and struck with shame for the degradation to which superstition had debased him, he fled from the scene of his folly.

WINTER EVENINGS.

"Among the changes which autumn brings with it, there is one which we always hail with delight—the return of long evenings. In summer, there seems scarcely to be an interval between day and mid-night; and though a summer evening, what there is of it, is very fine for a short stroll over the dewy fields of the country, or a city promenade in the regions of soda and ice cream, it can hardly be held of great value for any other pursuit. Give us the good long evenings—no matter how cold and stormy—and if we can have a blazing fire, a supply of choice books and papers, and the company of friends and kindred spirits, we envy no man's happiness. Home, always prized, now seems doubly dear, and all the cares and toils of the day are amply rewarded by the joys of the evening fireside. Happy the man who has a home at this season of the year; thrice happy he who loves it.

"Let others seek for empty joys,
At ball or concert, rout, or play;
Whilst far from fashion's idle noise,
Her gilded domes, and trappings gay,
I while the wintry eve away—
'Twixt book and lute the hours divide,
And marvel how I e'er could stray
From thee—my own fireside!"

Young men, take care care of your evenings. Learn to value your leisure hours too highly to squander them in the streets, or to waste them all in the pursuit of mere amusements. They may be worth to you more than gold or silver, if properly improved.

Now is the season to commence a course of useful reading or study; and an hour or two each evening, thus devoted to mental improvement, continued for a year to come, will effect a result which you now hardly anticipate. But you say you are not a "genius"—you have no uncommon talent. No matter for that. Geniuses are scarce as the fabled phœnix—but one visits the earth at a time; and as to extraordinary talent, there is not half so much of it in the world as many imagine. If you have common sense, that is enough; go ahead and increase your mental furniture, and make yourself a well informed man. Every young man ought to aspire to this; and this is all we ask. [Symbol.

BE COMPREHENSIVE.

Talk to the point, and stop when you have reached it. The faculty that some possess, of making one idea cover a quire of paper, is not good for much. Be short and comprehensive in all that you say or write. To fill a volume upon nothing, is no credit to anybody; though Lord Chesterfield wrote a very clever poem upon Nothing. There are men who get one idea into their heads, and but one, and they make the most of it. You can see it and almost feel it when in their presence. On all occasions it is produced, till it is worn as thin as charity. They remind one of a twenty-four pounder discharged at a humming-bird. You hear a tremendous noise, see a volume of smoke, but you look in vain for the effects. The bird is scattered to atoms. Just so with the idea. It is enveloped in a cloud, and lost amid the rumbling of words and flourishes. Short letters, sermons, speeches and paragraphs, are favorites with us. Commend us to the young man who wrote to his father—"Dear sir, I am going to be married;" and also to the good old gentleman who replied—"Dear son, go ahead."

Such are the men for action. They do more than they say. The half is not told in their weight in gold for every purpose in life. Reader, be short—and we will stop short with the advice. [Portland Bulletin.

THE SEED MUST DIE.

The seed must die, before the corn appears
Out of the ground, in blade and fruitful ears.
Low must those ears by sickle's edge be lain,
Ere thou canst treasure up the golden grain.
The grain is crushed before the bread is made,
And the bread broke ere life to man conveyed.
O, be content to die, to be laid low,
And to be crushed, and to be broken so;
If thou upon God's table may'st be bread,
Life-giving food for souls an hungered. [Trench.

I CAN'T DO IT.

What a volume of human misery is unfolded in that short sentence! What mighty efforts of undeveloped genius are chained by this conclusion of despondency, when a barrier chances to interpose the onward progress of the will, and sometimes of human volition! What domestic unhappiness—what downward marches towards the gloomy and solitary abodes of poverty—what anxious solicitude fills the breast of the dependent wife—what ardent wrestlings with the demon of despair—what social wretchedness—what deep, painful anxiety—what national evils, are depicted in the spirit of that expression! It is the language only of the self-wretched; the determination of the weak and imbecile. It is the voice of the moral coward, who, standing upon the shore of some desolate island, in the stormy ocean of life, and looking out upon the billows strewn with the wrecks of earthly grandeur and human happiness, is so blinded by fear that he cannot see through the surrounding gloom. It is the articulated feelings of the traveler of the desert, who, having gained an eminence, sees nothing but a barren plain before him, thirst parching his tongue, and weariness subduing his strength. But shall he lay down without hope? Nay; let him press forward, make but one effort more—a green oasis will meet his vision, a cool stream will bubble up from some unforseen fountain, and he will reach his journey's end crowned with the rich rewards of perseverance.

"HEALING AGITATION."

"The discussion of truth and the agitation of doctrines have always resulted in good to the church and to the world. Even the waters of Bethesda, in the very house of mercy itself, needed to be agitated and disturbed to renew their healing power. It is therefore unseemly in theologians, that when some Doctor Angelicus descends among them, and agitates the settled waters of their dull and stagnant orthodoxy, then always 'a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, and withered,' creep from the 'five points' of their 'five porches' to brandish their crutches against the intruder, or to mutter their anathemas against the innovation, instead of welcoming the benignant visitor, sharing in the healthiness of the agitation, and becoming healed of whatsoever disease they had. Such an angel was Baxter, and such was the treatment of his wholesome and healing agitation of the waters of orthodoxy; and such will always be the treatment of theological agitations, until intellectual liberty become an acknowledged law in the republic of literature. Why, in the very temple of truth itself, God still speaks in 'divers manners;' yea, in the very tones of truth we are to expect harmony, but not unison."

PROVIDENCE.

Jesse says, in his 'Gleanings': "The warmth and protection which birds receive from their parents is beautifully illustrative of the security afforded by a superintending Providence, to those who apply to him for help. 'He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust.' To my feeling, there is not in the whole Bible a more elegant and delightful metaphor than this, or one which the human mind, especially when in the state of affliction and distress, may dwell upon with greater comfort and satisfaction. When I have seen a bird of prey hovering over some newly hatched chickens, and perceived them run for shelter under the wings of their parent, I am forcibly reminded that in the hour of danger and temptation I may fly, by prayer, to my heavenly Father for refuge and protection. Those who have made the works of creation their study, will have had many opportunities of appreciating the truth of the remarks I have ventured from time to time to make, respecting the lessons of instruction which may be derived from the delightful contemplation of the various objects with which we are perpetually surrounded.'

A GREAT TRUTH.—In vain do we seek to awaken in our churches zeal for missions as a separate thing. To be genuine, it must flow from love to Christ. It is when a sense of personal communion with the Son of God is highest, that we shall be most fit for missionary work; either to go ourselves, or to stir up others. If we allow it to become a business of dollars and cents, we shall see no results. "Find preachers of David Brainerd's spirit," said John Wesley, "and nothing can stand before them;" but without this what can gold or silver do? Let gushing affection to the Lord Jesus Christ become the ruling passion, and it communicates the thrill of evangelical zeal to every member of the electric chain. A church of such ministers, of such members, would be an apostolic, a heavenly church. [Alexander.

Who can tell the value of a smile? It costs the giver nothing, but is beyond price to the erring and relenting, the sad and cheerless, the lost and forsaken. It disarms malice—subdues temper—turns hatred to love—revenge to kindness, and paves the darkest paths with gems of sunlight. A smile on the brow betrays a kind heart, a pleasant friend, and affectionate brother, a dutiful son, a happy husband. It adds charm to beauty, decorates the face of the deformed, and makes lovely woman resemble the angel of Paradise. Who will refuse to smile?

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 7, 1847.

THE SUPPOSED TRANSFER OF THE SABBATH.

In his lecture on Sunday evening last, Mr. Brown considered the claims of the first day of the week to be the Sabbath by divine authority. Before proceeding to examine the texts usually relied upon to support this claim, he premised several points which had been argued in his previous lectures, and which he deemed important to be borne in mind in considering the doctrine of a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. The common manner of defending this doctrine, is by endeavoring to show, in the first place, that the Old Testament Scriptures predicted the change. It seems to be agreed, that the work of the Messiah was all laid out for him beforehand, and that unless it can be proved from the prophecies, that a grant was given him to change the Sabbath, all the rest of the arguments will be exceeding defective.

Ps. 118: 24, is quoted as proving the point—"This is the day which the Lord had made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." For argument sake, let it be granted that the word day here refers to the first day of the week, what does it prove? Not that God made that day a Sabbath, but simply that he made it a day of rejoicing, which does not necessarily imply any suspension of labor at all. Hence this text, even supposing that the Holy Spirit had reference to the first day of the week, makes nothing for a transfer of the Sabbath. But there is no reason to suppose that the Holy Spirit had any reference here to the first day of the week. If a particular day was referred to, it is quite as likely to have been the day of Christ's ascension to heaven as the day of his resurrection. The probability is, however, that by the expression, "the day the Lord hath made," reference was had, not to a period of twenty-four hours, but to the whole gospel dispensation, as in the expression of Christ, "Abraham rejoiced to see my day; he saw it, and was glad."

Is. 11: 10 is sometimes quoted as a proof text—"In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand as an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek, and his rest shall be glorious." This prophecy is perfectlv explained by the Saviour himself, when he says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Who supposes he meant to say, 'Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden with Jewish Sabbaths, and I will give you the first day of the week for a Sabbath?' Yet this interpretation would be just as reasonable as that put upon the prophecy.

The truth is, said the speaker, the Old Testament contains no prophecy of a change of the Sabbath. Let us then turn to the New. It is not pretended that there is in the New Testament any formal and express appointment of the first day for a weekly Sabbath; but it is insisted, that the want of direct evidence is amply supplied by circumstanital evidence. It may be remarked, here, that the absence of any warrant in the prophecies for a change of the Sabbath, is good reason for viewing this circumstantial evidence with suspicion. If, as has been said, the work of the Messiah was all laid out before him, so that in order to establish his claims it was necessary for him to adhere strictly to the written plan, then the natural conclusion is, that if the change of the Sabbath was not prophesied of as a part of the plan, he would not encourage it. To do so would invalidate his claims, and give just occasion for rejecting him. Hence, if all those passages in the New Testament which are supposed to afford circumstantial evidence of the change of the Sabbath, will, without doing violence to language, bear a different construction, we are not only at liberty, but are bound to give them a different construction. Here we are told, that the Messiah, being God as well as man, had a right to do as he pleased—to alter or even to abrogate the Sabbath. Such a plea implies, that some things which the Messiah had no right to do as man, he had a perfect right to do as God. But this dividing of Christ—this splitting of his nature with a metaphysico-theological dissecting knife—is wholly unwarranted. The Lord Jesus appeared in the world, and performed all his works, simply as Messiah—not some of them as God, and some of them as man. We do not doubt that the true God dwelt in the man Christ Jesus—yea, "all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." Nevertheless, we must regard him as doing his great works—such, for instance, as his miracles—not because, as God, he had a right to do them, but because, considered as Messiah, he was appointed to do them. Now if it could be proved from prophecy that a grant was given to Messiah to change the Sabbath, then the circumstantial evidence of it, which is supposed to be contained in the New Testament, might be worth something. But as the case stands, it is worth nothing. Prophecy gives no such grant; and all attempts to predicate the thing upon an independent right to do so, which he possessed as God, proceed on the false supposition, that in establishing the new dispensation he acted sometimes simply as God, whereas he always acted in his true official character as Messiah. The advocates of the change sometimes feel the necessity of finding a warrant for it in the prophecies, and hence they contend stoutly for the texts which have been considered. At other times they plead that the simple divinity of Christ is all the warrant they need. Occasionally they even labor to prove that Christ himself placed the right on the ground of his divinity, quoting that passage, "The Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath day." But he asserts his authority here, not in his abstract character as God, but in his character as the Messiah—as "the Son of Man." This passage can imply no more than that, as Messiah, he was the true and proper expounder of the nature of the Sabbath—that he had a right to say what things were proper to be done on it, and what were not. Hence in opposition to the superstition of the Pharisees, he showed that the act of the disciples in plucking ears of corn to supply the necessities of their nature, was no breach of the Sabbath; nay, more, that the Sabbath must be made subservient to, and promotive of, the cause which he came to establish in the earth. No sort of right, title, or authority, does Jesus Christ here assume over the institution, but what was granted him in the prophecies of the Old Testamsnt.

The lecturer then went on to examine the circumstantial evidence for a change of the Sabbath. He took up the passages which speak of the meetings of Christ with his disciples on the first day of the week following his resurrection, and also "after eight days." In answer to the argument drawn from these passages, he showed that our Saviour, in this connection, neither commanded that the first day should be kept holy, nor set the example of keeping it holy; that there was no evidence of these meetings having been previously appointed, but, on the contrary, that there was every probability of their having been mere casual meetings, serving the purpose mainly of giving proof to the disciples that Jesus had risen, and noticed by the evangelist mainly to afford us satisfactory evidence of the resurrection.

[The remaining passages usually quoted in proof of the change of the Sabbath, were reserved for consideration in the next lecture.]

ORDINATION, DESIGNATION, AND SAILING OF OUR MISSIONARIES.

In the afternoon and evening of fifth-day last, Dec. 31, meetings were held with the church in Plainfield, N. J., for the purpose of ordaining Bro. Nathan Wardner to the gospel ministry, and of setting apart brethren Carpenter and Wardner as missionaries to China. We wish we could convey to our readers a just impression of the interest and solemnity of those meetings, because we are sure it would warm their hearts and strengthen their hands in the missionary work. We must content ourselves, however, with a brief narrative of the proceedings, hoping and praying that even this may encourage our brethren to and attempt expect far greater things for Christ.

The Ordination of Bro. Wardner.

This took place in the afternoon of fifth-day. in the presence of a good audience, who seemed much interested. After the usual introductory exercises, a sermon was preached by Eld. Lucius Crandall, from John 15: 16—"I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit." The design of this discourse was to show what is implied in ordination, what are the duties of the ordained, and what peculiar powers or privileges belong to them. Ordination was represented as simply a declaration, on the part of the church or council by whom it is given, that the candidate is deemed a fit person to set forth the Gospel. It imposes the duty to proclaim the doctrines of the Bible, and particularly the doctrine of salvation through Jesus Christ; to administer the ordinances, such as Baptism and the Lord's Supper; and to teach the social and individual duties of men. It confers no superior authority to legislate for Christ's kingdom, but implies a new responsibility to see that the existing laws of that kingdom are executed.

The ordaining prayer was offered by Eld. Solomon Carpenter. The charge to the candidate was delivered by Eld. Walter B. Gillett; it was evidently prepared with considerable care, and may hereafter be published. The hand of fellowship, accompanied with remarks by way of encouragement, was given by Geo. B. Utter; after which the benediction was pronounced by Mr. Wardner.

The Designation of the Missionaries.

A meeting was held on fifth-day evening for the purpose of presenting the subject of missions, hearing remarks from the missionaries, and giving them their instructions. Eld. Thomas B. Brown introduced the exercises by reading select portions of Scripture, designed to show the exceedingly depraved and degraded condition of men without the light of revelation, and the means which God has provided for their regeneration and elevation. After prayer and singing, T. B. Brown, as President of the Missionary Association, addressed the audience upon the claims of foreign missions, the influences which had led to the selection of China as our field of labor, and the encouragements presented in that field.

He remarked, that the Board appeared before the assembly to take an important step towards carrying out a measure, which had been long contemplated and long desired by many of the denomination. Hitherto obstacles had seemed to lie in the way. Seventh-day Baptists were feeble in numbers and wealth, and in the consciousness of their feebleness, had trembled to undertake a work of such apparent magnitude. These obstacles were still in the way, but there were those amongst us who begun to feel that we must no longer be inactive. In proportion to our resources we were responsible, and it was therefore high time, in a reliance upon Him who had said, "Lo I am with you always," to meet all these difficulties resolutely. We must not always be hovering about the shore, but must "launch out into the deep, and let down our nets for a draught."

Bro. B. then went on to state, that after surveying the world at large according to the means of information before them, the Board had at length settled upon China as the most inviting field, and upon the city Fuhchau as the principal station to be occupied by our missionaries, unless some other field should open before them in a more promising manner after their arrival in the country.

After some brief remarks upon the nature of the field, its geographical position, commercial advantages, &c., he remarked, that there was no other power adequate to regenerate the heathen world, than that of divine revelation. The Psalmist teaches us, that the light of nature, although it is sufficient to make known the existence of God, has no converting power. But the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. Ps. 19. He also alluded to the comparative want of success of the missions of modern times, which might seem to some a discouraging feature. But he had no doubt, that one great reason of this was the defective theology of all the popular sects. They did not, in their theology, sufficiently honor the divine law. They carried the ark of God into the temples of the pagans, and expected to see their idols fall prostrate before it as Dagon. But they were measurably disappointed. What was the reason? The law was not there. Jesus, the mercy seat, was there—the blood of atonement was there—the priestly intercession was there—all these points were acknowledged in their preaching; but the law, in all its fullness and perfection, was wanting. And how could they expect the God of truth to bless their efforts to any great extent, until they restored the divine law to its proper place and honor? These remarks, he said, were not offered in the least spirit of unkindness towards others; but they were the honest sentiments of his heart. He did not know but our own operations might meet with as little success as others had. There might be many things amongst us to hinder God from blessing our labors. We might be so cursed with worldly-mindedness—we might hold our distinguishing truth, as well as all other truth, in unrighteousness—so that God could not, consistently, smile upon us. Nevertheless, where other things were equal, a correct and scriptural theology must possess a power towards the conversion of souls, which no system, containing an important error, did.

Bro. B. concluded by saying, that he rejoiced in that evening's opportunity, and he did not doubt that our humble offering to the God of missions would be accepted.

The Missionaries being introduced to the assembly, Mr. Carpenter rose, and after referring to the difficulty he had in realizing that he was then looking upon the faces of his brethren, probably, for the last time in this world, he spoke of the heartfelt satisfaction he enjoyed from the knowledge of the fact, that the deep sympathies of many of the brethren in different parts of the denomination had been manifested toward him and his companions, and toward the work to which they had devoted themselves. He thought he could perceive in this an indication from God, that His hand and His counsel were in the undertaking, and that therefore it would succeed.

He alluded briefly to the solemnity of the scene, when, in that same house, one year ago last May, a few brethren resolved, in the strength which the Lord giveth, to obey the last injunction of their risen Savior. At that time, he little thought that he should be one of the number to go forth from his native land in obedience to that command. But he could assure his friends, both on his own and on the behalf of his companions in toil, that they enter upon this work with cheerfulness; that it would be one of the severest trials that could come upon them, not to be permitted to testify to the heathen the Gospel of the Grace of God; that although this labor would require them to separate from their brethren for a season, it would not sunder the ties of Christian fellowship which bound them together. He felt assured that they should love those whom they loved now none the less when far away.

A life of ease they did not look for; they did not wish it. But if they might be permitted to labor together with God in the cause of the salvation of the heathen, the joy that would follow would be an abundant reward for their labor. He hoped that his brethren at home would have the happiness of participating in that joy. He alluded to what had been said of the utter hopelessness of attempting the conversion of the heathen by any other instrumentality than that chosen and ordained of God. It was through the foolishness of preaching that He would save them that believe. With the faithful exhibition of divine truth, He had connected the converting power of the Holy Ghost. The simplicity of the means, and the glory of the result, bespoke the wisdom of God. Here was the ground of his confidence in going forth to a nation of idolaters.

After requesting the brethren to pray to Him who controlls the winds of heaven and the waves of the deep, that He would grant them a safe and prosperous voyage, he wished to impress upon their minds one other request, viz. that if, in the inscrutable allotments of Divine Providence, he and his followers should find a watery grave, his brethren at home would not abandon the enterprise, but humble themselves under the mighty hand of God, and come up to the work with greater reliance on his holy arm. He then bade the audience an affectionate farewell.

Mr. Wardner followed, and referred to the mysterious ways of Providence, in bringing about results so much at variance with our expectations. He remarked, that a little more than two years after he made a public profession of religion, being impelled by a sense of duty, he engaged in a course of mental training preparatory to some station of usefulness, which circumstances and the providence of God should designate after that course should be completed. While engaged in this pursuit, his mind was called up to the investigation of the Sabbath question. After mature examination, becoming convinced that his former sentiments were erroneous, he, as a natural consequence, was impressed with the duty of changing his practice. This led to a consideration of his future prospects, and the condition of that people with whom he should doubtless become associated. Here, he said, he was met with a formidable obstacle. He saw, comparatively, a mere handful of disciples, crippled in means, and in all their operations; in consequence of which, they were standing aloof from a participation in those great enterprises which agitate more popular denominations, and especially the foreign mission enterprise. His hopes seemed veiled in Egyptian darkness, and he endeavored to persuade himself that this circumstance was a sufficient excuse for the neglect of that duty which he felt imposed upon him, and for remaining with the denomination with which he was then associated. He finally concluded, however, that God was wiser than himself, and that He would become responsible for all the results which might follow from obedience to His laws. There was no excuse that could palliate rebellion. The subject of missions, and especially foreign missions, having been thus presented, has led him to reflect upon its importance much more than formerly. He had fixed his eye upon the Mississippi Valley as his field of labor, after having completed his preparatory course. About the time this enterprise was determined upon by the denomination, it was suggested to him by some of his brethren, that he ought to prepare himself for the field. After some reflection, he resolved to pursue the course he had commenced, and when ready to engage in active life, he would submit the matter to the direction of Providence. On receiving the communication of the Board last August, he was inclined to regard it as a call from God. After much meditation and prayer, and advising with friends and counsellors upon the subject, he finally resolved, that if it was the unanimous wish of his brethren, he would comply with the invitation. Accordingly he now appeared before them as a candidate for this great undertaking. He said his heart beat strong with anxiety and interest in view of that dark and benighted land of heathenism which is to become his future home. The undertaking is not without a sacrifice. The thought of tearing away from the fond embrace of his gray-headed parents, his affectionate brothers and sisters, and all that life holds dear, calls forth emotions which are beyond the power of language to describe. Yet, if God could make him the instrument of the salvation of one poor heathen, he felt that this, with all that he might hereafter be called to suffer, would be of little importance. And should he be permitted to see that soul in raptures of glory, vieing with kindred spirits in swelling the notes of redeeming love, he trusted he should not look back upon these sufferings with regret. It matters but little whether his pathway in this life be strewed with flowers or thorns, can he but answer the end of his existence and honor his Creator.

The consecrating prayer was then offered by Eld. Lucius Crandall.

Tihis was followed by the instructions and charge to the missionaries delivered by Geo. B. Utter. He spoke of the self-denying character of the missionary work, in that it calls upon the candidate to sacrifice many social comforts. At the same time, he regarded it as a noble and blessed work, which could not fail to open new and higher sources of enjoyment. He then referred to the relation which the missionary sustains to the churches from whom he goes forth. It is not the relation of a servant to his master. The missionary professes a desire to plant the Gospel upon heathen ground; the churches promise to support him by their sympathy and contributions in carrying out that desire. To the churches he is responsible for the proper use of what they commit to him; to Christ, the Head of the church, he is responsible for faithful efforts to carry forward the interests of His kingdom. The duties and dangers of the missionary on shipboard, and after reaching the field of his labors, were next brought under review. The address closed with a reference to the reasons for hoping that the enterprise will be a blessing both to the heathen abroad, and to the churches at home.

Eld. Lucius Crandall, after appropriate and affecting remarks, gave the missionaries the hand of fellowship, and bade them farewell, on behalf of the churches. The exercises were closed with prayer by Eld. W. B. Gillett.

Sailing of the Missionaries.

On third-day, Jan. 5, brethren Carpenter and Wardner, with their wives, embarked on board the ship Honqua, Capt. Theo. D. Palmer, bound for Canton. Many friends met them at the ship, a part of whom took leave before sailing, and the remainder accompanied them down the Bay, returning by steamboat. On board they found Rev. E. C. Lord and wife, missionaries of the Baptist Union, with their friends. After the ship was under weigh, brief religious exercises were held. Rev. Elisha Tucker, pastor of the Oliver-st. Baptist Church, introduced the exercises by a few remarks relative to the attending circumstances. Prayer was then offered by Mr. Tucker, and also by Eld. Lucius Crandall, of Hopkinton, R. I.; after which, we bade them farewell, and returned to our homes.

All the exercises connected with the ordination, designation, and sailing of our missionaries, have been of an exceedingly interesting character. At Plainfield, the meetings did much to deepen the interest in the missionary work. The missionaries, and several brethren from abroad, spent the last Sabbath with the church in New York, of which brother and sister Carpenter are members, where an affecting and solemn communion season was enjoyed. The exercises on shipboard, though brief, were very welcome. We think the feelings of all concerned were expressed by one of the missionaries, whose last words were, "These have been the happiest days of my life."

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION ON SABBATH LEGISLATION.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Having been appointed by the Semi-Annual Central Association to present to the friends of the Sabbath their views on Sabbath Legislation, I submit to you a resolution passed by that body, at its late session, which is as follows:—

"Resolved, That we deem it impolitic to petition our Legislature to pass a bill of equal rights in the observance of a Sabbath, or for the repeal of any laws now existing relative to the observance of Sunday, as a sacred or non-judicial day; but merely to petition for protection in the observance of the Sabbath as fully as others have, who observe the first day of the week."

I deem it my duty further to say, that they have observed with anxiety, the movements of some in other parts, for the abolishing of Sabbath laws, and also a petition, published in the "Recorder," addressed to the Legislature of this State, for protection in various observances. It is the opinion of this Association, that such movements would tend greatly to embarrass the cause, if not defeat the object for which we have been laboring. It is thought advisable to stay such action, and if such petitions have been put in circulation, that they may retain them at least for the present. Whatever may be the case in other States, we have the gratifying assurances, that our rights will be respected and secured in New York, if prudence is observed in conducting our cause. When our rights are secured, and we are placed in equal circumstances with our fellow citizens in this matter now the subject of concernment, we shall be able to afford that encouragement to other objects which their importance demands.

I am, with respect, yours &c.,

JOHN MAXSON.

Missionary Meeting.—The Commercial Advertiser, of Thursday last, contains an account of a public meeting held on the previous evening, in the Oliver-st. Baptist Church, at which Rev. E. C. Lord, Missionary to China, received his instructions from the Executive Committee of the American Baptist Missionary Union. Prayer having been offered by Rev. C. G. Sommers, Rev. William R. Williams, D. D., delivered an address on the magnitude of the work of evangelizing China, the means to be employed, and the grounds of hope for success. It was written with great felicity of diction, and gave evidence of remarkable knowledge of the history and genius of the Chinese. It will probably be published. The prayer of consecration was offered by Rev. J. L. Hodge, of Brooklyn. The instructions of the committee were read by Rev. S. Peck, Corresponding Secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union. These instructions formed an admirable document, on the duties of the missionary, and the relations subsisting between him and the committee. Rev. Spencer H. Cone, D. D., then gave the right hand of fellowship, accompanying it with a few remarks by way of counsel and encouragement, after which the benediction was pronounced by the venerable Rev. John Peck. Mr. and Mrs. Lord will be associated with Rev. Mr. Dean and Dr, and Mrs. Devan at Hong Kong.

Gazette of the Union, is the title of a weekly Journal of the Age, just issued from No. 111 Nassau-st. N. Y., by J. T. Harris & Co. It is a large and handsome sheet, devoted to Literature, Science and the Arts, Agricultural Information, Commercial Affairs, Army and Navy Intelligence, Politics and Passing Occurrences. Price two dollars a year in advance.

The Watertown Spectator is the title of a neatly-printed paper recently started by Joel Greene at Watertown, Jefferson Co., N. Y. It is devoted to the cause of Temperance, and particularly to the advocacy of the present excise law of the State of New York. Published once a week, at $1 50 per annum.

The steamer Mohegan, which, having struck a rock near Sand's Point, Long Island Sound, was run ashore to prevent her from sinking, was got off Thursday morning, and towed to New York.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

There was not much business done in Congress last week, in consequence of the death of Senator Barrow of Louisiana, and the occurrence of the New Year Holiday.

In the SENATE, on Monday, a bill was passed providing for the purchase of the papers of Alexander Hamilton; the Vice President signed the bill for the admission of Iowa into the Union. On Tuesday, the Senate adjourned immediately after the announcement of the decease of Mr. Barrow. On Wednesday, the usual resolutions were introduced relative to Mr. Barrow's death, and several members spoke in a very feeling and impressive manner of his noble heart and manly virtues. On Thursday, both Houses of Congress assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to the memory of the deceased.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, on Monday, the bill for the admission of Iowa into the Union was signed by the Speaker; a joint resolution was introduced, providing for refunding to the several States the expenditures necessary for the subsistence of the volunteers previous to their being mustered into the United States service. On Tuesday, a bill was reported from the Military Committee to raise ten additional regiments for the regular army, to serve five years, or during the war. Mr. Hamlin offered a joint resolution, which was adopted, closing the refectories in the basement of the capitol, unless the proprietors suspend entirely the sale of intoxicating drinks. A memorial was presented from nine thousand members of the Yearly Meeting of Friends in New England in opposition to the war. On Wednesday and Thursday but little was done except what related to the death and burial of Senator Barrow.

STORM, WRECK, AND LOSS OF LIFE.

The bark Morgan Dix, arrived at New Orleans, brings dates from the squadron off Anton Lizardo to the 13th inst. Full particulars have been received of the total wreck of the United States brig Somers, and the great loss of life which accompanied it. The Somers was maintaining the blockade off the harbor of Vera Cruz. On the evening of the 7th she had taken shelter under Green Island, there being every indication of an approaching northerly gale. On the morning of the 8th, a sail being reported from aloft, she was got under way, and stood out for several miles, when the approaching vessel was ascertained to be the John Adams on her return from Tampico.

Her appearance caused great satisfaction to the officers of the Somers, as Com. Perry had informed them that she was to relieve them from maintaining the blockade as soon as she came in. As the Somers was approaching her anchorage on her return, another sail was discovered standing for Vera Cruz, apparently with the intention of running the blockade. She immediately made all sail to intercept her, and in the effort to avoid falling on the reef to her leeward, she was struck by the Norther, and thrown upon her beam ends. The Somers commenced careening over with great rapidity, and in about half an hour afterward sunk, carrying down to a watery grave between thirty and forty persons. A letter received from on board the Raritan, dated the 13th, states that eight men belonging to the Somers had been picked up by the Mexicans on the beach near Anton Lizardo, whither they had been driven by the gale, clinging to hen-coops. They were held at Vera Cruz as prisoners of war; one had since died. This makes 44 saved out of 80 souls on board. The efforts of the crew of the French and English vessels to save the lives of the crew of the Somers, are spoken of with warm commendation.

MEXICAN NEWS.—A telegraphic dispatch for the New York Tribune, dated at Washington, Jan. 3, says: The Southern mail brings advices from Campeachy to the 9th ult. There had been another outbreak in that city. In an address dated the 8th of Dec., Domingo Barret, yielding a reluctant acquiescence to the wishes of his fellow-citizens, presents himself as their chief. "A glorious revolution" that day commenced. The object of the outbreak is to sunder entirely all political connection between Yucatan and the Government of Mexico.

Farther correspondence had taken place between Gen. Taylor and Santa Anna. Taylor's letter concludes with a hope that the Mexican Congress will accept the offer of the United States, and enter on negotiations for a termination of hostilities and a permanent peace. Santa Anna's reply is dated at San Luis Potosi. It is courteously worded. In conclusion, he hopes the sovereign National Congress will act as shall be most conductive to the interests of the Republic, but believes that neither Congress nor any Mexican will ever be able to listen to overtures of peace unless the National Territory is first evacuated by the American forses, and the vessels of war withdrawn. Until that is done the Mexican Nation is determined to defend at every hazard inch by inch of its territory.

WISCONSIN.—The Territory of Wisconsin comprises an area of something like eighty or ninety thousand square miles, large enough to form two great States. By the ordinance of 1787, it was provided that but five States should be organized in the region lying between the Ohio and Mississippi rivers; or what is now known as the States of Ohio, Indiania, Michigan and Illinois, and the Territory of Wisconsin. It is, however, very desirable to divide Wisconsin, and to attain that end without violating the ordinance, it is proposed to divide it by a line running nearly due north from the Mississippi to Lake Superior, and a bill to that effect has been introduced into the House of Representatives by Mr. Martin, Delegate from Wisconsin. He proposes to christen the new Territory Minesota, (Mi-ne-so-ta) and, in some few years, if sanctioned by Congress, it will be cleared, settled, peopled, and covered with a net-work of railroads and canals, and become a powerful State, represented in the Federal Congress by two Senators and a legion of members.

COULDN'T GET TRUSTED.—The Clerk of the U. S. House of Representatives having sent an order for several copies of the Chronotype to be sent to Members of Congress, with the usual offer to pay at the close of the session, the editor responds to the application rather tartly as follows:—

"We take this mode of replying, that we do not furnish the Chronotype on trust. If Uncle Samuel wants it from this date to the fourth of March, he is hereby informed that he may have it for 62 cents in advance, which he may send to us in gold, silver or copper, or go without the paper. This is the way we treat all others, and we do not see why we should treat differently an old gentleman who is squandering his money in quarrelling with his neighbors, and who has less gumption in finance than any of the thousands of individuals who have heretofore subscribed for our 'valuable paper.'"

WHALING.—On Monday morning, says the Boston Post, two large fin-backs (whales) were seen playing side and side in Provincetown harbor, whereupon Capt. Cook, of the bark Fairy, and Capt. Soper, late of the brig Samuel Thomas, manned two boats and pounced upon the leviathans before they could see them. Captain Cook gave his customer a harpoon and a lance as quick as he could dart, and turned him up in about fifteen minutes. Captain Soper also fastened to the other, but so far aft as not to affect the vitals, in consequence of which he could not get along side to lance him. The whale ran his boat to Truro, and after cutting down the chocks of the boat with the line and making her leak, the line was cut and the whale went away with the harpoon and about 50 fathoms of line. Capt. Cook brought his whale to Provincetown in triumph. It is over 50 feet long, and will make about 25 bbls. oil. Fin-backs are the most dangerous whales to capture, on account of their uncommon speed.

LICENSE QUESTION IN VERMONT.—The N. Y. Tribune says that the license law of Vermont was so altered at the last session of the Legislature as to provide for submitting to the people of the State at large the question of license or no license. If a majority vote for license, it will be the duty of the courts to grant a retail license to every applicant of good moral character—that is, in effect, to every one who has not been convicted of some immoral act. If the majority vote no license, the traffic will be entirely prohibited, so far as the State law can effect it, throughout the State. The question is to be decided on the first Tuesday in March. Meanwhile the State Temperance Society has called a special meeting, which will be held at Springfield on the 20th of January, to concert measures for securing a righteous verdict from the people.

A FALSE HAND.—One of the prisoners escaped from Sing Sing prison by an ingenious expedient. The prisoners are conducted from the workshops to the cells in parties of fifty, and when all are in their cells the keepers go round and count them, each convict putting his hand through the bars to indicate his presence. All apparently responded in this manner on Wednesday evening. Yesterday morning, however, on passing one of the cells, a sentry heard something fall. He rapped, and receiving no answer, opened the cell. Lo! the bird had flown, leaving a beautiful wooden hand, ingeniously carved. The facts were soon known. The fugitive employed one of the convicts to stick the hand in the bars of his cell, while he remained in the workshops, from which he easily escaped. He had carved the hand in his cell, carrying out the shavings every morning to the workshop.

THE ASIATIC CHOLERA IN PERSIA.—According to the Gazette Medicale, six Princes and several Princesses of the Court of Persia have been cut off by the Asiatic cholera. The mother of the Prince Royal, and the only daughter of the Schah, had been attacked, but had recovered under the treatment of Dr. Colquet. Among the victims is the celebrated Mirza Aboul Hassan Khan, Minister of Foreign Affairs, who was a Minister in this country in the year 1820. Another Minister of the Schah, the Vizier of the Prince Royal, and other high functionaries of the court, have been cut off by the cholera. The disease appears to have been particularly fatal among the upper classes. It was spreading in all directions, and had taken the course of Astrachan and Moscow. It was expected, however, that its progress would be arrested by the cold of winter.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—The St. Louis Republicon says that in the Circuit Court, Judge Krum gave his decision in a case of much importance. It was one which called into question the constitutionality of the act regulating the residence, in the State, of free colored persons. He decided in favor of the law, and expressed the opinion that none but free white persons could enjoy any of the rights of citizenship. This, of course, excludes the Indian as well as the Negro. Under this decision of Judge Krum, the County Court had five negro men, and two negro women, professing or claiming to be free, whipped and sent out of the city.

INAUGURATION OF GOV. YOUNG.—The inauguration of Hon. John Young as Governor of the State of New York took place in the Executive Chamber at Albany on Friday, the 1st inst. The Chamber was filled by an assembly composed in good part of the most eminent citizens of the State. The oath of office was administered by the Secretary of State. Gov. Young made no address on the occasion, deeming it best in the present state of his health to reserve the remarks appropriate to his entrance upon the duties of Chief Magistrate of the Empire State until the meeting of the Legislature. SUMMARY.

The King of Prussia has presented to the New York State Library six splendid folio volumes, by way of acknowledgment for the "Natural History of New York," a copy of which had been forwarded to him. His Majesty also intends to present to the Library a copy of the Government edition of the works of Frederick the Great, as soon as the printing of the same shall be completed. The Albany Argus says:—"Since the Regents took charge of the Library, it has increasad about fifty per cent. in extent. It now numbers some fifteen or sixteen thousand volumes, against ten thousand some three years since. And this collection includes some of the choicest and rarest books extant. One of the latest additions is the Warden Library, famous for its interest and value."

Suppose a man drinks four glasses of liquor a day at five cents a glass—in a week he spends one dollar and forty cents, and in a year seventy-two dollars and eighty cents. This will buy the following articles:

Four barrels of flour, say,	$24 00
Four pair of boots, say,	15 00
Forty pounds of butter,	10 00
A hundred pounds of beef,	8 00
A new hat,	4 00
A new satin vest,	5 00
A bonnet for wife,	5 00
Sugar plumbs, etc., for children,	1 80
	$72 80

The following paragraph is extracted from a Washington letter in the True Sun: "Yesterday the last will of Capt. McCavet, of the 8th infantry, killed in Worth's division, at the storming of Monterey, arrived in the city. It was found in his trunk after the battle, and appeared to have been written the night previous. He wills to the Orphan Asylum, in New York city, where he was nurtured in his childhood, nearly all his effects, including a farm in the State of New York, and some money due him as pay."

The editor of the Detroit Advertiser, has received a letter from J. Houghton, Jr., stating that among the many discoveries which have been made in the Mineral Regions of Lake Superior during the past season, there has been one which is of great interest to the man of science. It is the discovery of native Loadstone, a variety of the pleisto-magnetic iron ore. It was discovered by Bela Hubbard, Esq. who was carrying on a geological, in connection with a United States linear survey, and who has collected the only specimens ever obtained in that region. He was led to the discovery by noticing the great fluctuations in the bearing of the magnetic needle.

Mr. Isaac Franklin died on the 27th of April last, on a plantation which belonged to him, in the parish of West Feliciana, leaving, at the usually vigorous age of fifty-five, a fortune amounting to nearly a million of dollars. With a rare benevolence and consideration for the prosperity of the rising generation, he bequeathed the principal part of his property toward building and endowing an institution of learning in Summer county, Tennessee, his native State, for the use of the necessitous children living there. The locality chosen by Mr. F. for the erection of the seminary, to which he devoted the chief part of his large fortune, is Fairvue plantation, County of Summer.

The Norfolk Herald, of Dec. 29, says that on Sunday a party of our colored population, consisting, as we are informed, of three men (including the boatmen,) two women, and five children, set off in a sail-boat to visit a farm at Newtown, on the Eastern Branch. The wind blew in heavy flaws at intervals; but, it seems, the boatman was not admonished of the danger of keeping the sail up till he had passed some distance above the drawbridge, when, in attempting to take it down in a heavy flaw, the boat upset, and all were drowned but himself and one of his children who was of the party, whom he (being a good swimmer) succeeded in saving.

The Madison (Wisconsin) Democrat states that there have been sold in the Milwaukie land district during the last year 700,000 acres of land, which leave but 500,000 acres in the whole district now subject to entry. Should the demand of the next year be half as great as the present one, there will not be an acre undisposed of there which is not entirely valueless; for, of this amount of half a million of acres now unsold, there must necessarily be a large amount of marsh land, which will not be entered for several years at least.

Justice, at last, has been done to the celebrated Rowland Hill, who first suggested, and for years so zealously struggled for, the universal penny-postal system. He has been appointed Secretary to the Postmaster General, with a salary of £1,200 a year. As the Postmaster General is always a nobleman and a member of the Cabinet existing for the time, going out of office with a change of ministry, Mr. Rowland Hill will, in reality, be the actual chief director of the Post Office, his office being permanent.

Look back upon the Past. Hold a reckoning with Time. Forgive those who have injured you. Dismiss prejudices from your mind. After a close scrutiny, resolve to correct your imperfections, and avoid the errors of your past life. In a word, seek to do to others as you would that others should do to you.

The Camden, N. J., Phœnix, says that Isaac Mickle, Esq., of that city, has succeeded in applying gun cotton (newly invented powder) to the propulsion of machinery, in a manner which promises to be of great use to the mechanical world.

We learn that books are to be opened in Baltimore for subscriptions, preparatory to building a line of Magnetic Telegraph from Washington to New Orleans, passing through Charleston and all the important commercial cities on the route.

Col. J. F. H. Clairborne, of New Orleans, met with a serious loss by the sinking of the steamer Maria in the Mississippi. A manuscript volume illustrating the history of the south-west, with biographical sketches and incidents of frontier adventures, upon which he had been engaged for several years, and which he had just got ready for the press, was lost.

It is stated on good authority that there have been more deserters from our army of 10,000 men the past year than from the French army of 300,000 soldiers.

Letters have been received from Mr. King, by the relatives of Mr. John Starr, one of the inventors of the Magnetic Light, who left this city nearly two years since, in company with his partner, Mr. Saunders, and Mr. King, for the purpose of patenting the invention in England, acquainting them with his death. He died suddenly in Birmingham, England, on the 21st ult. of consumption.

Mr. Alexander Vattemare, we learn from the Paris correspondent of the Boston Atlas, is again about to visit the United States, the French Government having appropriated 6,000 francs to pay his expenses. He will bring many rare and valuable books for the United States, and for several States, cities, &c. Among them is Denon's great work on Egypt, one of the most splendid works ever issued from the press.

The clerk of the Post Office at Nashua, N. H., while distributing the mail a few days since, noticed that a sealed newspaper felt rather heavy. Thinking a newspaper would bear squeezing, he pressed it with his hand, when c-r-a-c-k! went something inside. Looking in at the end, he saw something which he found to be a rich gold locket, containing one of the most charming faces imaginable.

A few weeks since, while engaged in digging a well in the lower part of Lowndes county, Ga., within about a mile of the Florida line, the workmen found a human body, completely turned to chalk. They had mutilated the body considerably before they were aware what it was. After they discovered it was a human body, they succeeded in getting nearly or quite all the parts.

The first bar of American Railroad Iron was made in 1844, and there are now sixteen or eighteen foundries at which it is made, and these make over one hundred and twenty thousand tons per annum. This amount is sufficient to lay four miles of railroad per day, or twelve hundred miles per year. The progress of this manufacture, in the short space of two years, in this country, is very remarkable, and is a strong manifestation of American enterprise and skill.

Hon. Alexander Barrow, U. S. Senator from Louisiana, died in Baltimore, Dec. 29. He had left Washington as the friend of the Hon. G. Davis of Kentucky, with a view to the adjustment of the difficulty with Mr. Bailey, of Va., which had led to a challenge to fight a duel. He was taken ill very suddenly and so violently as to baffle the skill of the best medical advisers.

MARRIED,

In Stowcreek township, N. J., on the evening of the 19th inst., by Eld. Samuel Davison, Mr. SAMUEL J. AYERS and Mrs. ARTELIA MOORE.

By the same, in the same township, on the evening of the 25th inst., Mr. HOWEL RANDOLPH and Mrs. JULIA ANN AYERS.

On the 24th of Dec. by Eld. V. Hull, Mr. AMOS ROGERS, Jr., to Miss JANE LOUISA ROGERS, all of Preston.

DIED,

In Berlin, Rensselaer Co., N. Y.. on the 24th inst., Mrs. JUDITH SATERLEE, relict of Mr. Sylvester Saterlee, and former widow of Eld. Asa Coon, in the 88th year of her age. Through a long course of years, the deceased exhibited a lovely pattern of a Christian life. She was one of the happy few whose life, in all its vicissitudes, testified to her unwavering steadfastness in the doctrine and duties of Christianity; especially during the official life of her former husband, Eld. C., who derived much spiritual aid from her prayers and conversation, in instructing the ignorant and comforting the afflicted. In her death the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Berlin has lost a much-beloved member, and one of its ancient and brightest ornaments. Her funeral was attended at the Seventh-day Baptist church in Berlin, on Sabbath, the 26th. Sermon by Eld. W. B. Maxson, from 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8—"I have fought a good fight," &c. She is interred in Berlin by the grave of her former husband.

In Cussewago, Crawford Co., Pa., on the 18th of Nov. last, Mrs. MARY THICKSTEN, aged 77 years. Mrs. T. had been a professor of the religion of Jesus Christ for thirty-seven years, and had during all that time adorned the doctrine which she professed. For the last seven years of her pilgrimage, she had been a conscientious observer of the Sabbath of the Bible, and was, at the time of her decease, a worthy and much-beloved member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hayfield. She had been confined to her room with consumption for about ten months, which disease she bore with much patience, and finally departed in the full assurance of a blessed immortality. She was a widow, and has left several coildren and grandchildren, together with a large circle of friends, to mourn their bereavement. "Blessed are the dead, that die in the Lord." T. B. B.

In Preston, N. Y., Dec. 27th, Wid. SALLY LEWIS, aged 70 years. Mrs. Lewis was a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Preston. Her funeral was attended by a large concourse of people, when a sermon was preached from Micah 2: 10—"Arise ye, and depart, for this is not your rest."

BEALES' DAGUERRIAN GALLERIES.

MR. A. J. BEALES invites the attention of the public to his Premium One Dollar Daguerrian Galleries, at Nos. 156 and 175 Broadway, New-York. Having adopted the latest improvements, he has reducrd his prices one-half, and guarantees to take pictures equal to any in the city, in any position or dress, and with any desirable shade or color. Gold lockets of all descriptions constantly on hand. Attendance from eight in the morning until sunset.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

The Winter Term of this Institution will commence on the 6th of January, 1847, and continue fourteen weeks, under the care of J. R. IRISH & G. EVANS.
DERUYTER, Nov. 1, 1846.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.
ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

Miscellaneous.

HONOR TO THE PLOUGH.

Though clouds o'ercast our native sky,
And seem to dim the sun,
We will not down in languor lie,
Or deem the day is done:
The rural arts we loved before
No less we'll cherish now;
And crown the banquet, as of yore,
With Honor to the Plough.

In these fair fields, whose peaceful spoil
To faith and hope are given,
We'll seek the prize with honest toil,
And leave the rest to Heaven.
We'll gird us to our work like men
Who own a holy vow,
And if in joy we meet again,
Give Honor to the Plough.

Let Art, arrayed in magic power,
With Labor hand in hand
Go forth, and now in peril's hour
Sustain a sinking land.
Let never Sloth unnerve the arm,
Or Fear the spirit cow;
These words alone should work a charm—
All Honor to the Plough.

The heath redress, the meadow drain,
The latent swamp explore,
And o'er the long-expecting plain
Diffuse the quickening store;
Then fearless urge the furrow deep
Up to the mountain brow,
And when the rich results you reap,
Give Honoro t the Plough.

So still shall Health by pastures green
And nodding harvests roam,
And still behind her rustic screen
Shall Virtue find a home;
And while their bower the muses build
Beneath the neighboring bough,
Shall many a greatful verse be filled
With Honor to the Plough. [Blackwood.

FULTON'S FIRST STEAMBOAT VOYAGE.

We find in the last number of Hunt's Merchant's Magazine, an interesting description of Robert Fulton's first voyage from New York to Albany, which "opened the door to a progress for the human race, equivalent, at one bound, to the march of ages." The following extract from this description will be read with pleasure:—

"Judge Wilson resided in the city of New York when Fulton was building his boat, and frequently saw her on the stocks. She was a queer-looking craft, and excited much attention, and not a little ridicule. When she was launched, and the steam engine placed in her, that also was looked upon of a piece with the boat built to float it. A few had seen one at work raising the Manhattan water into the reservoir back of the alms-house; but to the people at large, the whole thing was a hidden mystery. Curiosity was greatly excited. When it was announced in the New York papers, that the boat would start from the foot of Cortland-st., at six and a half o'clock on Friday morning, the 4th of September, and take passengers to Albany, there was a broad smile on every face, as the inquiry was made, if any one would be fool enough to go? A friend of the writer, hearing that he intended to venture, accosted him in the street, 'John, will thee risk thy life in such a concern! I tell thee she is the most fearful wild fowl living, and thy father ought to restrain thee.' When Friday morning came, the wharves, piers, house-tops, and every 'coigne of vantage' from which a sight could be obtained, were filled with spectators.

"There were twelve berths, and every one was taken through to Albany. The fare was seven dollars. All the machinery was uncovered and exposed to view. The periphery of the balance-wheels, of cast iron, some four or more inches square, ran just clear of the water. There were no outside guards—the balance-wheels being supported by their respective shafts, which projected over the sides of the boat. The forward part was covered by a deck, which afforded shelter to the hands. The after part was fitted up, in a rough manner, for passengers. The entrance into the cabin was from the stern, in front of the steersman, who worked a tiller as in an ordinary sloop. Black smoke issued from the chimney, steam hissed from every ill-fitted valve and crevice of the engine. Fulton himself was there. His remarkably clear and sharp voice was heard above the hum of the multitude and the noise of the engine; his step was confident and decided; he heeded not the fearfulness, doubts, or sarcasms of those by whom he was surrounded. The whole scene combined had in it an individuality and an interest which comes but once, and is remembered forever.

"When every thing was ready, the engine was set in motion, and the boat moved steadily but slowly from the wharf; as she turned up the river and was fairly under weigh, there arose such a huzza as ten thousand throats never gave before. The passengers returned the cheer, but Fulton stood upon the deck, his eye flashing with an unusual brilliancy, as he surveyed the crowd. He felt that the magic wand of success was waving over him, and he was silent.

"When coming up Haverstraw Bay, a man in a skiff lay waiting for us. His appearance indicated a miller; the paddle-wheels had very naturally attracted his attention; he asked permission to come on board. Fulton ordered a line to be thrown to him, and he was drawn along side; he said he 'did not know about a mill going up stream, and came to inquire about it.' One of the passengers, an Irishman, seeing through the simple-minded miller at a glance, became his cicerone; showed him all the machinery, and contrivances by which one wheel could be thrown out of gear, when the mill was required to come about. After finishing the examination, said he, 'That will do; now show me the mill-stones.' 'O!' said the other, 'that is a secret which the master,' pointing to Fulton, 'has not told us yet; but when we come back from Albany with a load of corn, then if you come on board, you'll see the meal fly.' Dennis kept his countenance, and the miller left.

"As we passed West Point, the whole garrison was out, and cheered us as we passed. At Newberg it seemed as if all Orange county was collected there; the whole side-hill city seemed animated with life. Every sail-boat and water-craft was out; the ferry boat from Fishkill was filled with ladies. Fulton was engaged in seeing a passenger landed, and did not observe the boat until she bore up nearly alongside. The flapping of a sail arrested his attention, and, as he turned, the waving of so many handkerchiefs, and the smiles of bright and happy faces, struck him with surprise; he raised his hat and exclaimed, 'That is the finest sight we have seen yet.'

"Fulton, in his letter to Barlow, (22d August, 1807,) adds to these reminiscences:—'My steamboat voyage to Albany and back, has turned out rather more favorable than I had calculated. The distance to Albany is one hundred and fifty miles. I ran up in thirty-two hours, and down in thirty hours. The latter is just five miles an hour. I had a light breeze against me the whole way going and coming, so that no use was made of my sails, and this voyage has been performed wholly by the power of the steam engine. I overtook many sloops and schooners beating to the windward, and passed them as if they had been at anchor.'"

SHAKER FARM.

The present settlement of Shakers, or United Brethren, at New Lebanon, was the first spot on which this sect ever located. They commenced here about forty years ago. The society consists at present of about 600 persons, more than half of whom are females. From small beginnings they have acquired large possessions, holding at this time not less than seven thousand acres of land, mostly lying contiguously. We spent a few hours examining various objects connected with this community.

Their buildings are all built in the most substantial manner, and are constructed with particular regard to convenience. One of their barns is considered in all respects the best contrived and the most perfect of any we have seen. It is one hundred and forty-one feet long, fifty feet wide, and twenty-five feet high in the walls. It consists of three stories. The basement is devoted to the stock and the storage of vegetables in winter, the second and third to hay and grain. The main entrance for produce is in the third story, which, from the barn being on the side of a hill, is nearly level with the ground. A floor runs lengthwise through the barn on this story, and the hay and other articles are pitched downward into the bays on each side. The barn is capable of containing two hundred tons of hay, and it is so disposed that scarcely any of it has to be raised higher than the wagon from which it is thrown. Only two hands are necessary to unload—one to pitch off, and one to keep the mow level, thus saving a great amount of labor, compared with what is required in barns of common construction.

The apartments for the cattle are complete. The walls, which are of very solid stone-work, are plastered, and though cool in summer, we should suppose they would be so warm in winter that no frost would be found there; windows in each side permit free ventilation. The fodder is thrown into racks for the stock from the "feeding floor" in the second story. In front of the racks are mangers to catch any straw that drops from the racks, as the fodder is pulled out by the animals. An open space is left between the racks and mangers, which allows the animals ready access to fresh air, prevents the hay in the racks from being made unpalatable by their breath, and gives room also to slip in boxes, when it is wished to feed with slops or roots. The man who had charge of the stock said he could feed and take care of a hundred animals in this barn, with less labor than he could manage twenty in any other barn he ever saw. The cattle stand on a platform with a gentle slope, which renders it easier to keep them clean and dry. The cows are tied with chains around the neck, and are always milked in their stalls, summer and winter. They are milked exactly at fixed times. So punctual are the attendants to this, that a clock is kept in the apartment, and the herdsman told us at what moment the cows would be in their places.

The barnyard is so contrived that none of the manure is wasted. It is kept littered with straw, and such waste matter as can be procured, and the manure from the stalls is made into compost with that in the yard, mixed with muck, and is not used until it has become fine by decomposition.

THE BABOON AND HOTTENTOT.

Many are the extraordinary anecdotes related of the baboon. One was told me by Moffatt, of Koranna, who possessed a tame baboon, which, in common with all the monkey race, entertained an intense dread of snakes. Its master, from mere wantonness, forcibly entwined a dead snake round the baboon's neck, when the animal sat motionless for upwards of an hour, stupfied with fear, and on the snake being removed stole timidly into the hut of the Koranna. After a short lapse of time the baboon was, according to custom, called on by his master to scratch his head; but, although summoned several times in an angry voice, it refused to move. The Koranna rose and struck it with a stick, and immediately the enraged and aggrieved animal sprang upon him. The neighbors, hearing the scuffle, ran to see what was the matter, but could distinguish nothing through the dust raised in the hut, except hot cinders, which were kicked about in all directions from a fire-place in the centre of the abode. The screams of the man and the baboon were intermingled, till at length the latter dashed out through the bystanders and escaped to some mountain. The Koranna had been rather seriously bitten in the encounter, and was some weeks in recovering, but ultimately regained his strength, and bent upon revenge, scoured the mountain in search of his antagonist. He at last descried his baboon, which he could discern from any other, peeping over a crag, and leveled a gun at him; but the animal instantly withdrew his head, and held forward one of his companions as a target instead of himself, chattering loudly as in defiance, so that the man was compelled to return foiled and disappointed.

Writing on Newspapers.—A circular has been issued by the Post-office department, directing Deputy Postmasters to remove the wrappers from all transient newspapers, printed circulars, price currents, pamphlets and magazines received at their respective offices, and if found to contain any manuscript or memorandum of any kind, either written or stamped, or any marks or signs, except the name and address of the person to whom it is directed, shall be charged with letter postage, by weight; and if the person to whom it is directed shall refuse to pay such postage, the Postmaster is to send to the office whence it came, and have the offender prosecuted for the penalty of $5. The name of the sender written or stamped on the newspaper subjects him to the same penalty.

Dueling in Japan.—The Japanese have a most capital mode of dueling, and dueling is very fashionable and very frequent, especially among the military. They have improved upon the European custom, or rather, as they know nothing of the Europeans, they set the civilized world an example that has at least something of bravery in it. In our country, death by the hands of a duellist is, or ought to be, murder, and all duels are the result of cowardice, and nothing else. Any fool can nerve himself to stand up and be shot at, particularly if he is lacking in moral courage; but it requires moral and physical courage both, to go into a duel in the Japanese fashion. The manner of fighting in Japan, is the exact opposite of ours, and is a great test of courage and fortitude. They meet, and the party who desires satisfaction or revenge takes out his hanger and rips open his own belly, and infamy is the portion of his adversary for ever after, if he does not do the same. Death is considered a lighter misfortune than infamy and dishonor—so that a challenge and acceptance are no trifling matters in Japan. The parties who quarrel in that country, make no boy's play, as we do, and have no long correspondence to publish in newspapers to convince the world of what might have been known before, that both are fools and cowards.

M. Guizot.—No one can better illustrate the superiority of moral over physical beauty; M. Guizot is a pigamy in stature, his clothes though, neat, are ill made, and the tails of his coat are long enough for a giant. Still, at first sight he commands respect, and nothing can be more engaging than the mild, kindly look of his fine eyes. He always carries his head thrown back; his contemplation seems fixed upon the heavens, as if from thence he had descended, and there he was to return. But it is when excited that M. Guizot's appearance becomes imposing. When he ascends the tribune, in the Chamber of Deputies, raises his hand, and fixes his eagle glance upon the rebellious spirits in those stormy precincts, every enemy seems to quail, and such silence and observance prevail, that you might hear the buzzing of a fly against the fan light. The impression, however, becomes far more imposing when his sonorous and harmonious voice, and his accent of command, convey to his hearers the dictates of an intellect fraught with practical views, and full of home thrusts, with a command of eloquence, flowing, full, continuous and irresistible.

The Emperor of Russia.—The emperor was fifty years old on the 7th inst. He seems to be in perfect health, and moves about among his people in the most fearless manner. A few weeks ago he was in Warsaw, and did not hesitate to go on foot, openly among the crowd, which was before his palace at night; just as if he were a common man. And yet every body knew him. It would have been easy to kill him, one would suppose. A poor carpenter fell from the top of a house in that city, and was killed, just as the emperor passed in his carriage. Instantly he sprang out, took up the dying man in his arms, and did every thing that he could for him. When he saw that life was extinct, and not till then, he entered his carriage again. The next day he sent a very handsome sum to the poor afflicted father of the unfortunate man. If a fire occurs in St. Petersburgh, he is at it as soon as possible, and so is his son, the heir apparent; and no men are more active in trying to put it out. On such occasions, the emperor is often seen among the men, taking hold with his own hands, and doing all that he can. He is certainly no common man.

[Dr. Baird.

Editorial Ability.—An English paper says: —"Newspaper writing has grown to be an art of itself. Many a literary man who, thought because the 'greater includes the less,' every author is ex-officio qualified to be an editor, has sunk back into the rear place of the press, after some smart writings had shown his bookish talent and his inability to deal with facts. Others, who could pour forth volumes, have failed, because they could not cope with hydraulic pressure, or prompt selection of salient points needed for the space and rapid comments of the journal. Take the best papers of London or Paris, different as the circumstances of the case may be, and you must allow that it is not every booby that could seize the moral spirit of passing history. The same may be said, with equal justice, of the American press. People of some little talent fancy they can edit a newspaper, if they can do nothing else; but they essentially find their mistake. Not only is intellect, but a knowledge of the world, miscellaneous information, tact, industry, rapidity of thought, a nervous style, and a capacity at once to catch the strong and weak points of every subject, are required for a good editor."

Broken Wind in Horses.—Science has at last demonstrated that this troublesome and generally fatal disease, is occasioned by the rupture of the air cells, or vessels, of the lungs. The difficult and laborious respiration manifested by persons after violent and prolonged exertion, is unquestionably the result of the same cause; and in many cases, is no doubt hereditary. 'Dr. Jackson,' says a contemporary, 'found that of twenty-eight persons affected with this rupture of the air cells, eighteen were the offspring of parents, (fathers or mothers,) affected with the same disease, and that several of them had died from this cause. In some instances the brothers and sisters of these persons were similarly affected. On the other hand, of fifty persons unaffected, three only were the offspring of parents who had suffered from it—whence it follows that rupture of the air cells of the lungs is frequently a hereditary disease, a fact important to man and beast, at all events to the breeder of the latter.'

Brazilian Monkeys.—Mr. Campbell, the traveler, relates the following anecdote: "As I was passing through the woods of Brazil, I saw a shining black monkey, called the preacher, with bright eyes, round ears, and a round beard under his chin and throat, sitting at the top of a tree, while a swarm of monkeys sat below him. He sat up a most frightful howling, and then, after a pause of some time gave a signal to the rest, who all began to howl together. The monkey at the top, made another sign for them to be silent, and began again, in his turn, to howl by himself. This was continued until the party I was with, being tired, fired a few shots among them, the party broke up, and such a confusion, and leaping, and scampering, I never saw before.

VARIETY.

Miss Edgeworth says, that a man in a furious passion is terrible to his enemies, but a woman in a passion is disgusting to her friends; she loses the respect due to her sex, and she has not masculine strength and courage to enforce any other species of respect. These circumstances should be well considered by writers who advise that no difference should be made in the education of the two sexes. We cannot help thinking that their happiness is of more consequence than their speculative rights; and we wish to educate women so that they may be happy in the situations in which they are most likely to be placed.

Baron Liebig imagines the essence of the potato disease to consist in the conversion of the albumen, a usual constituent of healthy potatoes, into caseine, a principle which, by its great instability of composition, is supposed to cause the potato to putrify rapidly. Rev. F. Dauvenoy states, in the Taunton Courier, that he has discovered by the microscope a minute insect, crystal-like and transparent, resembling a spider, in the midst of potato mildew, evidently feeding on it, and making its nest among the thread-beds of fungi. From observations made, there must be more than 100 in a single tuber.

We understand, says the Boston Traveler, that the American Peace Society have taken steps to offer a large premium ($500,) for an impartial but strong and searching Review of the Mexican War, in its origin, progress and results, pecuniary, political, and moral; the work to be published after the close of the war—if it should come to a close soon—and to be circulated generally throughout the land, as a warning against similar evils in future. A good design, and one in which good men of all parties may well take an interest; and we wish it all possible success.

It is a singular historical fact, that a confidential intimacy subsisted between King James II. and William Penn, the Quaker, the founder of Pennsylvania. James once condescended to use a playful reproof to the peculiarity of the Quaker, who, the first time he entered his presence after he became king, did so with his hat on. James immediately took off his own. "Friend James," said Penn, "why dost thee uncover thy head?" "Because," replied his majesty, with a smile, "it is the fashion here for only one man to wear his hat."

A London correspondent of the National Intelligencer, says that among other novelties of the day, may be mentioned an improved printing-press, which was recently tested in London, and threw off the astonishing number of 17,500 impressions an hour. The inventor is Mr. Little, a gentleman connected with the office of the Illustrated News. He is said to have refused the sum of £10,000 for his invention.

Land along the Glasgow and Edinburgh railway, which previous to its construction was not worth five shillings an acre, now commands from thirty to forty shillings an acre, on account of the superior facilities for the transport of farm produce, and materials for improving the fertility of the soil. It is estimated that not less than 200,000 men are now employed in Great Britain in the construction of railways.

Louis Philippe is allowed by the nation 500-000 pounds per annum in addition to his immense private fortune. He also receives a large allowance for the Duchess d'Orleans, and 40,000 for the Comte de Paris. He has also 13 or 14 magnificent palaces at his disposal, besides Neuilly and the Chateau d'Eu, which are his own private property. He is entitled to all the fire-wood and timber cut in the royal forests, which are of immense extent. Since his accession to the throne, he has derived, it is stated, upwards of 5,000,000 sterling from this source, equal to $25,000,000.

There can be no such thing as true politeness without a sincere desire to please; and there can be no true desire to please, without the sentiments of love and goodwill to all; anything short of this, is affectation, a species of hypocrisy. And there can be no universal sentiment of goodwill in the heart of man, but by the Divine influence, which is only given through the Christian faith. Therefore Christianity constitutes the only genuine principles of politeness.

One of the most important of all household duties, is to keep the door nobs, the lamps, the spoons, the plate, and 'all that sort of thing,' in brightly polished order. If instead of the chalk, and preparations, ladies will use camphine oil and rotten stone, a far brighter, more durable, aud quicker polish can be obtained than in any other way. Camphine is the article used for producing the exquisite polish of the Daguerreotype plates and nothing has been found to equal it. So says the Bangor Courier.

King Richard I., in one of his battles with the French, took Philip de Dreux, Bishop of Beauvais prisoner. The Pope interceded for his liberty in a letter, wherein he styled the fighting Prelate his 'dearly beloved son.' The King, by way of answer, sent the Bishop's suit of armor, stained with blood and covered with dust, to the Pope, and asked, 'whether he knew his son's coat, or no? The Pope was ashsmed at the sight, and left the Bishop's at Richard's mercy.

There is nothing that wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which naturally attend them. Haggard looks and pale complexions are the natural indications of a female gamester.

A case is reported of a gentleman who having occasion to prune a vine, stuck half of a potato on the stump of the branch, and bound a piece of cloth over it to preserve it from the weather. On examining the cloth a few months afterwards he was surprised to find a number of new potatoes grown from the piece thus enclosed.

A society has lately been formed in England, entitled "The British and Foreign Society for promoting the colonization of the Holy Land." It is stated that "there is a growing, and now very general desire among the Jews to return thither, and that in many parts of the world there are large classes of Jews who are purely agriculturalists, and therefore just the people to flourish there; that whereas some years ago there were but about 2,000 Jews resident in Palestine, there are now about 40,000."

The annual crop of hay raised in this country is represented to be 15,000,000 tons, which at $8 per ton is $120,000,000; a large amount for a single article.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

Remittances and communications must be made in all cases without expense to the publishers. The former may always be done through a Post-master, by handing him the amount to be remitted, taking his receipt, and forwarding the receipt by mail, post paid; or the money may be enclosed in a letter, post paid, directed to the publishers.

N. B. The Postage on all these Periodicals is reduced by the late Post Office law, to about one-third the former rates, making a very important saving in the expense to mail subscribers.

 In most of the large cities and towns in the United States lying on the principal Railroad and Steamboats routes, these periodicals will be delivered FREE OF POSTAGE.

This paper is not bound to the creed or cause of any clique, association, party, sect or set of men, but expresses freely the opinions of its editor at the time, and of such contributors as may honor it with their thoughts, or be supposed by the editor to do so. It will be his endeavor to give such a variety and quantity of matter as to meet the wants of every enlightened family, and especially of those which seek more light. He will not only give the daguerreotype likeness of Time as he passes, but will examine every new thing that he meets, and some things that are old, without fear or favor. Where he cannot convince, he will try to be good-natured. Where he cannot satisfy himself of the truth, he will be contented to confess his ignorance. In short, he will endeavor to help forward, in a neighborly way, every thing but Humbug. That he will endeavor to knock down and drag out, even if it should cling to the throne of political power or the horns of the sacred altar.

He will not take an oath never to be wiser. He will not scorn truth, though it may come from an enemy. He will not flatter the poor because he is one of them. He will not hate and abuse the rich because he is not one of them. But he will endeavor to establish a better understanding between the extremes of society—showing both ends that happiness is most likely to be found between them—consisting in a great measure in a mutual endeavor to abolish idleness, disease, poverty and roguery.

With these general purposes, it is the prime object of the editor of this paper to get an honest living.

"PREACH THE WORD."

A Charge delivered by Eld. Walter B. Gillett to Nathan Wardner, at his ordination in Plainfield, N. J., on the 31st of Dec. 1846, just before sailing as a missionary to China.

It becomes my duty, my brother, to deliver to you a solemn charge, in the name of the Council by whom you are now put in trust with the ministry, to "take heed to the ministry which you have received of the Lord," that you fulfill it. This may appear to be a superfluous act, as your experience has already taught you most of the duties connected with the gospel ministry. But it can do no harm, at least, to "stir up your mind by way of rememberance."

In the language of Paul to Timothy, "I charge thee, before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and doctrine." I beg your indulgence for a few moments, while I speak—

I. Of the thing to be done—"Preach the word."
II. Of the matter of your preaching.
III. Of the manner of your preaching.

I. You, my brother, are now commissioned to preach the word. A more responsible duty was never committed to mortals—to be mouth-piece for God. It is God's way of saving sinners, and advancing his kingdom in the earth. You are now sent of God to bear his message of mercy to a lost and ruined world—to preach the gospel to sinners, that they may be saved. Your office is a sacred one; you are commissioned by the King of kings, to negotiate a treaty of reconciliation between an offended God and your offending fellow men. As an ambassador, you are to entreat men to be reconciled to God. The care of immortal souls is committed to you; and you must be always ready, like a trusty sentinel, for your work. The ignorant must be taught, the feeble comforted and encouraged, the transgressor reproved, and the obstinate rebuked. You must have milk for babes, and meat for those of full age; and, rightly dividing the word of God, you must "give to each a portion in due season." This will be sufficient to employ all the energies of your mind and body through life. While thus feeding the flock, you may drink but little of its milk; you may at times be called to go a warfare at your own charges—to administer to others spiritual things, and yet share but little in their temporal things. But be not discouraged, my brother, though all which is near and dear to you on earth is forsaken, and your days may be spent in a foreign land, among those who know not God. Always remember, that your record, as well as your reward, is on high; "for he that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal."

II. As to the matter of your preaching, you must preach the word—the truth as God has revealed it. As you have received your commission from God, from him you must get your instructions, and "preach the preaching that he bids you." The holy Bible, the Old and New Testaments, constitutes the treasury from which you are to draw your funds. The Bible must be your standard of faith and practice, and all your preaching must be tried by the "law and the testimony." You are not to teach for doctrine the commandments of men. Whatever you may find connected with your religious creed not taught in the Bible, cast it from you, my brother. You had better be an innovator upon human creeds, than upon the truth of God. We cannot, we will not, sanction the sophistries of the schools for the truths of God. Such heresies are of no common magnitude. I have confidence in you, my brother, that you are a firm advocate of Bible truth. Your past history, the sacrifices you have made of friends and interests, are in your favor, and satisfy us that you love the truth. Beware, in preaching, of metaphysics and philosophy falsely so called. Nothing is more unprofitable than metaphysical hair-splitting in divinity. Most of the errors in the church have grown out of this thing. Men make distinctions where God has made none, and reconcile apparent difficulties which God has not reconciled, and thus attempt to bring down the divine mysteries, which are beyond the grasp of Gabriel himself, to the measure of human intellect; and compress within the narrow compass of a nut-shell, the developments of redeeming mercy, that will tune the harps and fill the songs of the redeemed throughout a vast eternity. Attempt not to be "wise above what is written;" but, with the Apostle, let "Christ, and him crucified," be the theme of your preaching. Such was the preaching of the Reformation; such preaching God has always blessed, and such preaching will secure you success where Christ has not been known, and where you cannot build upon another man's foundation. May I not then adopt the language of the Apostle Paul to Timothy, and say to you, my brother, "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love, which is in Christ Jesus."

III. In regard to the manner of your preaching, much might be said; but at this time my words will be few, as circumstances demand it.

1. Always let your manner be plain, simple, and unaffected. I am fully persuaded that this is the kind of preaching that will do the most good. We do not suppose that it will always be the most popular. The multitude will go after the man who can make the greatest display, and please the taste. It is strong figures, bold metaphors, lofty diction, and acquired eloquence, that make the orator and the popular man. But remember, brother, that it is the truth of God, told in simplicity, and in sincerity, "not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth," that makes the useful preacher. Too often the enraptured multitude are led to admire the preacher more than the preaching, and the manner rather than the matter. With such the sympathies of the soul are kindled, not by the truth presented, but by the style and manner in which it has been spoken. One of the kings of France once said, that when he heard others preach, he went away pleased with the preacher; but when he heard Massillon, he always went away displeased with himself. That is the preaching, my dear brother, which God has bidden you to preach, which will leave upon the mind, not an impress of yourself and your manners, but of the text and the matter.

2. Let your manner be kind and conciliating. Nothing is more unbecoming a minister, than a harsh, severe, unkind manner, either in the pulpit or out of it. Duty, truth, and conscience, must not be compromised; yet there should be exercised a kindness and courtesy towards the various opinions, prejudices, practices, and feelings of those who differ from us. Paul "became all things to all men, that by all means he might save some." I am aware that it often requires much discretion to know how far we ought to yield and submit for the sake of peace. Reproof and rebuke are to be administered in their proper place; but do it at all times with all long-suffering and doctrine; not only with long-suffering, but with all long-suffering; and have that charity that suffers long and is kind. May you, my brother, have that wisdom which is from above, that is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy."

3. Let your preaching be edifying and instructive. Aim both at the passions and the intellect. Get the passions excited if you can, but let that be done through the medium of the understanding. If you can do this, you have effected an important purpose. You touch the springs of human action when they may be safely touched, and all the movements will be safe and regular. But highly to excite the passions, says a certain writer, before the understanding is enlightened, is like putting your machinery to work without a balance-wheel, or setting your vessel to sail in a storm without ballast.

With these remarks, I leave you in the hands of that God who has called you into the ministry and bidden you go far hence to the unenlightened heathen. Brother, our prayers and our best wishes go with you, and may you be a good minister, that when the great harvest-day shall arrive, you may come bringing your sheaves with you.

WRITTEN ARTICLES OF FAITH AND COVENANT.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I noticed in the Recorder of Dec. 17th, two questions, by INQUIRER, which he wants you or some of your correspondents to answer. I do not suppose that you, or Inquirer, thought I would attempt to answer them. But it seemed to me, that the first of the questions was so easy that even I might answer it, if I might not the second. The first question is as to the propriety of churches having a written Covenant and Articles of Faith. I think it is proper. The question, as Inquirer has stated it, seems to me to contain in reality two; for a Covenant and Articles of Faith are two things. One may be right, and the other wrong. Therefore they should be answered separately.

First, as to a Covenant. The word Covenant, according to Webster, in church affairs signifies a solemn agreement between church-members that they will walk together according to the precepts of the Gospel in brotherly affection. That such a Covenant, or agreement, is enjoined upon churches, will appear from the following Scriptures:—1 Thess. 5: 11—"Wherefore, comfort yourselves together, and edify one another;" Eph. 4: 4—"There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all;" Acts 4: 24—"And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart, and of one soul;" Rom. 12: 10—"Be kindly affectioned one toward another, with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another;" Eph. 4: 1—"Walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, ... endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace;" Eph. 3: 16—"Let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same things." These passages fully teach the existence of such a Covenant in the gospel church. They teach that we must "walk together." Although the word "covenant" is not used, yet it is there in fact. The covenant is one thing, and the name is another. As to the writing of it, all religious covenants revealed have been written—God's covenants with Abraham and Noah, and the Gospel, or "new covenant," as well as the one contained in the above-quoted scriptures. I am of the opinion, therefore, that it is "proper for a church to have a written covenant," only let it be gospel-wise.

As to "Articles of Faith," I would ask, first, Is it proper for churches to have faith? Most assuredly, "for by it the elders obtained a good report," and "through faith we understand that the world was framed by the word of God," "and by it they wrought righteousness." In fact, "without faith it is impossible to please God; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him." In this last passage, we have several articles of faith; first, the existence of a God, "He [God] is;" second, as to rewards, "He is the rewarder of all them," &c.; third, as to faith, "he that comes to God must believe;" fourth, God is to be sought unto. Here, then, we have not only the obligation to believe enjoined, but some of the articles of belief named. The only question now is, May we have the articles written? I think we may. Paul wrote them, and sent them to his Hebrew brethren; they received his letter, and therefore had "written articles of faith." Consequently, I think we may have them. PRESTONIAN.

PRESTON, Dec. 22, 1846.

PREACHING WITHOUT STUDY.

"Preaching without study," said an eminent divine, "is presumption." And presumptuous it must be for an erring mortal to enter upon the discharge of so important a duty without study; nor is it possible for such a man to "bring out of his treasury things new and old." Alas! treasury he has none who never studies. The venerable Wesley has said in his advice to a preacher, "Study the most useful books, and that regularly and constantly. Steadily spend all the morning in this employ, or at least five hours in four-and-twenty." Anticipating the objection, "I read only the Bible," he replies, "then you ought to teach others to read only the Bible, and by a parity of reason, to hear only the Bible; but if so, you need preach no more. If you need no other book but the Bible, you have got above St. Paul. He wanted others too. 'Bring the books,' said he, 'but especially the parchments.' Contract a taste for study by study, or return to your trade."

We are persuaded that an attention to this rule would strike at the root of much of the prevailing fanaticism of the times; and that if the trouble and pains of inquiry were more frequently rendered than they are, we should be presented with less religious novelty and religious distraction. The insisting upon this requirement would keep out many of the unqualified from the Christian ministry; and were it attended to in all cases, we should see less of the presumption and disputation which, in these days, is found to disturb the religious world. Such a study, too, as Mr. Wesley recommends—not merely of the Bible, but of sound interpretations of the Bible also, those for instance which are furnished in the Christian writers of the earlier and purer ages—would remove the leading cause of that diversity of sentiment which has presented our common Christianity, not in the strength and beauty of its intended unity and concord, but injured and disfigured by a multitude of conflicting sects.

RELIGION IN CHINA.

A lady correspondent of Bishop Meade, attached to the Episcopal mission in China, writing from Shanghai, furnishes the following picture of Chinese religion:—"The religious state of these Chinese is, to me, a very surprising one. Whenever we walk through the city, we meet the priests of Buddha, and see spacious temples dedicated to him, all, of course, supported by the people; and yet they seem to care not a straw either for priests, temples, or idols. The most bitter reproach they can bestow upon an idle young man, is to tell him he is fit for nothing but to be a priest, and when we have seen religious ceremonies performed, there was not the least semblance of devotion in either priest or people.

"Their only objects of reverence seem to be their ancestors and dead friends, and these, certainly, have a very strong hold upon them. The Roman Catholics are quite numerous here, and a few miles from Shanghai they have a village inhabited altogether by them. But although there are many priests here, they seem able to do little more than preserve the faith among the descendants of those who were converted many years ago, in the reign of Kang-hi, by the Jesuits; very few proselytes are said to be made now. It is really a most depressing thing to walk through these crowded streets, and see the hundreds of children growing up untaught, and the hundreds of old people just ready for the grave, who have never so much as heard of the Saviour, and then think of the fewness of our numbers, and of the time that must pass before even we, who are here now, can make any direct effort for them."

THE VAUDOIS TEACHER.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

The manner in which the Waldenses and Heretics disseminated their principles among the Catholic gentry, was by carrying with them a box of trinkets or articles of dress. Having entered the house of the gentry, and disposed of some of their goods, they cautiously intimated that they had commodities far more valuable than these—inestimable jewels, which they would show, if they could be protected from the clergy. They would give their purchasers a Bible or Testament; and thereby many were converted. [See Reinerous Saccho's Book, A. D. 1258.

"Oh, lady fair, these silks of mine
Are beautiful and rare—
The richest web of the Indian loom,
Which beauty's self might wear;
And those pearls are pure as thy own fair neck
With whose radiant light they vie;
I have brought them with me a weary way;
Will my gentle lady buy?"

And the lady smiled on the worn old man
Through the dark and clustering curls
Which veiled her brow, as she bent to view
His silks and glistening pearls;
And she placed their price in the old man's hand,
And lightly turned away;
But she paused at the wanderer's earnest call,
"My gentle lady, stay!

"Oh, lady fair, I have yet a gem,
Which a purer lustre flings
Than the diamond flash of the jeweled crown
On the lofty brow of kings;
A wonderful pearl of exceeding price,
Whose virtue shall not decay;
Whose light shall be a spell to thee,
And a blessing on thy way!"

The lady glanced at the mirroring steel
Where her form of grace was seen,
Where her eyes shone clear, and her dark locks waved
Their clasping pearls between;
"Bring forth thy pearl of exceeding worth,
Thou traveler gray and old;
And name the price of thy precious gem,
And my pages shall count thy gold."

The cloud went off from the pilgrim's brow,
As a small and meagre book,
Unchased with gold or diamond gem,
From his folding robe he took;
"Here, lady fair, is the pearl of price—
May it prove as such to thee.
Nay—keep thy gold—I ask it not,
For the word of God is free!"

The hoary traveler went his way—
But the gift he left behind
Had its pure and perfect work
On that high-born maiden's mind;
And she hath turned from the pride of sin
To the lowliness of truth,
And given her human heart to God
In its beautiful hour of youth.

And she hath left the grey old halls,
Where an evil faith had power,
The courtly knights of her father's train,
And the maidens of her bower;
And she hath gone to the Vaudois vales,
By lordly feet untrod,
Where the poor and needy of earth are rich
In the perfect love of God.

ORIGIN OF METRICAL PSALMODY.

One of the leading features of the Reformation was to render the expressions of devotion in a language which the people could understand. Luther, who was enthusiastically fond of sacred music, and who composed both hymns and tunes, appears to have entertained the notion of a metrical translation of the Psalms into the vernacular language of his countrymen. The credit, however, of taking the first decided steps in introducing metrical psalmody, belongs to a widely different character. About the year 1540, Clement Marot, a valet of the bed-chamber to Francis I., and the favorite poet of France, tired of the vanities of profane poetry, and privately tinctured with Lutheranism, attempted a version of David's Psalms in French rhymes. The author had no design of obtruding his translation into public worship, and even the ecclesiastical censors so little suspected what followed, that they readily sanctioned the work, as containing nothing contrary to sound doctrine. Marot, thus encouraged, dedicated his psalms to his royal master, and to the ladies of France. After a sort of apology to the latter, for the surprise he was prepared to expect they would evince on receiving the "sacred songs" from one who had heretofore delighted them with "love songs," the poet adds, in fluent verse, "that the golden age would now be restored, when we should see the peasant at his plough, the car-man in the streets, and the mechanic in his shop, solacing their toils with psalms and canticles; and the shepherd and shepherdess reposing in the shade, and teaching the rocks to echo the name of the Creator."

There was much more prophecy in these lines of Marot than he probably intended, certainly much more than those who first read them anticipated. In short, Marot's psalms soon eclipsed the popularity of his madrigals and sonnets. Not suspecting how prejudicial the predominant rage of psalm singing might prove to the ancient religion of Europe, the Catholics themselves adopted the sacred songs as serious ballads, and as a rational species of domestic merriment. They were in such demand that the printers could scarcely supply copies fast enough. In the festive and splendid courts of Francis, of a sudden nothing was heard but the psalms of Clement Marot; and with a characteristic liveliness of fancy, by each of the royal family and the nobility of the court, a psalm was chosen and fitted to the ballad tune which each liked best. Prince Henry, who delighted in hunting, was fond of, "Like as the hart desireth the water brook;" the king sang, "Stand up, O Lord, to revenge my quarrel;" the queen's favorite was, "Rebuke me not in thine indignation," which she always sung to a fashionable jig.

Meanwhile, Luther was proceeding in Germany with his opposition to the discipline and doctrines of Rome; and Calvin was laying at Geneva the foundation of a system of church polity more rigid and unadorned even than that contemplated by his illustrious fellow reformer. Both appear to have been disposed to supescede the old papistic hymns, which were superstitious and unedifying, with some kind of singing in which the congregation would bear a part. The publication of Marot's psalms taking place at the precise juncture when contemplating the introduction of some kind of hymns in the vernacular language, in connection with plain melodies easy to be learned by the common people, the French being the language of the canton, the reformer forthwith commenced the use of the French Psalm Book in his congregation at Geneva. Being set to simple and almost monotonous music, by Guillaume de France, they were presently established as a conspicuous and popular branch of the reformed worship. Nor were they only sung in Geneva congregation. They exhilerated the convivial assemblies of the Calvinists, were commonly heard in the streets, and accompanied the labors of the artificer. The weavers and the woolen manufacturers of Flanders, many of whom left the loom and entered into the ministry, are said to have been capital performers of this science. Thus was the poetical prediction of Clement Marot, relative to the popularity of his psalms, literally realized. By this time, too, the Catholics had become painfully sensible of the danger of allowing the people to indulge in the sweetness of religious themes taken from the Scriptures, to be sung in the vulgar tongue. At length the use or rejection of Marot's psalms became a sort of test between Catholics and Protestants. Those who used them were considered heretics; those who rejected them were esteemed faithful. A PARABLE FOR LITTLE GIRLS.

Naomi, the young and lovely daughter of Salathiel and Judith, was troubled in spirit, because at the approaching feast of trumpets, she would be compelled to appear in her plain, undyed stola, while some of her young acquaintances would appear in blue and purple and fine linen of Egypt. Her mother saw the gloom that appeared upon the face of the lovely child, and taking her apart, related to her this parable. A dove thus made her complaint to the guardian spirit of the feathered tribe:

"King genius, why is it that the hoarse-voiced and strutting peacock spreads his gaudy train in the sun, dazzling the eyes of every beholder with his richly-burnished neck and royal crown, to the astonishment and admiration of every passer-by, whilst I, in my plain plumage, am overlooked and forgotten by all? Thy ways, kind genius, seem not to be equal towards those under thy care and protection."

The genius listened to her complaint, and thus replied:

"I will grant thee a train similar in richness to that of the gaudy bird you seem to envy, and shall demand of thee one condition in return."

"What is that?" eagerly inquired the dove, overjoyed at the prospect of possessing what seemed to promise so much happiness.

"It is," said the genius, "that you consent to surrender all those qualities of meekness, tenderness, constancy, and love, for which thy family have been distinguished in all time."

"Let me consider," said the dove. "No; I cannot consent to such an exchange. No, not for all the gaudy plumage, and showy train of the vain bird, will I surrender those qualities of which you speak, the distinguishing features of my family from time immemorial. I must decline, good genius, the conditions you propose."

"Then why complain, dear bird? Has not Providence bestowed on thee qualities which thou valuest more than all the gaudy adornings you admire? And art thou discontented still?"

A tear started in the eye of the dove, at this mild rebuke of her guardian spirit, and she promised never to complain.

The beautiful girl, who had entered into the story with deep and tender emotion, raised her fine blue eyes to meet he mother's gaze, and, as they rolled upwards, suffused with penitential tears, she said, in a subdued tone, with a smile like that assumed by all nature, when the bow of God appears in the heavens after a storm—"My mother, I think I know what that story means. Let me be your dove; let me but have that ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, and I am satisfied to see others appear in rich and gaudy apparel."

A TOUCHING SCENE.

At Smyrna, the burial ground of the Armenian, like that of the Moslem, is removed a short distance from the town, is sprinkled with green trees, and is a favorite resort, not only with the bereaved, but with those whose feelings are not thus darkly overcast. I met there one morning a little girl, with a half playful countenance, busy blue eye, and sunny locks, bearing in one hand a small cup of china, in the other a wreath of fresh flowers. Feeling a very natural curiosity to know what she could do with these bright things in a place that seemed to partake so much of sadness, I watched her light motions. Reaching a retired grave, covered with a plain marble slab, she emptied the seed—which it appeared the cup contained—into the slight cavities which had been scooped out in the corners of the level tablet, and laid upon its pure face.

"And why," I inquired, "my sweet girl, do you put seeds in those little bowls there?"

"It is to bring the birds here," she replied, with a half wondering look; "they will light on this tree," pointing to the cypress above, "when they have eaten the seed, and sing."

"To whom do they sing?" I asked, "to you, or to each other?"

"Oh, no!" she quickly replied, "to my sister—she sleeps here."

"But your sister is dead."

"Oh, yes sir! but she hears all the birds sing!"

"Well, if she hears the birds sing, she cannot see the wreath of flowers."

"But she knows I put it there; I told her before they took her away from our house, I would come and see her every morning."

"You must," I continued, "have loved that sister very much, but you will never talk with her any more—never see her again."

"Yes sir," she replied with a brightened look, "I shall see her in Heaven."

"But she has gone there already, I trust."

"No; she stops under this tree until they bring me here, and then we are going to Heaven together." [A Traveler.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 14, 1847.

THE SUPPOSED TRANSFER OF THE SABBATH.

Mr. Brown's Seventh Lecture, delivered on Sunday evening last, was in continuation of this subject. He commenced by referring to the position which had been established in his previous lecture, that the change of the Sabbath was no where prophesied of as a part of the Messiah's work, and that, therefore, the circumstantial evidence of a change ought to be closely scrutinized. He then alluded briefly to the meetings of Christ with the disciples on the day following his resurrection, and also "after eight days," in neither of which meetings could he see any indication that the day on which they occurred was regarded as a Sabbath day.

The text Acts 20: 7 was next brought under consideration—"And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them," &c. It was admitted, that this text has the appearance of lending support to the argument for the change of the Sabbath more than any other—1st. Because the disciples seem to have come together designedly, or according to previous arrangement; and, 2d. Because the object of the meeting seems to have been to celebrate the Lord's Supper. It must be remembered, however, that the thing to be shown is, that the sabbatic rest had now been transferred to the first day of the week, and that this text, among others, is a proof of it. Now this was an evening meeting, and there is not the least intimation that the disciples had, during the light part of the day, sabbatized, or rested from their ordinary labors. One person may conjecture that they had, and another that they had not; but conjecture is not proof. There seems much more reason for supposing that they had engaged in their ordinary labors through the day, than that they had sabbatized, since the first day of the week had always been a working day for more than four thousand years. This text, therefore, furnishes no proof that the sabbatic rest had been transferred to the first day. Neither does it afford evidence that the first day was regularly observed by the church at Troas as their day of worship. It is not said that they came together as usual; neither that they ever had before, or ever did afterwards, assemble upon that day. This omission is passing strange—nay, altogether unaccountable—on the supposition that the Holy Spirit did intend, in this passage, to afford proof of the transfer of the Sabbath. But suppose we grant, for the sake of argument, that this text proves all which the advocates of the first day pretend, then it proves too much for those who urge it. If it proves that the disciples met together for worship every first day, it also proves that they broke bread every first day; and if their example should be followed in the one case, it should be followed in the other. Nay more, if this example of the disciples at Troas may properly be urged as proving the duty of all men to observe every first day, may it not with equal propriety be urged as proving the duty of all men to break bread on every first day? Or, if the breaking of bread must be limited to the disciples, should not the observance of the first day be limited to them also? To such consequences does this kind of reasoning necessarily lead. Upon the whole, there seems no evidence in this portion of Scripture, that the first day of the week has a claim upon our regard as a religious institution. Indeed, it is quite likely that the circumstances of this meeting would never have been recorded at all, except for the miracle which was performed at the time in raising Eutychus to life.

Mr. Brown then passed to consider 1 Cor. 16: 2—"Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." He showed that the duty here enjoined was an individual duty, which each person might perform at home, and that the language does not imply, but rather precludes, the idea of any meeting at all. This text, therefore, not only fails to prove a transfer of the Sabbath, but does not even prove a public meeting.

These are all the places in the New Tesment in which the phrase "first day of the week" occurs. We are often told about the repeated instances of the disciples assembling for worship on the first day, and that the thing is recorded over and over again. But it is not so. These repeated meetings are reduced to four. In one of these the phrase "first day" does not occur. The first two meetings do not appear to have taken place according to any previous appointment. So far as the disciples were concerned, they seem to have been casual meetings, or at most such as they enjoyed every evening at their own common lodging place; while Christ seems to have met them there solely for the purpose of giving them proof of his resurrection, and not at all for the purpose of intimating to them the transfer of the sabbatic rest to that day. In regard to the third case, there seems to have been a meeting held, but no proof that it was their ordinary day of meeting. In the fourth case, no meeting at all seems to have been held. These repeated meetings on the first day of the week, then, may be reduced to one, and that of such a nature as to afford no proof of the great position taken by the advocates of the first day.

But, say some, "You have not yet told us why the first day of the week is called the Lord's day." In reply, the speaker said he did not know that it was called the Lord's day. The expression "Lord's day" occurs but once in Scripture, and that is in the Apocalypse. There is no evidence in the Bible that it refers to the first day of the week. If the writer intended by it some day which was to be kept religiously by the race of mankind, it is strange that he did not explain himself. As he has not done it, we naturally conclude that nothing important hangs upon it. The writer has not told us what he meant by the expression, and what right have we to assume that he meant the first day of the week? It is a principle of Protestants, that Scripture is to be interpreted by Scripture. If we adopt this principle, and then examine the Scriptures to learn what is meant by the Lord's day, we shall find two days spoken of in such a way that we may very justly refer this expression to one or the other of them. One is called, "the day of the Lord," and "the day of the Lord Jesus;" and it is not unlikely that the writer of the Apocalypse meant that he was carried forward in the spirit to that great day. The other day of which the Scriptures speak as belonging to the Lord, is the Sabbath, or seventh day of the week, concerning which God says, "my holy day," "the Sabbath of the Lord thy God;" and Jesus Christ says himself, that he is "Lord of the Sabbath." Now if the Sabbath belongs to the Lord as his peculiar day, it might with great propriety be called the Lord's day. Thus, when we make Scripture the interpreter of Scripture, which is the only just rule, we are brought to the necessity of referring this term to one or the other of these two days. The only way of justifying its reference to any other day, is by appealing to the "ecclesiastical fathers." But even they only speak of the first day as a festival, during some part of which public worship was attended; and they never pretend that they have inspired authority for calling it the Lord's day. So that an appeal to them, while it belies the Protestant principle, that Scripture is to be interpreted by Scripture, gives but little support to the argument for the transfer of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week.

PETITIONS FOR EQUAL RELIGIOUS PRIVILEGES.

Sabbath-keepers generally are doubtless prepared for some kind of action in reference to the removal of the oppressive and unconstitutional laws, by which the observers of Sunday are most fully protected from all kinds of molestation on that day, while the observers of the seventh-day are exposed to almost every sort of disturbance. Every effort, therefore, which tends to bring about harmonious action, cannot fail to be conducive to our success.

One thing of the first importance for us to observe is, that our hopes of success must be based upon our ability to make our cause appear clearly and indisputably right; and then we must ask for it in such a manner that a denial would appear to be a denial of truth itself. That is, we must ask for that only which is clearly true and just, and then only because truth and justice require it. In proportion to our ability to make this appear, will be our success. If we are not able to obtain all of this at once, there is no reason why we should compromise the interests of truth and justice for the sake of getting something less. Were Sabbath-keepers generally suffering under these unjust laws, as are our brethren in Pennsylvania, there would be an apology for asking or accepting less than justice requires. This not being the case to any great extent, I hope there will be no halving of matters, or compromising the question for present good.

It has been clearly shown, through the columns of the Recorder, that the laws enforcing the religious observance of Sunday, are as directly repugnant to the several Constitutions of this republic, as they are subversive of the law of God. These laws are oppressive to others than Sabbath-keepers; and for us to forget those in our appeals and petitions for legislative redress, is not only calculated to make us appear more careful of ourselves than mindful of the truth, but is contrary to the injunction of Scripture, "to remember them that are in bonds as bound with them."

Our appeal, therefore, should embrace the following: 1st. An effort to show that Sunday laws are unnecessary, and have their origin in a misguided zeal, a Puritanic effort to compel attendance upon divine worship; that they do not enforce the observance of any recorded command of God, and particularly of the fourth command, which it is pretended the law enforces; and even if it did, that there exists no more reason why civil laws should enforce the observance of the fourth commandment than either or all the rest of those commandments, a compliance with which has never been attempted, except so far as to protect the public from their open and gross violation; and farther, that the interests of true religion do not require the continuance of Sunday laws, for the reason that if the lives and practices of its observers do not sufficiently set forth the advantages of keeping the Sabbath, then its observance is of too little consequence to be entitled to the protection of civil law, the continuance of which, therefore, cannot be expected to have any beneficial influence upon society. 2d. An effort to show that these laws are plainly unconstitutional, and tend to subvert the distinguishing feature of our commonwealth—perfect liberty for every inhabitant to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; that if we allow that our rulers may appoint a Sabbath-day, and enforce its religious observance, we have no reason why we should deny them the right to appoint a mode of baptism, or a place of prayer, and to decide who shall officiate at its altar. 3d. An effort to show that these laws are oppressive in their practical workings; there being three classes, at least, of men who are more or less injuriously effected thereby. The most numerous class are those who do not believe they are required by a divine command, under the gospel dispensation, to observe any stated or periodical day for the worship of Almighty God, but who yet comply outwardly with its observance because it is the law of the land. Another quite numerous class are the Jews, who believe that God requires of them the observance of another day of the week than that named in our laws, and as a people are so accustomed to religious oppression that they bear the heaviest burdens without complaint—a reason why they should be protected rather than oppressed—and who are yet restrained in various ways from the enjoyment of equal privileges. Another class are the memorialists, who not only believe that the Almighty requires the observance of another day, and sacredly comply with such requirement, both in person and in their servants, but who believe also that the interests of true Christianity have been greatly injured by the substitution of a memorial of redemption for that of creation, and that they ought to labor and pray for the original institution; and that for these reasons those laws ought to be repealed. With such a memorial, we must ultimately succeed. But with one which acknowledges the justness of the coercive principle, and asks —obsequiously begs—for exemptions, we may not, and certainly never ought to succeed.

A MISSIONARY'S PARTING WORDS.

The following letter, written by Mrs. Carpentor on the day of sailing for China, needs no explanation or apology. May it sink deep into the heart of every reader, and be remembered.

Beloved Friends,—The day of our departure has arrived. While your eyes rest on these words, our own will have been withdrawn from the scenes, the countenances, they have loved so well to contemplate, to be greeted through long weeks, yea months, with but the world of waters beneath, and the realm of stars above, looking and longing for those distant shores which await our eagar hopes, our future toils.

And now do you ask what are our views and feelings in this near prospect of entering upon our work? We do indeed thank God and take courage, when we remember all the way which he has led us. The constancy of friends, their sympathy, their prayers, have cheered our hearts, have strengthened our faith, increased our zeal, and quickened within us our strongest desires to be devoted entirely to this work. Think you, then, that we can carry with us sad hearts and mournful faces, even while we leave you, assured that we shall meet you no more here? No; the language of our heart is, "Hinder me not."

We are asked when we expect to return. We answer, Never! We anticipate but two causes which could produce such a result—want of health, and want of funds. For the first, we trust in God. For the second, we trust Him also, and our brethren as his stewards. We have no doubts, no fears, on this subject. We are confident that the spirit of missions, already active among you, will abound and increase throughout our churches, and that the cry of those who are ready to perish will not greet your ears in vain.

We have shared largely in the benevolence of our friends. Their offerings have increased until we have almost felt ourselves compelled, as was Moses, to entreat the people that they refrain from giving. We believe that the liberal will stand by the liberal things that they devise.

With cheerfulness, then, do we turn to our appointed toil, loving not our friends the less, but the cause more. And for this cause's sake, for our sakes, for your own sakes, for the heathen's sake, and for Christ's sake, we entreat you, let nothing induce you to come down from the prosecution of this great work. Even should the next ocean breeze waft you the intelligence that the Houqua is sunk in the sea, that the offerings of your hands are strewn among the buried treasures of the deep, be not disheartened. Trust in God, that it may prove to you even as bread cast upon the waters, to be abundantly gathered in due time, by those who are permitted to perform the labor which we had it in our hearts to do. Our last, our most earnest request to you is, abandon not this mission. For its success pray, labor, and wait. So shall the God of Missions gather you at last with his redeemed, out of every kindred, and tribe, and people, and tongue, and both they that sow, and they that reap, shall rejoice together.

L. M. CARPENTER.

January 5th, 1847.

A Request.—Eld. Varnum Hull is desirous of ascertaining, as near as possible, the number of converts to the Sabbath within the last three years. To aid him in this, he requests the brethren residing in different sections of the denomination, who are acquainted with the number in their own vicinity, to communicate the same to him. Direct to Oxford, Chenango Co., N. Y.

Another Alliance Proposed.—It is now stated, upon the authority of English papers, that a grand alliance is proposed of all the churches throughout the world who adopt the Episcopal form of church government. This proposition is said to have received the sanction of the Pope of Rome. According to the "Dublin Statesmen," the idea is to reduce the papal supremacy, nominally, into a mere patriarchate, and to make a few doctrinal changes or explanations for the satisfaction of the Episcopal churches of the east and west who are combined. If this may be regarded as one of the legitimate results of the "Great Evangelical Alliance," we think that discord would be a more appropriate watch-word than union.

American Evangelical Alliance.—The Preparatory Committee of the American Division of the Evangelical Alliance, recently held a public meeting in New York to consider of the best means to bring about an organization. Several speeches were made upon the occasion, and considerable enthusiasm was manifested. On Tuesday, Feb. 2, 1847, a general meeting of all the American members of the Alliance is to be held in New York, for the purpose of adopting a constitution preparatory to the reception of new members. Then will come the tug of war.

Revivals in Rhode Island.—A writer in the New York Baptist Register, alluding to the churches in Rhode Island, says, "In many of our churches revivals of religion are progressing; in some of the churches these revivals have been quite extensive. In one, between seventy and eighty have been baptized; in another, between fifty and sixty; in another, more than thirty; and in our own village the Seventh-day Baptists are holding a series of evening meetings, with encouraging prospects. Eight have already been baptized, and the interest increases."

A Missionary's Estimate of Prayer.—The last number of the Macedonian mentions an affecting incident which shows how much a missionary in the foreign field values the prayers of his brethren at home. Let those who dwell at ease in their ceiled houses, remember the self-denying and toil-worn missionary:—

"We had received," says one of our missionaries, "a collection of letters from America. While my wife sat on the couch reading such as were directed to her, I sat at the table reading those directed to myself. I looked up and saw her strongly agitated and in tears. What, I inquired, what tidings have you received that so distresses you? The reply was 'Why, the monthly concert for prayer in the church to which I belong has not been observed for more than a year!' If our friends cease to pray for us, what will become of us?"

Designation of Missionaries for China.—The missionaries recently accepted by the Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, were set apart to the work at Richmond, Va., on the 18th ult. The instructions of the Board were given by the Corresponding Secretary, Eld. J. B. Taylor. Farewell addresses were delivered by the missionaries. The following account of them is taken from one of the Baptist papers:—

Eld. M. T. Yates was a native of North Carolina, the first missionary sent from that State, and a graduate of Wake Forest Institute; the Raleigh Baptist Association, of which he is a member, has assumed the support of himself and his companion. Eld. Thomas U. Tobey is a native of Rhode Island, a graduate, and for several years a tutor of Columbian College. His partner is the third daughter of Eld. A. Hall, and sister of the late lamented Mrs. Shuck, thus making the second offering of Eld. H. to the missionary cause. Dr. J. Sexton James is a native of Philadelphia. He goes out as a missionary physician. Yong Seen Sang is a native Chinese, a well-educated, man and one evidently of good abilities. Yong will labor on his return as a native preacher. The ladies of the First Baptist Church of Richmond have selected him as their missionary, and undertake his support.

CHINESE HOSTILITY TO FOREIGNS.

A letter has been received from Dr. Bridgman, dated July 27th, giving an account of a demonstration of the hostility which the Chinese feel towards foreigners. Dr. B. and several members of the mission, having occasion to make a water excursion, took passage in a boat rowed by six men, with a seventh at the helm. In their trip, they boarded a junk, and distributed books, which were kindly received, and held a friendly interview with a circle of natives on shore, who manifested no other than a friendly disposition. They then reëmbarked on their homeward passage, through a narrow creek of some three miles in length. The boat had not proceeded far, before the natives pursued them, exhibiting the most decided demonstrations of hostility. Missiles of wood and stone were poured in upon them, accompanied by the most violent language of denunciation; threatening them with death, in revenge for the loss of their countrymen. "The foreign devils have killed our people, and no matter who you are, their blood shall be avenged." Having occasion to pass under a bridge, this was preöccupied, and heavy stones were thrown down upon the boat from above. Dr. B. says he never before considered his life in so much peril. The boatmen were severely wounded, and all but two were driven from their posts. It was with the utmost difficulty, and only by the apparently direct interposition of Providence, that the lives of the missionaries were preserved; yet, (Dr. B. remarks,) it is not to be inferred that these people are inimical to us as missionaries, but as foreigners. Great encouragement attends their missionary labors, but most of all, the Bible-instruction.

Foreign Periodicals.—The reading public are greatly indebted to Leonard Scott & Co. for the prompt and tasteful manner in which they republish the several Foreign Quarterlies and Blackwood's Monthly Magazine. Through their enterprise, the American reader may now have access to these valuable periodicals, got up in good style, for less than one-third of what they cost to the English reader. Such enterprise deserves success.

The North British Review, which they have recently commenced republishing, is particularly adapted to readers on this side of the Atlantic. When the great ecclesiastical movement in Scotland was commenced, there was no journal in the United Kingdom which appeared to meet the necessities of that Anti-National-Church agitation. Hence the North British Review was established. Its character is what might be expected from the time and circumstances of its origin. Among the contributors to it are Sir David Brewster, Drs. Chalmers, Cunningham, Lorrimer, Candlish, Gordon, Buchanan, and Smith, whose names are a sufficient guaranty for its ability.

Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine for December contains its usual variety of rich and instructive matter. The following are among its articles: Kohl in Denmark and in the Marshes, Lord Metcalf's Government of Jamaica, Annals and Antiquities of London, Marlborough's Dispatches, Recent Royal Marriages, The Game Laws.

Jews in Poland.—The condition of the Jews in Poland is very trying. We see, by late accounts from Europe, that "eighty Jews, headed by their Rabbi, arrived recently at Warsaw, to request the Governor to allow them to return to their costume. They were taken to the police, where their beards were shaved off, and their long hair cut, and then sent away. They demanded their beards and hair, to place them in their burying ground; but this was refused them. They, however, received the barber's bill, which they were made to pay."

Heathen Notions of Christianity.—The following is an extract from the journal of a converted African attached to the mission established under the labors of Rev. Wm. Raymond, in the Mendi country. This heathen convert was sent out to prepare the way for a new missionary station. He writes:—

"This morning I called on 'Bu-raw,' (a chief) and said to him, 'If you please, I want you to call the people together, that I may preach to them in the Mendi language about Christ.' He said, "What you say is very well; you do not care for anything but book-palaver, and God-palaver. But I cannot call the people together to hear you talk God-palaver, because I am a war man. I have gunpowder ank cutlass in my hand to fight with. If I call the people together to hear God-palaver to-day, and to-morrow begin to fight and kill, they will laugh at me. If you want to talk God-palaver, you can call your two men, and if I like I will myself sit down to hear you."

Sunday in Norway.—It will be seen by the following extract from Samuel Laing's "Travels in Norway and Sweden," that the Lutheran churches generally agree with us in respect to the time of beginning and closing their day of weekly rest. We wish that those who follow the Scriptures so strictly in one point, would be equally strict upon other points:—

"It is a peculiarity in all Lutheran countries, which strikes the traveler, especially from Scotland, that the evening of Sunday is not passed, as with us, in quiet and stillness at least, if not in devotional exercises. He must be a very superficial observer, however, who ascribes this to a want of religious feeling. It arises from the peculiar, and in the Free Lutheran Church, universally received interpretation of the scriptural words, that 'the evening and the morning made the first day.' The evening of Saturday and the morning of Sunday make the seventh day or Sabbath, according to the Lutheran Church. This interpretation is so fully established, and interwoven with their thinking and acting, that entertainments, dances, card-parties, and all public amusements, take place regularly on Sunday evenings. A Lutheran minister gives a party on Sunday evening at his house, at which you find music, dancing, and cards, without more scruple, or even conception that there is any thing objectionable, than a Presbyterian minister has when he eats a slice of mutton for dinner on a Friday, and would equally think it superstitious to object to it."

Cassius M. Clay.—The New York Tribune publishes a letter from Cassius M. Clay, in answer to certain inquiries addressed to him relative to his views of slavery, of the war with Mexico, &c. The following sentences, taken from the letter, will best explain his views:—"My opinions of the institution of Slavery are unchanged." . . . . "Whether I shall continue to edit the paper or no, is problematical; it was never my design to do so." . . . . "In going into this war I have not been impelled, as some of my apologists would have it, by Constitutional ardor, or Southern education. Neither have I been lured by the vulgar ambition of military glory. I would far rather have been Adams, at the vindication of the Right of Petition, than Wellington at the battle of Waterloo. I wished to prove to the people of the South, that I warred not upon them, but upon Slavery—that a man might hate Slavery and denounce tyrants, without being the enemy of his country. Besides, the instincts of self-preservation, or rather of national preservation, as well as history, teach me that a Constitutional declaration of war must be sustained by all parties. My action, therefore, is a corollary from the admission of the Republican theory, that a legal majority must rule."

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the SENATE, on Monday of last week, a Message was received from the President, asking an increase of the army, and the appointment of a Lieutenant General. After some debate, it was referred to the Military Committee. A resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report what articles were embraced in the tariff of 1846 on which the duties might be increased so as to augment the revenue, was debated at great length, in the course of which very severe remarks were made upon the financial measures of the Government. A petition was presented from Bradford Co., Pa., for the abolition of slavery. Memorials were presented for aid for the projected railroad to the Pacific, and for bringing the war with Mexico to a speedy close.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, a Message was received from the President, earnestly recommending the adoption of the suggestions of the Secretary of War for increasing the efficiency and better organization of the army, for an increase of the higher grades of officers, and for the appointment of a general officer to take command of all the forces in the field during the war. The subject presented in this Message was before the House in some form or another during most of the week, and was not disposed of when the week closed. A resolution was passed declaring it inexpedient to levy a tax upon Tea and Coffee. Personal explanations were made between Mr. Bayley and Mr. Davis, and the offensive expressions of each, which at one time seriously threatened a duel, were withdrawn in a manner highly creditable to both parties.

[The Bill to increase the regular army by ten regiments, was passed in the House on Monday, Jan. 11.]

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.

The Legislature of the State of New York commenced its session on Tuesday, Jan. 5. Wm. C. Hasbrouck was chosen Speaker of the House; Philander B. Prindle, Clerk; Daniel B. Davis, Sergeant-at-Arms; and Asa W. Carpenter, Door-keeper—all Whigs. But little business of general interest was transacted during the week. Notice was given in the Assembly of intention to introduce several bills, among which was one for the bonding of emigrants, and another to reduce the rates of interest. A resolution was adopted for a select committee to consider the whole subject of labor of apprentices, hours of labor, &c. In the Senate, resolutions were offered declaring that the general government ought to pay all the necessary expenses of equipping the volunteers, and that slavery should be excluded from all newly-acquired territory.

The first Message of Gov. Young was communicated to the Legislature at 12 o'clock on Tuesday. The New York Sun gives the following account of it:—

Governor Young's Message is a model; brief, but comprehensive—giving his views in a form in which they will be understood and secure attention. Exception is taken to some parts of the new Constitution; and the revival of the Court of Chancery, in a new shape, is hinted at. Liberal salaries are recommended for the judges of the new courts. The Governor comments at length upon those provisions of the Constitution which require legislation to give them practical effect. He is warmly in favor of enlarging the Erie Canal, and completing the Black River and Genesee Valley Canals, and deplores the obstacles which the Constitution presents to the accomplishment of these objects. He hesitates to recommend an amendment of the Constitution so soon, but modestly submits the idea to the Legislature. He speaks favorably of the very sound condition in which he finds the State finances. The budget for the year is opened under favorable circumstances. We heartily respond to his suggestion to revive the State donations to charitable and literary institutions, which the new Constitution suspended.

DECREASE OF CRIME.—The Tribune says that Judge Parsons of Philadelphia, in a recent charge to the Grand Jury, states the gratifying fact, that there has been a great diminution of crime in the city and county of Philadelphia during the past year. The reduction of cases on the criminal calendar has been considerable, when compared with former years. The number of verdicts rendered in 1845 was seven hundred and seventy-five, and to one hundred and forty-five bills of indictment were entered pleas of guilty. In the year 1846 there were seven hundred and thirty-four verdicts rendered, and pleas of guilty to but eighty-four, making all on the bills of indictment which came before the court of adjudication one hundred and two less in 1846 than in the previous year—and these cases generally have been small in their character.

FATAL ACCIDENT FROM GUN COTTON.—A boy named Lewis Malisee was killed at Pittsburgh on the 6th, by the accidental discharge of a pistol in the hands of G. W. Fenner, a private in the Stockton artillerists. Fenner had loaded two barrels of his revolving pistol with gun cotton. Finding some difficulty in driving one of the charges down, he was about putting his hand in his pocket for the purpose of procuring an instrument to draw the charge, At that moment one of the barrels exploded, the cotton probably ignited from the pressure, and the ball lodged in the right breast of Malisee, who was standing about six feet distant. The unfortunate youth, on receiving the wound, clapped his hand upon the the place, and after staggering about a rod from the spot, fell and died with a moan, but without speaking a word. The ball was not extracted, nor could it be found by probing.

SUMMARY.

The editor of the N. Y. Tribune, writing from Albany, says that Gov. Young looks quite broken in health and constitution. He spends some two or three hours daily in the Executive Chamber, where he appears cheerful, and often animated, but evidently by an effort. But for the New Constitution, which has relieved him from nine-tenths of the appointing power hitherto devolving on his station, he would inevitably be a dead man within two months.

Died, in Spanish Town, on Thursday, a black man named John Crawford Rickets, at the extraordinary age of one hundred and forty-two years, and, what may be considered as very unusual, he was in good health till within about two weeks of his death. He formerly belonged to and was a coachman of G. C. Rickets, Esq., at one time Attorney General of the Island, and he is said to have borne an excellent character during the whole of the time he was capable of moving about and earning his livelihood.

The New Orleans La Patria says:—According to information given us by a friend in this city, who has seen a letter from San Luis de Potosi, written by an officer of the Mexican Army, "Gen. Santa Anna has administered an oath to all the officers of his troops not to take the life of American soldiers who may fall into their power, but to make them prisoners, to be sent into the interior, where a dépôt for prisoners is under preparation."

One victory has been gained, if the Methodist Protestant tells the truth. According to that paper, the Harpers of New York have come to a full stop, having determined not even to complete the publication of some French novels which they had commenced. It is time; they have been the cause of corruption and ruin enough already.

The Truxton News says that the Postmaster General, Cave Johnson, refused to sanction the action of the Board of Directors in suspending the Sunday morning mail line between New York and Philadelphia, and that it will be continued.

We see it stated that the City Court of New London, Conn., has lately imposed a fine of one dollar and costs, twenty-three dollars and thirteen cents, on Gen. A. W. Riley, the well known advocate of Temperance, for obstructing the side-walks of that city by delivering a temperance lecture in the street.

Newport, R. I., is to become a city. At a town-meeting on Tuesday evening, the inhabitants accepted a draft of a charter, and voted to petition the General Assembly for an act of incorporation.

A reporter of a London paper says:—"I once had occasion to report, that a certain noble lord was confined to the house with a violent cold—next morning I found his lordship represented to 'be confined with a violent scold.' In the same way, on occasion of a recent entertainment, I had said that the first point of attraction was her ladyships looks, this compliment was transferred by the printer to her 'ladyship's cooks.'"

A New Orleans letter writer says:—"For many years strangers have been struck by the appearance of a very old and decrepit-looking man, perfectly blind, supporting himself by a cane, and led carefully along by a negro boy, and looking like an object of charity. This man was Judge Francois Zavier Martin, one of the richest men in New Orleans."

The Railroad to the Pacific, as projected by Mr. Whitney, was thoroughly endorsed and recommended by a large public meeting at the Chinese Museum, in Philadelphia, at which Mayor Swift presided, aided by many of the prominent merchants and others of the city.

A shrewd old gentleman once said to his daughter: 'Be sure, my dear, that you never marry a poor man; but remember, the poorest man in the world is one that has money, and nothing else.'

It is stated that when the British iron steamer was attacked by the batteries of the Angentine republic, the splinters of iron flew more destructively than those of vessels of wood.

The people of Hayti have adopted a new constitution which provides that no white man shall hold real estate, or become a citizen of that republic.

The telegraph rates between Washington and Baltimore have been reduced to less than one cent per word, by order of Government.

In 1820, the whole product of the Pennsylvania anthracite mines was 365 tons. It is now 2,300,500 tons.

We learn from the Onondaga Standard, that petitions are in circulation for the incorporation of Syracuse as a city, to include the neighboring village of Salina, and perhaps Geddes. The population of the district proposed to be embraced in the city is about 12,500, and the name they propose to give it is Salina, as much more appropriate than Syracuse, which signifies a Marsh, while Salina indicates a Salt Spring, or a place where salt water is concealed in the earth.

The Rochester Democrat says that Rev. Bernard O'Relly, pastor of St. Patrick's Church, left this city on Tuesday for Matamoros, where his brother, recently deceased, has left him, by will, an estate valued at $100,000. The deceased brother was a merchant, and had resided some fifteen years in Matamoros.

According to the Constitution of the recent Convention in Wisconsin, property owned by the wife at the time of her marriage, and that which may fall to her after marriage, is placed benyod the control of the husband, and exempted from his debts. Forty acres of land, or a town or city lot, being the homestead of a family, and in either case not exceeding $1,000 in value, is exempted from forced sale for debts.

The whole number of inhabitants in Massachucetts in 1840 was 737,700. The number of Births in the State in 1846 was 16,485; of Marriages 4,263; of Deaths 9,360. Excess of Births over Deaths, 7,136.

Two fishing vessels, the 'Gen. Scott' and the 'Canton,' which sailed from Gloucester about the 19th of November last, are supposed to have been lost, with their crews, in the gale of the 25th.

The Wisconsin Convention has decided that the Homestead of a family shall not be liable to be sold on execution for any debt hereafter contracted.

The commerce of the Mississippi Valley is set down at $200,000,000 annually, and is rapidly increasing.

Gov. Edwards, of Missouri, in his recent annual message to the Legislature of that State, now in session, states that the people generally are not very prosperous; and attributes the fact to a general lack of education, and a want of more skill and science, and better instruments of husbandry, forgetting slavery altogether.

The Worcester Transcript states that Elijah Waters, Esq., of Millbury, Mass., who died but a few days since, left a bequest of $5,000 to the Congregational Church in that place; and to the Parsonage $1,500 more; to the American Bible Society $1,500; to the A. B. Foreign Missions $1,000; and to the Home Missionary Society $1,000.

The Baltimore Visitor says that the debate on Slavery before the Murray Institute is still progressing and growing in spirit, with new speakers and a decided increase in the number of listeners. It was adjourned over, on Wednesday evening, for the fourth time, by desire of the audience. The question of Slavery has been up before two other Lyceums this week, showing that it is the question of the season.

Mr. Gould, conductor of Adams' Express, has received the following testimonials for his noble conduct at the wreck of the Atlantic:—Adams & Co., presented him with a gold watch, worth $130, on his return from the scene—the brokers and merchants have given him $325—one of the Norwich banks gave him $50—a firm in Philadelphia gave him $25—and a valuable gold chain was presented to him by a gentleman in New York.

Three young men at Collensburgh, Penn., undertook to drink rum on a wager. One was to drink against the other two. While finishing the third quart, the man who drank the double dose sunk down under its deadly influence, and in a few days died.

A mine of Bituminous Coal has been discovered at Guerrero, a city on the left bank of the river Salado, twelve miles from the Rio Grande, by Lt. Tilden. Mexico, it seems, has coal, as well as gold, silver and copper mines.

A large number of printers in Philadelphia have given up the business of type sticking for man sticking. There were thirteen in one company, four in another, besides several other companies which got their share.

It is stated that a weekly paper, to be called the Cotemporaneo, is to be established at Rome, under the immediate sanction of the Pope, to be especially devoted to questions of trade, industry and political economy.

A Mobile paper states that the introduction of the Arabian camel on the prairies of the West is suggested, and adds, it would greatly facilitate the intercourse between Missouri, Santa Fe and California.

The Baptists in the State of New York, in the several places where they have appropriated money for Home Missions during the last 39 years, have baptized 9,800 on a profession of faith.

A newly invented brick machine has been patented by a Cincinnati mechanic, which presses brick by a cylinder like a printing machine, and it can turn out with the aid of five men 40,000 smooth surface bricks of the first quality per day.

The Prize Money accruing from the various prizes taken at Tobasco and Tampico, amounts to $220,000, of which the government gets one half, and the officers and seamen the other.

The Printers of Lowell are to celebrate Franklin's birth-day, by a supper, and extend an invitation to some of their neighbors to participate with them.

In the new penal code for the eastern provinces of Prussia, which is to be presented to the States next session, corporeal punishment is entirely abolished.

A bullet which was fired at a mark by a young man at Lee, Mass., passed through the target and entered a house a quarter of a mile distant, and lodged in a watch in the breast pocket of one of the inmates.

Thirty-five ministers of the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States have departed this life during the past year.

Mark H. Parkenson has been arrested at New Orleans on the charge of holding treasonable intercourse with the Mexicans.

Rev. Dr. Cogswell, of Gilmanton, N. H., has been appointed editor of the New England Historical and Genealogical Register, which is to be published by the New England Historical and Genealogical Society of Boston.

A gentleman of Pittsburgh, Pa., has offered himself as one of twenty to subscribe $25,000 for a hospital in that city.

The Senate of Mississippi has passed an act to permit a blind man to sell whiskey without license.

During the last three months there have been sold by Colporteurs in France, 33,000 copies of the Scriptures.

The Holidaysburg, Register gives an account of a serious accident which occurred on the Sunday previous at Duncansville. The roof of the Baptist Meeting-house was entirely lifted off, and the western gable-end blown in, severely injuring four individuals who were in the gallery, and several others slightly.

John Mitchel, of Mill Creek township, Hamilton county, raised during the last season eighty-two pumpkins from one seed, fifty-four of them averaged 20 pounds each—aggregate about 1,500 pounds.

A negro belonging to H. T. Broft, Gainesville, Sumpter county, Ala., being at work on the ferry road at that place, became unruly. The overseer tried to tie him, and the negro resisting, both in the scuffle fell into the river. The negro was drowned and the overseer with difficulty saved.

A bill is now pending in the Senate of Indiana for the calling of a Convention to revise the Constitution of that State.

The Honolulu (Sandwich Islands) Friend states that while the American, of Sag Harbor, was cruising, June 4, lat. 52 1-2° lon. 155° W. a boat, three-quarters of a mile from the ship, was run over by a whale, and two seamen only were saved. The following were lost: Capt. Wm. Pierson, of Bridgehampton, L. I., David R. Conklin, boat-steerer, of East Hampton, L. I.; Franklin R. Bennet, seaman, of Sag Harbor, and Solomon Carman, of New York city. After the accident, the crew forward refused to lower any more for whales, and the acting Master was compelled to visit the Sandwich Islands. The American arrived at Lahaina on the 7th, and there 8 of the men were put into irons by the U. S. consul, because they would not do duty; and by advice of the Consul at Lahaina, Capt. Page took the American to Honolulu.

A friend from Boston says that the venerable Mr. Adams is exceedingly anxious to reach Washington, and so much so, that his physician finds it difficult to keep his patient quiet. It is supposed in that city, that Mr. A. intends making a farewell speech in the House of Representatives, before he retires from public life, and this he had designed to do, had not his present sickness detained him from Washington. Like Lord Chatham, perhaps he is anxious to finish his earthly career when in the actual discharge of his public functions.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Albany, says, "The New Excise Law, I now think, will not be repealed, though some modification of it, to render its enforcement more general and certain, is quite probable. I think the city of New York will be brought within the scope of its operation if the law stands. Both License and Anti-License men generally say, if the Law is to continue in being, it ought to operate everywhere alike.

A very important memorial, to be presented to Congress, on the subject of immigrant passenger vessels, has been adopted by the Board of Aldermen, and will be forthwith transmitted to Washington. It urges the passage of a law, limiting the number of passengers to each vessel to two for every ten tons, and compelling owners to allow each sufficient space for health and ventilation, and also that each vessel carrying passengers shall have a surgeon.

A clerk in the Post-Office at Lyons, N. Y. has been arrested at Fort Covington, Franklin county, on a charge of robbing the Post-office. He has been fully committed for trial by Judge Conklin, at Auburn.

DIED,

On Wednesday, Jan. 6th, after a short and severe illness, HANNAH, wife of Charles S. Benson, in the 30th year of her age. Her remains were deposited in Greenwood Cemetery.

"Thus died lamented, in the strength of life,
A valued mother and a faithful wife.
Called not away when time had loosed each hold
On the fond heart, and each desire grew cold;
But when, to all that knit us to our kind,
She felt fast bound as charity can bind;
Not when the ills of age, its pain, its care,
The drooping spirit for its fate prepare;
And each affection failing, leaves the heart
Loosed from life's charm and willing to depart;
But all her ties the strong invader broke,
In all their strength by one tremendous stroke."

PROSPECTUS OF
THE NATIONAL ERA,
To be published at
THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The cause of Human Freedom calls for the establishment at the seat of the National Government of a Newspaper devoted to the support of its claims.

Circumstances and the present state of Public Sentiment are peculiarly propitious to such an undertaking.

The publication of an Anti-Slavery paper entitled "The National Era," will be accordingly commenced in the City of Washington, District of Columbia, on the first of January, 1847.

It will be edited by G. BAILEY, Jr., assisted by A. A. Phelps, and J. G. Whittier, Corresponding Editors. While due attention will be paid to current events, Congressional Proceedings, General Politics and Literature, the great aim of the paper will be a complete discussion of the Question of Slavery, and an exhibition of the duties of the Citizen in relation to it—especially will it explain and advocate the leading principles and measures of the Liberty Party—seeking to do this, not in the spirit of Party, but in the love of Truth—not for the triumph of Party, but for the establishment of Truth.

The journal will be printed weekly, on a mammoth sheet, of the finest quality, in handsome type, at the rate of Two Dollars a year, always in advance. This will be invariably adhered to.

All necessary arrangements have been made for giving stability to this important enterprise, and it is hoped that it may command the warm sympathy and prompt support of the friends of Liberty throughout the country.

Subscriptions may be forwarded to William Harned, No. 5 Spruce-st., New York City, or to the Publisher of the National Era, Washington.

BEALES' DAGUERRIAN GALLERIES.

MR. A. J. BEALES invites the attention of the public to his Premium One Dollar Daguerrian Galleries, at Nos. 156 and 175 Broadway, New-York. Having adopted the latest improvements, he has reducrd his prices one-half, and guarantees to take pictures equal to any in the city, in any position or dress, and with any desirable shade or color. Gold lockets of all descriptions constantly on hand. Attendance from eight in the morning until sunset.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

The Winter Term of this Institution will commence on the 6th of January, 1847, and continue fourteen weeks, under the care of J. R. IRISH & G. EVANS.

DERUYTER, Nov. 1, 1846.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$2 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

Miscellaneous.

TREATMENT OF SCHOLARS.

BY DR. S. B. WOODWARD.

Children under eight years of age should not usually be confined to the school-room more than one hour at a time, nor more than four hours in a day. These hours should afford considerable diversity of employments, so as to enable the child to change his posture frequently, and to be more or less upon his feet, and also to change the subject of thought, so that the mind shall not be occupied by one subject too long or too intensely.

Intensity should be carefully avoided—it leads directly to disease of the brain, which often, probably, arises from this cause. Precocity is generally the result of disease of this organ, either functional or organic; the former may be cured by timely attention; the latter exhibits itself in epilepsy, or an imbecility of mind, or proves fatal by the occurrence of inflammation or convulsions. Watchfulness cannot begin to early to guard against evils fraught with misery to the future.

If a child exhibits any symptoms of precocity, it should be immediately taken from books, and permitted to ramble and play in the open air, or engage in manual labor, and such amusements as will give rest to the mind, and health and vigor to the body.

The recess of school, for the children of eight years and under, should be long; the play active, and even noisy—(for the lungs acquire strength by exercise, as well as the muscles)—and every child should be required to unite in the sports of play-time.

Fifteen minutes is a short time for recess; half an hour is better, particularly in summer.

During the recess, the school-room ought to be thrown open in warm weather, and the windows dropped a little way in the cold weather, so as thoroughly to ventilate the apartments. We have hardly learned yet, that pure air is as important to health and life, as good nourishment and pure water.

In school regulations, regard is usually paid to mental and moral improvement only. We forget that we have bodies—the preservation and training of which are not less necessary to the young, than the acquisition of knowledge. Without health, we can have little enjoyment; with it we can learn all that is necessary with ease—if we are not in too great haste. No limit is given to the age in which the vigorous and healthy can acquire useful knowledge.

It is of little use to make great acquirements, if in doing so, we sow the seeds of disease, which will destroy the happiness and usefulness of life.

THE CONSEQUENCES OF SMOKING.

The wide-spread habit of smoking has not yet had due medical attention paid to it and its consequences. It is only by two or three years observations, that Dr. Laycock had become fully aware of the great changes induced in the system by the abuse of tobacco, and of the varied and obscure forms of disease to which, especially excessive smoking gave origin. He proceeded to state some of them as they were met with in the pharyngical mucous membrane, the stomach, the lungs, the heart, the brain, and the nervous system. The tobacco consumed by habitual smokers varied from half an ounce to twelve ounces per week, the usual quantity from two to three ounces. Inveterate cigar smokers will consume from four to five dozen per week.

The first morbid result is an inflammatory condition of the mucous membrane of the lips and tongue; then the tonsils and pharynx suffer, the mucous membrane becoming dry and congested. If the thorax be examined well, it will be found slightly swollen, with congested veins meandering over the surface, and here and there a streak of mucous. Action ascends upwards into the posterior nares, and there is a discharge from the upper part of the pharynx, and irritation is felt by the anterior nares. The eye becomes affected with heat, slight redness, lachrymation, and a peculiar spasmodic action of the orbicularis muscle, experienced together with intolerance of light on awaking from sleep in the morning. The frontal sinuses do not escape, but there is a heavy dull ache in their region.

Descending down the alimentary canal, we come to the stomach, where the results, in extreme cases, are symptoms of gastritis. Pain, tenderness, and a constant sensation of sickliness, and a desire to expectorate, belong to this affection.

The action of the heart and lungs is impaired by the influence of the narcotic on the nervous system; but a morbid state of the larynx, frachea, and lungs, results from the direct action of the smoke. The voice is observed to be rendered hoarser, and with a deeper tone. Sometimes a short cough results; and a case of ulceration of the cartilages of the larynx came under the doctor's notice. The patient was such a slave to the habit, that he hardly ever had the pipe out of his mouth. Simliar sufferings have been caused by similar practices in other instances.

Another form is a slight tickling low down in the pharynx or trachea; and the patient coughs, or rather hawks up, a grumous looking blood. It is so alarming as to be mistakeable for pulmonary hæmoptysis.

The action of tobacco-smoking on the heart is depressing; and some individuals who feel it in this organ more than others, complain of an uneasy sensation about the left nipple—a distressing feeling, not amounting to faintness, but allied to it. The action of the heart is observed to be feeble and irregular. An uneasy feeling is also experienced in or beneath the pectoral muscles, and oftener on the right side than on the left.

On the brain the use of tobacco appears to diminish the rapidity of the cerebral action, and check the flow of ideas through the mind. It differs from opium and henbane, and rather excites to wakefulness, like green tea, than composes to sleep; induces a dreaminess which leaves no impression on the memory, leaving a great susceptibility, indicated by a trembling of the hands and an irritability of temper. Such are secondary results of smoking. So are the blackness of teeth and gum-boils; there is also a sallow paleness of the complexion, an irresoluteness of disposition, and a want of life and energy, and in constant smokers who do not drink, a tendency to pulmonary phthisis.

Dr. Wright, of Birmingham, in a communication to the author, fully corroborates his opinions; and both agree that smoking produces gastric disorders, coughs, and inflammatory affections of the larynx and pharynx, diseases of the heart, and lowness of spirits; and, in short, is very injurious to the respiratory, circulating, alimentary, and nervous system.

THE RIGHT SORT OF STUFF.

The Boston Traveler says: Some fifteen years ago two strangers met on Charleston bridge. One was a young man fresh and green from the country, with his wardrobe in a bundle under his arm, and the other a resident of the city. For some reason, not easily explained, they halted and held something like the following conversation:—

Country Lad.—"Sir, do you know any place where I can get anything to do?"

Citizen.—"I don't know that I do. What sort of employment are you seeking for?"

Country Lad.—"Well, I'm not particular. I calculated on teaching school, when I left home; but they told me back here, that they thought I couldn't get one about here. Do you know of any stables where they want a hand?"

Finding the countryman was ready for anything in the way of work, the gentleman told him where he thought he might get employment as a hand-cart man and chore-man, and bid him good-bye.

It was not long after this casual interview that the young man sought out his adviser, and thanked him for helping him to a place. He had found the place to which he had been recommended, and had then full employment in a retail grocer's store, in carting packages and doing jobs of different kinds. From this humble condition he worked his way along in the world, to be clerk in the store, then into a wholesale establishment, and finally to be a partner in the same concern. He is now reputed to be worth from 50,000 to 75,000 dollars.

So much for energy and perseverance, with a willingness to do any honest work for a living. Men of such sort of stuff, who, if they cannot at once do what they would, will do what they can, with the ordinary blessings of Providence, are quite sure to succeed in the world.

A MOTHER TO HER DAUGHTER ON MARRIAGE.

You are now, my beloved child, about to leave those arms which have hitherto cherished you, and directed your every step, and at length conducted you to a safe, happy, and honorable protection, in the very bosom of love and honor. You must now be no longer the flighty, inconsiderate, haughty, passionate girl, but ever, with reverence and delight, have the merit of your husband in view. Reflect how vast the sum of your obligations to the man who confers upon you independence, distinction, and above all, felicity. Moderate, then, my beloved child, your private expenses, and proportion your general expenditures to the standard of his fortune, or rather his wishes. I fear not that, with your education and principles, you can ever forget the more sacred duties, so soon to be your sphere of action. Remember the solemnity of your vows, the dignity of your character, the sancity of your condition. You are ameanable to society for your example, to your husband for his honor and happiness, and to Heaven itself for those rich talents entrusted to your care and your improvement; and though, in the maze of pleasure, or the whirl of passion, the duties of the heart may be forgotten, remember, darling child, there is a record which will one day appear in terrible evidence against us for our least omission.

PHYSICAL LABOR.—They who are just commencing life can commit no greater error than that of considering themselves above their business. No matter what it may be, stick to it with closeness and perseverance, and endeavor to be foremost in your calling; this course will secure "golden opinions," and render you, in a short time, not only independent of the assistance of others, but of those vulgar and imbecile prejudices which are too prevalent in society and too often interposed as barriers and stumbling-blocks in the way of the weak-minded but upright of heart. Labor—honest labor in the field or the workshop, confers upon man a moral dignity—an excellence of mind and character, which the truly virtuous and discriminating will ever cordially respect. No matter what the popinjay of the saloon and the social sanhedrim may say—physical labor has never yet degraded any one—but on the contrary is ever recognized by the discriminating, as a ready passport to the most honorable society and the best emoluments in the capacity of man to bestow. If husbandry is made as respectable as it deserves to be, it will prevent the perpetuation of one of the great evils that now bear upon the community—the rush of our young men into the learned professions, which are already filled to overflowing, particularly that of the law. This, by natural tendency to render litigation cheap, not only operates banefully to the profession, but is an inducement to the litigants and weak-minded to appeal to it.

SCIENTIFIC ANECDOTE.—While the late Mr. Davidson was delivering a course of scientific lectures in the north, the following ludicrous event took place one evening while the audience were assembling. A clergyman took up in his hand a bit of phosphorus, which was placed in a dish, to be used in several experiments; and, after examining it for a little while, restored it to its place, remarking at the same time, that it was a singular substance. A well dressed person behind him, assuming the gentleman, and supposing a certain degree of effrontery necessary to support that character, also supplied himself with a piece of phosphorus; but instead of replacing it, thought proper to lodge it in his small clothes pocket, and took a seat near the fire. The fiery demon, set free from the restraints of its watery prison, soon began to manifest its incendiary disposition, which made its victim wince, and at last start from his seat in agony. The whole room was thrown into consternation, till the assistant, fortunately guessing the cause, if he was not, as we suspect, previously acquainted with the secret, emptied a decanter of water into the person's pocket, which had begun to fume like a volcano, and assuaged the conflagration.

One hundred and fifty negroes were sold at Charleston, S. C. a few days since, for $46,144. The plantation on which they worked commanded only $3,508.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.—When Charles the Second chartered the Royal Society, it is narrated of him that he was disposed to give the philosophers a royal, but at the same time a wholesome lecture. "Why is it, my lords and gentlemen," said he, "that if you fill a vessel with water to the very brim, so that it will not hold a single drop more, yet, putting a turbot into the water, it shall not overflow the vessel?" Many were the sage conjectures—that the fish would drink as much water as compensated for his own bulk—that he condensed the water to that amount—that the air-bladder had something to do with the phenomena—and a hundred others, which were propounded and abandoned in their turn, much to the amusement of the 'merry monarch.' At length Mr. Wren (afterwards Sir Christopher) modestly asked, "But is your Majesty sure that such would be the case?" "Aye, there," exclaimed his Majesty, laughing, "you have it; always, gentlemen, find out whether the thing be true before you proceed to account for it; then I shall not be ashamed of the charter I have just given you."

THIS COUNTRY.—The London Quarterly for October, 1846, contains a review of "The Emigrant, by Sir F. B. Head," who was for two years Governor of Canada. It must be an interesting and amusing work. He says that in this country, Nature has not only outlined her works on a larger scale, but has painted the whole picture with brighter and more costly colors than she used in delineating and beautifying the old world. "The heavens of America appear infinitely higher—the sky is bluer—the clouds are whiter—the air is fresher—the cold is intenser—the moon looks larger—the stars are brighter—the thunder is louder—the lightning is vivider—the wind is stronger—the rain is heavier—the mountains are higher—the rivers larger—the forests bigger—the plains broader; in short, the gigantic and beautiful features of the new world seem to correspond very wonderfully with the increased locomotive powers and other brilliant discoveries which have lately been developed in mankind."

PLAN FOR THE ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.—The Farmer and Mechanic says that the Hon. David Sears, of Boston, in a letter to the venerable Ex-President, John Quincy Adams, proposes the following mode for the abolition of slavery in the United States:—1st. That Commissioners be appointed by the President of the United States, and confirmed by the Senate, whose duty it shall be, under such conditions as Congress may determine, to purchase and emancipate slaves, being women and children, born prior to 1850, and held bound to service by any citizen of the United States, within such States of this Union as have not yet abolished slavery; and that annual appropriations be made by Congress for this purpose. 2d. That from and after July, 1850, there shall be, throughout the United States, no hereditary slavery. But that on and after that date, every child born within the United States of America, their jurisdiction and territories, shall be born free.

A PICTURE OF WAR.—The following paragraph is going the rounds of the papers. It presents in a strong and clear light the consummate folly and wickedness of ordinary warfare:—

"A hundred thousand mad animals, whose heads are covered with hats, advance to kill or be killed by the like number of their fellow mortals covered with turbans. By this strange procedure they want, at best, to decide whether a tract of land to which none of them have any claim, shall belong to a certain man whom they call sultan, or to another whom they call czar, neither of whom ever saw or will see the spot so furiously contended for; and very few of those creatures who thus mutually butcher each other, ever beheld the animal for whom they cut each other's throats! From time immemorial this has been the way of mankind almost over the earth. What an excess of madness is this! and how deservedly might a Superior Being crush to atoms this earthly ball, the bloody nest of such ridiculous murderers!"

THE BLIND AND THE LAME.—In New Orleans there are two men in the humble walks of life, brothers in misfortune, who have been visited heavily by the hand of Providence. The one, says the Picayune, is lame and doomed to pass through life an unfortunate cripple—the other is compelled to grope his way through everlasting darkness, shut out forever from the light of heaven. In firing a salute on the 4th of July, by the premature discharge or the bursting of a cannon he was deprived of sight. These two men have joined their fortunes, and the lame man guides the blind. They sell the newspapers of the day, and while the lame leads the blind through the streets, the latter calls out his wares, and his mournful cry and the appearance of his sightless eyeballs do not fail to attract the attention and commiseration of the public, and they buy merely for charity.

◆

A CENSORIOUS SPIRIT.—Commonly, says Dr. Barrow, the best men are the most candid and gentle; and they are the most apt to blame others who deserve the most themselves; the sharpest tongues and the foulest lives do usually go together; they who are the strictest judges of their own, are the fairest interpreters of other men's actions, and they who will least pardon others, do not excuse themselves; they who are strangely acute in descrying other men's faults, are stark blind in discovering their own. Our Saviour, therefore, chargeth such persons with hypocrisy. Thou hypocrite—first cast the beam out of thine own eye; implying that they do but falsely pretend a respect for goodness and zeal against sin, seeing in their own practice they indulge it; that it is rather pride, peevishness, idleness, spleen, or selfish design, that actuateth them.

◆

OUR FRIENDS IN HEAVEN.—The expectation of loving my friends in Heaven, principally kindles my love to them on earth. If I thought I should never know them, and consequently never love them, after this life is ended, I should number them in temporal things, and only love them as such. But I now delightfully converse with my godly friends, in a firm persuasion that I shall converse with them forever; and I take comfort in those that are dead or absent, as believing I shall shortly meet them in heaven; and I love them with a heavenly love, as the heirs of heaven, even with a love that shall there be perfected, and forever exercised. [Baxter.

VARIETY.

It is said of Cuvier, that one day, while walking where Æneas is said to have walked, a certain repulsive personage met him and demanded of him worship. 'No, I will not worship you,' said Cuvier. 'Yes, you must,' said the horrible. 'No, I will not,' replied the other. 'Then,' said the demon, 'if you will not, I will eat you.' Cuvier eyed him deliberately; and instead of defying him, as no doubt he might have done, preferred falling back upon the natural history lessons of his mundane life, and said, 'Horns and cloven feet, gramnivorous. You eat me? Nonsense!'

Charity is a universal duty, which it is in every man's power sometimes to practice, since every degree of assistance given to another, on proper motives, in an act of charity; and there is scarcely any man in such a state of imbecility that he may not on some occasions benefit his neighbor. He that cannot relieve the poor may instruct the ignorant, and he that cannot attend the sick may reclaim the vicious. He that can give little assistance himself, may yet perform the duty of charity by inflaming the ardor of others, and recommending the petitions that he cannot grant, to those who have more to bestow.

A Message was sent in 1846, and received in 1845. Directly after the clock struck twelve, on the night of the 31st of December, 1845, the superintendent of Paddington signaled his brother at Slough, by the electric telegraph, that he wished him a happy new year; an answer was made, stating that the wish was premature, as a new year had not yet arrived! Such was indeed the fact, for time was matched against the telegraph; and beaten by half a minute. The distance being eighteen miles, the new year arrives at Slough one minute and forty seconds later than at Paddington.

Our daughters must learn the essential conditions on which health depends, and carefully conform to them. They must learn that if they would have a sound mind in a sound body, cheerful spirits with beautiful forms and blooming countenances, they must cease to worship at the shrine of Fashion, and follow the precepts of Reason and common sense; must breathe pure air, take free exercise, be satisfied with a simple, nutritious diet; and never be afraid to bear a part in the work of the kitchen, and the common affairs of the family.

As to some of the ends of civil government, all people are agreed:—That it is designed to protect our person and property, that it is designed to compel us to satisfy our wants, not by rapine, but by industry, that it is designed to compel us to decide our differences, not by the strong hand, but by arbitration, that it is designed to direct our whole force, as that of one man, against any other society which may offer us injury—these are propositions which will hardly be disputed. [Macaulay.

A good lady, who had two children sick with the measles, wrote to a friend for the best remedy. The friend had just received a note from another lady, inquiring the way to make pickles. In the confusion the lady who inquired about the pickles received the remedy for the measles and the anxious mother of the sick children read with horror the following:—'Scald them three or four times in very hot vinegar, and sprinkle them well with salt, and in a few days they will be cured.'

Whitfield is reported to have said, that a man with the eloquence of an angel ought not to exceed forty minutes in the length of a sermon; and it is well known that Wesley seldom exceeded thirty. "I have almost always found," says another eminent preacher, "that the last fifteen minutes of a sermon an hour in length, was more than lost, both upon the speaker and the congregation."

Of all vices, take heed of drunkenness; other vices are but the fruits of disordered affections—this disorders, nay, banishes reason; other vices but impair the soul—this demolishes her two chief faculties, the understanding and the will; other vices make their own way—this makes way for all vices. He that is a drunkard, is qualified for all vice.

What a noble sentiment was that of John Adams, which he conveyed to his wife when public duties, for a time, separated him from his family. "The education of our children is never out of my mind. Train them up to virtue; habituate them to industry; activity and spirit. Make them consider every vice as shameful. Make them disdain to be destitute of any useful knowledge.

"The lark flyeth nearest to heaven, because she rises earliest of birds; and she sings as she soars, because the light of God's countenance is on her pathway, and his freedom in her wings. The Christian's soul should ever be like hers, should ever spring up to its Author, and go forth to its daily duties with faith and love."

'Are you agreed, gentlemen?' said the Clerk of the Court to the Jury at the late Ely assizes. 'Is your verdict for plaintiff or defendant?' The foreman, a man of good property, answered, 'I don't know what ye mean by plaintiff or defendant, but (pointing to a barrister,) he emphatically exclaimed, 'that there man there is right.'

It has is to have been observed in Moscow, that two workmen in advanced stages of pulmonary consumption were cured after a few month's employment in certain chemical works. During this time they had been almost constantly exposed to the influence of vapors charged with marine salt and sal-ammoniac.

A story is told of a worthy lad from "old Edgefield," who was recently doubting whether or not he should volunteer for Mexico. One of the flags waving in his eyes somewhat discouraged him. "Victory is a good thing," said he, "but why put 'Victory or Death.' Put it 'Victory or Cripple,' said he, and I'll go that!"

No bars were to be tolerated on board the vessels which conveyed the soldiers to New Orleans from Pittsburgh, being forbidden by Regimental Orders No. 2, from Col. Wynkoop. The same orders advise the strictest caution in relation to "extra arms" in possession of the men.

A Welsh paper says, that there is a man in Castellned, who resides and sleeps every night in a small room, upon straw laid upon the floor, with his wife, seven children, thirty ducks, forty hens and chickens, four owls, and six rabbits.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

Remittances and communications must be made in all cases without expense to the publishers. The former may always be done through a Post-master, by handing him the amount to be remitted, taking his receipt, and forwarding the receipt by mail, post paid; or the money may be enclosed in a letter, post paid, directed to the publishers.

N. B. The Postage on all these Periodicals is reduced by the late Post Office law, to about one-third the former rates, making a very important saving in the expense to mail subscribers.

* * In most of the large cities and towns in the United States lying on the principal Railroad and Steamboats routes, these periodicals will be delivered FREE OF POSTAGE.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

ELIHU BURRITT, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in ADVANCE.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life. It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

HISTORY OF THE NEW JERSEY SUNDAY LAWS.

The first European settlers in New Jersey, in the early part of the seventeenth century, professedly established liberty of conscience. When Sir Robert Carr, first English Proprietary Governor appointed by the Duke of York, compelled the submission of the colonists in Delaware, in one of the articles of agreement between him and them, it was stipulated, "that all should enjoy liberty of conscience in church discipline as formerly" Subsequently, under the government of the Lords Proprietors, a Constitution was published, with the title of "The Concessions of Agreement of the Lords Proprietors of New Jersey to and with all and every of the adventurers, and all such as shall settle and plant there." The sixth article says, "That no person so qualified shall at any time be in any way molested, punished, disquieted, or called in question, for any difference in opinion or practice, in matters of religious concernment, who do not actually disturb the civil peace of the said province; but that all persons may freely and fully have and enjoy his and their judgments and consciences in matters of religion, they behaving themselves peaceably and quietly, and not using this liberty to licentiousness, nor to the civil injury or outward disturbance of others; any law, statute, or clause continued, or to be continued, usage or custom of the realm of England, to the contrary notwithstanding." For a considerable number of years, West Jersey was in the hands of Quakers, they being the principal landholders, and a majority of the population. During this time, they published a charter, or body of fundamental laws, which was ordered to be read in a solemn manner four times a year, in the presence of the people, by the magistrates. One of these fundamental laws declares, "that as no man, nor number of men, upon earth, have power to rule over men's consciences, none should at any time be called in question, or hurt in person, privilege, or estate, for the sake of his opinion, judgment, faith, or worship, towards God in matters of religion."

The Proprietaries of East and West Jersey were united into one Province, and a Governor of the whole appointed by the English crown, in the first year of Queen Anne. The next year, 1703, Lord Cornbury arrived, with a royal Constitution for the united Province. He was instructed to maintain and extend the Episcopal Church of England; but to permit liberty of conscience to all persons but Papists; and, to allay all dissatisfaction among the people, they were assured that all their former privileges were reserved to them in the new Constitution. The new Governor met the General Assembly at Amboy, on the 10th of November, and required them to pass an act for securing two thousand pounds per annum, for twenty years, for the governor's salary, a militia law, and other arbitrary measures, which were successfully resisted by a majority of the members. In order to obtain the entire control of this legislative body, his lordship resolved, by the advice of his counsellors, to exclude a portion of its members under false pretences. He accordingly dissolved the present House, and hastily ordered a new election. When the representatives appeared before the Governor to take the prescribed oaths, without which they could not exercise their offices, he refused to administer them to Thos. Gardiner, Thomas Lambert, and Joshua Wright, distinguished delegates from West Jersey, by whose exclusion, and other corrupt measures, he obtained a majority of one in the House. This meeting of the General Assembly was held at Burlington; and on Dec. 12th, 1704, was passed "An Act for Suppressing Immorality," of which the following is an abstract:—

"Whereas profaneness and immorality have too much abounded in this Province, to the shame of Christianity, and the grief of all good and sober men, for the suppressing whereof for the future, be it enacted, by the Governor, Council, and Assembly, now met and assembled, and by the authority of the same, that all and every person and persons whatsoever within this Province, who shall be convicted of drunkenness, cursing, swearing, or breaking the Lord's day by doing any ordinary work or labor thereon, excepting works of necessity or mercy, shall be fined by the Justice of the Peace, for drunkenness or breaking the Lord's day, in the sum of six shillings, money of the said Province, for each offence, besides costs; or, for want of effects to pay said fine, shall commit the offender to the stocks for the space of four hours for drunkenness, or for breaking the Lord's day."

This law was evidently designed by the Governor and his council more for curbing the free spirit of the West Jersey Quakers, than for the suppressing of vice. There is a studied association of immorality with "breaking the Lord's day," for the purpose of casting odium upon their religious sentiments. The grief of the Governor, and of his good and sober council, as he afterwards represented the matter in an address to her majesty the Queen, was "owing to the turbulent, factious, uneasy, and disloyal principles of two men in the Assembly, Mr. Lewis Morris, and Samuel Jennings, a Quaker—men notorious for being uneasy under all government—men never known to be consistent with themselves—men to whom all the factions and confusions in the governments of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, for many years, are wholly owing—men who have had the confidence to declare in open council, that your majesty's instructions to your Governors in these Provinces shall not oblige or bind them, further than they are warranted by the law, of which also they will be the judges; and this is done by them, as we have all the reason in the world to believe, to encourage not only this government, but also the rest of your governments in America, to throw off your Majesty's royal prerogative, and consequently to involve all your dominions in this part of the world, and the honest, and good, and well-meaning people in them, in confusion, hoping thereby to obtain their wicked purposes. The remedy for all these, we most humbly propose, is, that your Majesty will most graciously please to discountenance those wicked, designing men, and show some dislike to this Assembly's proceedings, who are resolved, neither to support this your Majesty's government by a revenue, nor take care to defend it by settling a militia." This bitter complaint to the Queen, against the Quakers, evidently betrays the design of lord Cornbury's Lord's-day law. The law, however, continued in force until the Revolution, when, on the 2d of October, 1776, the General Assembly of the State of New Jersey passed as follows:—

"An Act to confirm and establish the several courts of justice within this State:—

Whereas, it is absolutely necessary for the welfare of the people, that justice be duly and regularly administered, be it enacted, by the Council and General Assembly of this State, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority of the same, that the several courts of law and equity of this State shall be confirmed and established, and continue to be held with like powers under the present government as they were held at and before the declaration of independency, lately made by the honorable the Continental Congress."

Thus, without any particular examination as to whether any of the existing laws were inconsistent with the Declaration of Independence, they were all adopted by one wholesale act. In this way lord Cornbury's Lord's-day act continued in force until 1790, when the General Assembly met at Perth Amboy, and passed "An Act to promote the interests of Religion and Morality, and for suppressing Vice among all ranks of people in this State;" the preamble and second section of which read as follows:—

"Whereas the several good and wholesome laws for suppressing vice and immorality now in force in this State are found not to have answered the salutary purposes intended; for remedy whereof, be it enacted, &c.

"Section 2d. Whereas it is enacted by a law passed December the twelfth, seventeen hundred and four, that drunkenness, cursing, swearing, or breaking the Lord's day by doing any ordinary work or labor thereon, excepting works of necessity and mercy, shall be punishable before any Justice in the County in which the crime shall be committed, Be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, and it is hereby expressly enjoined upon all and every Justice or Justices of the Peace within this State, upon his or their becoming acquainted, by his or their personal knowledge, or by the information and testimony of others, of any person or persons being guilty of the aforesaid crime of drunkenness, cursing, swearing, or breaking the Lord's day, to put the said law in execution against such offenders."

In 1778, lord Cornbury's Lord's-day act was greatly revised and amplified, and the modern style of naming it for the first time adopted by the Legislature of New Jersey; it then and there being styled, "The Christian Sabbath, or first day of the week, commonly called Sunday." Against this law, when thus undergoing revision, the Seventh-day Baptists remonstrated, as unconstitutional, and oppressive to their civil interests. But the force of long-established custom and strong prepossessions prevailed with a majority of the legislators; and it was reënacted, with a provision to allow such persons as observe the seventh day to labor on their own farms, and in their own workshops, provided such labor does not disturb any one else. In this day of legal revisal, it is a fair subject for consideration, whether these persons are not entitled to all they ask. They are about to make another appeal to the Legislature of the State, asking EQUAL RIGHTS; that is, that business transactions, peaceably and otherwise legally performed, may be legalized on the first day of the week, as on other days. It is a fair question, whether the Legislature of 1798 did not admit that they have a constitutional right to what they ask, by exempting their labor from the penalties of the law on that day, although their prepossessions would not allow them all their rights! Is ours a government of RIGHTS, or of privileges? The facts set forth in this succinct history of the law, show plainly enough, that it was in the first place an arbitrary act of an oppressive government to suppress the free spirit of the early colonists in their endeavor to establish perfect religious and civil liberty. In the progress of population, the observers of the Christian Sabbath became the principal makers and administrators of the State laws, and their prepossessions led them to regard the law in question as a good and wholesome regulation. But when it is found to conflict with personal rights—rights guaranteed by the National Constitution—ought it to be continued? S. D.

LIFE.

BY WILLIAM H. BURLEIGH.

Life, says the cynic, is a dusty road,
Thorn-paven, verdureless, and Death the goal,
Where, tired of its companionship, the soul
Throws off its worthless clay—a weary load—
And more we know not—though of its abode
Conjecture frames a thousand idle dreams,
All vague alike and vain—so Reason deems.

Life, says the Christian, is a gift bestowed
By the All Good, who bids us use its hours
Wisely, as still they pass on rapid wing,
And each shall its peculiar blessing bring
In peace of mind and renovated powers.
Thus live, and Death shall shake his dart in vain,
Since his brief triumph is thine endless gain!

THE PASCHAL SUPPER AT BONN.

There are about one hundred Jewish families residing here, who for the most part reside in a separate quarter, though they are not restricted to it. The rich Jews at Bonn, like their brethren at Cologne and Brussels, do not attend the synagogue. A pious aged Jew, with whom I conversed about the hope of Israel, was so kind as to invite us to his house, that we might be present at the Paschal Supper, and we most gladly availed ourselves of his kindness. When we arrived at his house, we met several young Jews, with whom we conversed. There was among them a particularly interrsting and well-informed young gentleman, who had read the New Testament, the maxims of which he said were divine; and he spoke in such a manner of the Lord Jesus, that I believe he is not far from the kingdom of God. I also learned that a short time since an Israelite, who had studied at the University of Bonn, had become a believer in Christ Jesus. Meanwhile night had set in, and the ceremony commenced.

On the table there was a large plate, on which there were three matzoth, or unleavened cakes. The first was called Cohen, the second Levi, the third Israel, over which a cloth was put. There was also on that plate a cup full of salt water, a small plate of green herbs, a large piece of horseradish, a plate containing a mixture made of apples, nuts, figs, almonds, and wine. There was also a large bone, on which there was a little meat, and an egg. The family, which consisted of the father, mother, and four children, took their seats around the table, lifted up the plate, and said with a loud voice:—"This is the bread of affliction which our fathers used to eat in Egypt; whosoever is hungry, let him come to eat with us; whosoever wishes, let him come and celebrate the Pesach with us; this year we are here, next year in the land of Israel; this year we are servants, next year we shall be free." These sentences are said in Chaldee; the following is the reason given for saying them in that language, and not in Hebrew:—"All who are hungry are invited to come; if the invitation should reach the evil spirits they would come and eat every thing, but they do not understand Chaldee; therefore the invitation is given in that language." After which the youngest boy asked the father, why this night was observed differently from other nights? why must we eat matzoth and bitter herbs? The father answered, I will tell you; we have been servants to Pharaoh in Egypt, but God delivered us from our slavery. The father then related the history of the Jews from Abraham to the exodus, mentioned the ten plagues which God brought upon the Egyptians—which all repeated, and, as often as one of the plagues was mentioned, each put his little finger in the cup of wine which stood before them. Then it was asked why the bone, the matzoth, and the bitter herbs, were before them. The father replied, The bone signifies the Paschal Lamb, the matzoth reminds us that our forefathers were in haste when they left Egypt, so that they had no time to bake their bread, and the bitter herbs should bring to our mind the great affliction of our parents in the land of our bondage. Then each present took the cup of wine in his hand, lifted it up, and said, "Therefore it is our duty to laud, to praise, to adore, to bless Him who has dealt so marvelously with our forefathers." Several psalms were next sung, after which a prayer was offered for their return to the land of their fathers, for the building of Jerusalem and the temple, and for their eternal redemption. Each then took the cup in his hand, and the father said, "Blessed be thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who has created the wine." Each one drank a portion of the wine, and then received a small piece of matzoth to eat; but before doing so, they said, "Blessed be God, who has sanctified us with his commandments, and told us to eat unleavened bread." Then the father took some of the bitter herbs, dipping them into the mixture, which had very much the appearance of mortar, and indeed was intended to remind them of the mortar which their fathers worked in whilst in Egypt. He gave a portion to each one present to eat. He then took the horseradish and cut a piece off it; placing it between two pieces of matzoth, he ate some of it, giving a piece also to each of the family. The supper was next brought in. We then, however, took our leave, thanking our kind-hearted friend for his civility, and returned to our lodgings. It is on this evening that the Jews sing, after their supper, the well-known hymn, "The mighty God shall build his temple speedily." [Jewish Intelligencer.

ANECDOTE OF AN AFRICAN PREACHER.

There lived, in the immediate vicinity, a respectable man who had become interested in the subject of religion, and who had begun with some earnestness to search the Scriptures. He had read a few chapters, when he became greatly perplexed with some of those passages which an inspired apostle has declared "hard to be understood." In this state of mind, he repaired to an African minister for instruction and help, and found him, at noon, on a sultry day in summer, laboriously engaged in hoeing corn. As the man approached, the preacher, with patriarchal simplicity, leaned upon the handle of his hoe, and listened to his story. "Uncle Jack," said he, "I have discovered lately that I am a great sinner, and I commenced reading the Bible, that I might learn what I must do to be saved. But I have met with a passage here," holding up his Bible, "which I know not what to do with. It is this: 'God will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth.' What does this mean?"

A short pause intervened, and the old African replied as follows:

"Master, if I have been correctly informed, it has not been more than a day or two since you commenced reading the Bible, and if I remember rightly, that passage you have mentioned is away yonder in Romans. Long before you get to that, at the very beginning of the gospel, it is said, 'Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.' Now, have you done that? The truth is, you read entirely too fast. You must begin again, and take things as God has been pleased to place them. When you have done all you are told to do in Matthew, come and we will talk about Romans."

Having thus answered, the preacher resumed his work, and left the man to his own reflections. Who does not admire the simplicity and good sense characterized in this reply? Could the most learned polemic more effectually have met and disposed of a difficulty?

ECCENTRIC.

An eccentric New England clergyman, not being a very animated and interesting preacher, was often deserted by his flock—at least by parts of them—on Sunday. The old gentleman finally adopted rather a novel method of keeping the delinquents up to the point of duty.

When any family was absent two or three Sundays in succession, Mr. S. would publicly state to the congregation, that as Mr. ——'s family had been absent for some time from public worship, he presumed there was sickness or trouble in their household, and would appoint a prayer meeting at their house on the next Tuesday afternoon.

The old gentleman, on one occasion, also caught the wanderers by the following piece of "guile:" One Sunday afternoon he told the people that he should take a short journey the next day, and be absent for a short time; but he would take care that some person should come from Boston and supply his desk the next Sunday. On the next Sunday morning the meeting house was filled. The whole town turned out to hear the Boston minister. They waited a while in eager expectation of his entrance, when in marched the Rev. Mr. S., and walked up the broad aisle, as he had been accustomed to do many years gone by. On ascending the pulpit, he smiled graciously upon his large audience, and said, "I am glad, my dear hearers, that I have got you out; you are all here, as you ought to be; and I hope your minds are prepared to receive instruction. I came from Boston, yesterday, myself."

DR. JOHNSON.

In his last hours, Johnson said to his physician, "Dr. Brocklesby, you are a worthy man, and my friend; but I am afraid you are no Christian. What can I do better for you than offer up in your presence a prayer to the Great God, that you may become a Christian in every sense of the word?" He fell on his knees and prayed; but rising up he took the Doctor's hand and said, "Doctor, you do not say, Amen!" The Doctor then said, "Amen." Johnson continued, "My dear Doctor, believe a dying man; there is no salvation but in the sacrifice of the Lamb of God."

As Hume, in his last hours, had made a bold declaration of his infidel opinions, Johnson was desired, in like circumstances, to make a confession of his faith. Seizing his pen, and inquiring what was the usual form of commencing a will, he wrote—"I offer my soul to the great and merciful God; I offer it full of pollution, but in full assurance that it will be cleansed in the blood of the Redeemer." Having written for some minutes, he expressed something of his former dread of death. Sir John Hawkins, who was present, replied, "If you, Doctor, have these fears, what is to become of me and others?" "O, sir," said he, "I have written piously, it is true, but I have lived too much like other men." He now claimed no merit; he had, in common with all others, violated Heaven's righteous law, and could find no peace, no hope, but in humble penitence and cordial trust in the atoning Saviour.

PRAYER.—'But prayer was not invented; it was born with the first sigh, with the first joy, the first sorrow of the human heart; or rather, man was born to pray; to glorify God, or to implore him, was his only mission here below; all else perishes before him; but the cry of glory, of admiration or love, which he raises towards the Creator, does not perish on his passing from the earth—it re-ascends, it resounds from age to age in the ear of the Almighty, like the reflection of his own magnificence. It is the only thing in man which is wholly divine, and which he can exhale with joy and pride; for this pride is an homage to him to whom alone homage is due—the Infinite Being.' [Lamartine.

GOD EVERYWHERE.

Lord Craven lived in London when the last great plague raged. His house was in that part of the town since called Craven Buildings. To avoid the threatened danger, his lordship resolved to retire to his seat in the country. His coach-and-six were accordingly at the door, the luggage put up, and all things ready for the journey. As he was walking through his hall, with his hat on, his cane under his arm, and putting on his gloves, in order to step into his carriage, he overheard his negro, (who served him as his postillion,) saying to another servant, "I suppose, by my lord's quitting London, to avoid the plague, that his God lives in the country, and not in town." The poor negro said this in the simplicity of his heart, as really believing in a plurality of gods. The speech, however, forcibly struck Lord C., and made him pause—"My God, thought he, lives everywhere, and can preserve me in the town as well as in the country; I'll even stay where I am. The ignorance of that poor fellow has preached a useful sermon to me. Lord, pardon that unbelief and that distrust of thy providence which made me think of running away from thy hand." Immediately he ordered the horses to be taken off from the coach, and the luggage to be brought in. He continued in London, was remarkably useful among his neighbors, and never caught the infection.

THE BIBLE.

The Bible is a divine encyclopedia in itself. It contains history the most authentic and ancient, tracing back to the first creation of our world; and prophecy the most important and interesting, tracing forward to its final consummation; journeys surpassing all others in the marvelousness of their adventures, and the dignity of their guide, for they were marked by miracles at every step, and in every moment directed by God; the travels of the most distinguished missionaries, the first preachers of the Gospel, and the lives of the most illustrious personages, including the biography of the Son of God; events more wonderful than romance ever imagined, and stories more fascinating than fancy ever sketched; the finest specimens of poetry and eloquence, of sound philosophy, and solid argument; models of virtue the most attractive, and maxims of wisdom the most profound; forms of prayer the most appropriate in every variety of spiritual experience, and songs of praise that would not be unworthy an angel's tongue; precepts of unparalleled importance, and parables of unrivaled beauty; examples of consistent piety, suited to every situation; and lessons of divine instruction, adapted to every age. [Rev. Hugh White.

FAMILY RELIGION.

Family religion is of unspeakable importance. Its effect will greatly depend on the sincerity of the head of the family, and on his mode of conducting the worship of his household. If his children and servants do not see his prayers exemplified in his temper and manners, they will be disgusted with his religion; tediousness will weary them; fine language will shoot above them; gloominess or austerity will make them dread religion as a hard service. Let them be met with smiles. Let them be met as for the most delightful service in which they can be engaged. Let them find it short, plain, tender, and heavenly.

Worship, thus conducted, may be used as an engine of vast power in families. It diffuses a sympathy through the members. It calls off the mind from the deadening effect of worldly affairs. It arrests every member with a morning and evening sermon, in the midst of all the hurries and cares of life. It says, 'There is a God!' "There is a spiritual world!" "There is a life to come!" It fixes the idea of responsibility in the mind. It furnishes a tender and judicious father or master with an opportunity of gently glancing at faults, where a direct admonition might be inexpedient. It enables him to relieve the weight with which subordination or service often sits on the minds of inferiors. [Cecil.

THE WAYS OF GOD VINDICATED.—"A deaf and dumb child, when asked, in writing, by a perfect stranger, at a public meeting, who made all things, took up his chalk and wrote on a large board—In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. The same child, when asked in a similar way—Why did Jesus Christ come into the world? wrote under it, This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners. The visitor then put a question, which many of us would have feared to propose, lest it should have produced an unhappy effect, but by this time he began to have confidence in the child's ability. He asked him, Why were you born deaf and dumb, when I can both hear and speak? For a moment the boy looked at the question, with a countenance rather expressive of sorrow—but it soon beamed with acquiescence in the divine will, and he took up the chalk and wrote, 'Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight.'

REMARKABLE EPITAPH.—The following admirable inscription is copied from a stone in the burial ground of Concord, Mass. It is seldom that a string of finer paradoxes can be found.

"God wills us free; man wills us slaves. I will as God wills; God's will be done. Here lies the body of John Jack, a native of Africa, who died March 1773, aged about sixty years. Though born in a land of slavery, he was born free; though he lived in a land of liberty, he died a slave, till, by his honest though stolen labors, he acquired the source of slavery, which gave him his freedom, though not long before death, the grand tyrant, gave him his final emancipation, and set him on a footing with kings. Though a slave to vice, he practiced those virtues without which kings are but slaves."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 21, 1847.

CREATION AND REDEMPTION.

Rev. T. B. Brown delivered his Eighth Lecture upon the subject of the Sabbath, at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in Eleventh-st., on Sunday evening last. It was devoted to a consideration of the argument for a change of the Sabbath from the completion of the work of redemption.

The speaker stated in the outset, that the advocates of the change do not rest their argument entirely upon the texts which have been examined. The proof from them being altogether inferential, it seems necessary to augment its strength as much as possible; and hence they resort to analogy. They say, that as God, after he had finished the work of creation, rested on the seventh day, so Christ, after he had finished the work of redemption, rested on the first day; that he finished this work by rising from the dead; that as the work of redemption is a much greater and more glorious work than that of creation, so there is much stronger reason for commemorating it than there is for commemorating the work of creation; and therefore the first day of the week, which witnessed the resurrection, supersedes and takes the place of the seventh day as the Sabbath, so that the first day of the week is now the Christian Sabbath.

In this argument two principal points are assumed—1st. That the work of redemption is a greater work than that of creation; 2d. That the work of redemption was finished by the resurrection of Christ. But if both these points be conceded, it will not thence follow that the day of Christ's resurrection should be celebrated as a Sabbath, unless there is a divine appointment to that effect. It has been shown, that those passages in the New Testament commonly quoted for the purpose, do not contain any such appointment. Much reliance, however, is placed by some upon the text Heb. 4: 10—"For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his." It is maintained, that this has reference to Christ, and teaches that after he had finished his work of redeeming the world, he entered into his rest, in the same manner as God entered into his rest after finishing the work of creation, thus giving us a Sabbath in the same way —by example. If it be granted that this text refers to Christ, the context shows that the rest spoken of is the heavenly state, into which Christ did not enter on the first day, nor until forty days after his resurrection. The probability is, however, that the text has reference, not to Christ, but to the believer, who ceases from his works of toil and anxiety when he dies and enters on the heavenly state. The analogy between God's rest at the completion of his creation work, and Christ's rest at the completion of his redemption work, does not hold good. Even granting the premises of this argument, therefore, the conclusion does not follow. And since there is no divine appointment of a day of rest for the purpose of celebrating the finishing of redemption, we are not warranted in celebrating one.

The lecturer then proceeded to examine the merits of the argument itself. It is assumed, that the work of redemption is greater than that of creation. Where is this taught in the Bible? The only text ever adduced in favor of the idea —Is. 65: 17—was shown to have no bearing upon the point, since it speaks, not of redemption, but of the new creation, which is entirely a different thing. But what does reason affirm about this question? In reply, it was averred, that reason can never settle the question. In order to determine which is the greater work, redemption or creation, it is necessary to measure the extent of one or the other. But this no finite mind is able to do. Hence it is presumption in man to undertake the decision of the question. It is easy to tell which of the two works makes the strongest impression on us; but that is a very different thing from telling which is in reality the greatest. When we are brought to experience the redemption by Jesus Christ, we are more strongly affected than by any work which we have ever contemplated. But this determines nothing as to the actual comparative magnitude of redemption and creation. It is quite likely, however, that this strong feeling has had more to do with the decision of the question by most people, than any thorough and logical investigation. Again, it is assumed, that redemption was finished by the resurrection of Christ. This assumption is quite as unwarrantable as the other. The simple resurrection of Christ does not complete the function answerable to his appointment as our great High Priest. He must enter into heaven, and there present his crucified body before God on our behalf, as was clearly taught by the types of the Mosaic economy. Hence the day of his ascension, rather than the day of his resurrection, is the day on which the work of redemption was finished. But if there is any point short of the ascension into heaven, where it is allowable to say that redemption was finished, that point must be, not the resurrection, but the death of Christ; for when he was expiring on the cross he cried out, "It is finished." From these considerations, it appears that the argument for a change of the Sabbath, based upon the finishing of the work of redemption by the resurrection of Christ, and the supposed superiority of that work over creation, is a mere sophism, which will not abide the test of sound investigation.

Before dismissing this part of the subject, Mr. Brown wished to introduce one reflection, namely, that to found an obligation upon this kind of reasoning in regard to any particular day, is to render intelligent obedience impossible to the mass of Christians. In order to feel the force of this argument for the change—if there is any force in it—it is necessary to lay propositions together, reason upon them in detail, and then draw inferences from them skillfully, in order to discover duty. A very large proportion of God's people move in the humbler walks of life, having never been disciplined by education, nor had their minds schooled in the rules of logic. Yet such persons have an obedience to render, and to give account for, as well as the more learned and intellectual. It is not possible for them to do it understandingly, if they must, by a process of skillful reasoning, draw out their duty, and that too from propositions which, to say the least, are of doubtful truth. Hence one of two things must be true; either these common people, who compose much the largest portion of the Israel of God, are placed in subjection to their teachers, at all the risk of being led to destruction, or else a practice which is established with so much difficulty cannot be a duty taught in the word of God. Those who believe that God has never established a race of priests, to whom the common people are to place their minds in servile subjection, must take the latter ground. In the case before us, we have a simple question of dnty. By laying propositions together, reasoning upon them in detail, drawing inferences from them skillfully, and twisting a few passages of Scripture which contain the expression "first day of the week" into a shape entirely different from their original import, one may render plausible the supposition that it is duty to keep the first day. But how different it is with God's Sabbath! The most illiterate person can take his Bible, and at once point to chapter and verse which says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." That is plain, requires no labored effort to understand, is exactly suited to his comprehension, and is something which abideth forever.

Three popular objections to the claims of the seventh day were here brought under consideration—1st. The spherical form of the earth, and the possibility of gaining or losing a day by sailing around it; 2d. The long days and nights in the polar regions; 3d. The notion that the reckoning of time may have been lost, so that we are not now certain which is the true seventh day. Each of these objections was answered, in a manner which must have convinced every attentive hearer, that for those who advocate the observance of the first day to raise such objections against the seventh day, is exceedingly unreasonable, if not superlatively ridiculous.

EDUCATION FOR THE JEWISH MINISTRY.

The January number of "The Occident and American Jewish Advocate," contains a long and able article respecting the deficiency of duly educated religious teachers, and the best means to provide a supply. It seems that in past years the Jewish congregations of England and America have obtained their ministers principally from continental Europe, where the higher branches of Hebrew education are extensively cultivated, and men of piety and education have been easily found. This system, however has been attended with evils. One evil has been, that foreign teachers, though well versed in general literature, and fully qualified to read the lessons in the synagogues, have not been sufficiently acquainted with the English language to enable them to preach acceptably, and give instruction to the youth. Another evil has been the impossibility of investigating their moral characters sufficiently to satisfy all the requirements of a minister. A third and still greater evil has been, that they are not able to secure the confidence and affections of the people like those who have grown up in their midst. Within the last twenty years, according to the article under consideration, the demand for servants in the house of God has increased ten-fold, both in England and America; and there is every probability that the demand will continue to increase in an equal or greater degree. In such circumstances, it becomes an important question how this demand is to be supplied. The writer proposes the establishment of a High School, in some central position, either in England or America, "whence may issue men of ample religious and literary endowments, known to the congregations, and therefore likely to be chosen with a full knowledge of their personal history, in addition to that of their acquirements; men in whose hands the future destinies of their respective congregations could be placed with perfect safety; men who, presiding over those who were their school-friends and playmates, might carry with them the affections as well as the respect of their flocks." The following are the closing words of the article, to which we heartily respond: "We mean to agitate this subject upon every fitting opportunity, until we succeed, or find success hopeless. The latter alternative, however, we dread not; but rather look to see success crown our fond hopes of seeing these countries before long emulating and excelling Europe in the means of educating enlightened Israelites, which would be the best means to remove any lingering prejudice against us, and to show that we make a worthy use of the liberty we enjoy."

EQUAL RELIGIOUS PRIVILEGES.

The accompanying extract from the letter of a brother to the Agent of the Tract Society, ordering fifteen hundred copies of the "Appeal to the Friends of Equal Rights and Religious Freedom," for circulation in Pennsylvania, shows that the sufferings which our brethren endure are capable of being turned to good account, and that our German brethren are determined, according to their ability, to make the most of it. Who knows but what the providence of God may have given blindness to the legislators of our land, that by unjust and oppressive legislation, they might open an effectual way for us to present the truth of God's Sabbath, and restore it to its rightful observance? If so, what a calamity it would be to our cause to heal the matter slightly, by superficial legislation, with the idea of again appealing, after the most injurious features of the laws are repealed. P. S.

That tract is doing Sabbath-keepers much good service. It is well received wherever it is circulated; and scarcely fails, in a single instance, to convince the reader of the great injustice shown to our people, and makes many warm friends to our cause where least expected. I have, myself, circulated one hundred copies in this small community; and have heard of but one individual, that has perused it, who is so intolerant a bigot as not to accede to us our just rights, and concur in the necessity of extending full justice—equal privileges—to the observers of the seventh day. I overheard an old gentleman, an Englishman, and a high-churchman, in speaking on the subject of our "Appeal," remark, "They have right, reason, and Scripture on their side." Another I heard exclaim, "I was not aware that such injustice existed in our free country; what are our liberties, if these conscientious people can be oppressed for their religious belief? It is time to stop fighting, if we do not obtain more by it than power to oppress." Another expressed himself thus: "It is not only a shame, but a sin, both in the Government and in the churches of the land, that these Seventh-day Baptists are robbed of their rights and persecuted for their religious belief. Our ministers come, he continued, with the Bible, and tell us it is the Word of God; and while these Seventh-day Baptists honestly regard its injunctions, to the letter, and observe the day it commands, our ministers teach another word, and make the Bible a lie. It is, therefore, not only a shame, but a sin, to withhold equal privileges from these people, and oppress them in their undeniable rights." And an old deacon of a First-day Baptist church, known throughout the land for his piety and devotedness to the cause of the Redeemer, uttered his amazement to this effect: "Is it possible, my dear sir, that in this day, such intolerance and persecution exists in this land of civil and religious liberty? The Lord may suffer your people to be oppressed, to try them, but he will deliver them. I believe your brethren love the truth for the truth's sake, and the Lord has declared that the gates of hell shall not prevail against his truth. God will avenge his people." So becomingly and forcibly does the little tract advocate our cause, that a Quaker applied to me to procure twenty-five copies, for him, to circulate among his friends. Take courage.

While we have so powerful an advocate, and so efficient a weapon, to subdue opposition, is it not the duty of every Sabbath-keeper to exert every means within his reach to extend its circulation far and wide? and is not he who rests supinely, culpable in the extreme, for withholding his hands, when the cause of human rights and the cause of God demand his aid? He who neglects or refuses to improve this golden opportunity of commending God's unadulterated truth to public attention, in an acceptable form, and reclaiming our rights, and who will not put shoulder to shoulder with his brethren, at this crisis, can scarcely value his birth-right above that of Esau. Every man who is alive to his high prerogative as a freeman, and is "valiant for the truth," would esteem it a high privilege to have placed within his reach any available means to overcome opposition and persecution —if even he possess no generosity to aid others to their rights—the mere good of rendering an act of justice to his oppressed neighbor—self-defence, self-love, community of interest, and identity of brotherhood, should prompt every Sabbath-keeper to engage, and engage ardently, in this important undertaking.

This tract is, truly, a "winged messenger," which has access to every avenue and may penetrate every retreat throughout the land, to plead the cause of our injured rights, and promote the restoration of the inestimable privileges which have been wrested from us by unjust and iniquitous legislation. Let the denomination awake to their duty, put forth their strength, stand at their posts, and while they hold fast to the banner of the Bible, and war with the sword of the Spirit, and fling out, unsparingly, these missiles, more designed to win than injure, we cannot fail to work a revolution of public sentiment in regard to our rights. But as that revolution must be the result of a change, an entire change, of public prejudices, that change can only be effected by spreading information among the populace and enlightening the whole community on the subject of our wrongs. Neither must we weary in it. Changes in public sentiment, and especially in public prejudices, are rarely accomplished suddenly. It is the labor of years—of ages; but willing minds, stout hearts, and indomitable perseverance, will eventually achieve almost any thing and every thing. It is a well-known fact, that dripping, drop by drop, of water, will, in time, wear away the hardest rock; so may our little tract, if we keep drop, drop, dropping it, subdue the most unbending prejudices and opposition. If it appear, to many, too mighty and too slow an undertaking to expect to see it accomplished in one day, still we must not prove recreant to the cause of truth, but do our duty in our day, in faith, and labor diligently, if even it be for generations to come.

Letters for our Missionaries.—Packages of letters, newspapers, &c., will be forwarded to our missionary brethren, Carpenter and Wardner, by nearly every vessel which sails from New York for Canton. Persons wishing to communicate with them, should address their letters, pre-paid, to the care of Geo. B. Utter, New York.

BAPTIST MISSIONS.

The "Macedonian" for January presents a condensed view of the present condition of the American Baptist Missionary Union, and of its operations during the past year. From this we learn, that the Union has now under its care sixteen missions, with about one hundred and forty-five stations and out-stations. Seven of these missions are in Asia, one in Africa, three in Europe, and five among the American Indians. Connected with them, including those now in this country, and two on their way to China, there are one hundred and one missionaries and female assistant missionaries; and about one hundred and fifty native preachers and helpers. So that the whole number of laborers sustained by the Union is not less than two hundred and fifty.

To qualify the native preachers for their work, there are three schools in the Asiatic missions, embracing about forty pupils. Besides these, there are about fifty boarding and day schools, in which not less than two thousand children are within the influence of Christian instruction. Thirteen printing-presses are under the direction of the missions, multiplying copies of useful and religious works.

Connected with the various missions, there are about eighty-five churches, numbering not less than six thousand five hundred members. Many, once in these churches, have joined the departed missionaries, in the heavenly inheritance. Others are there who were led to Christ by the missionaries, but did not connect themselves with the churches. Six hundred and fifty individuals have publicly professed their faith in Christ during the year.

MISSIONARY OPERATIONS IN THE WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

To the churches and brethren of the Western Association:—

Dear Brethren,—At the Semi-Annual Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association, which held its session with the 1st Church in Alfred, on the 30th and 31st ult., I was appointed to lay before you the subject matter of the following resolution, accompanied with such remarks as the circumstances would seem to suggest:—

Whereas, difficulties have been experienced in our doings, so that our Missionary Operations have been in a fluctuating condition, therefore—

Resolved, That the following persons be Committees in the several churches where they reside, to make efforts to produce harmony of feeling and action among the brethren upon this subject, and also to obtain contributions, and to do whatever else they may be able to, to advance the cause of missions; and report at our next annual meeting.

The several committees are as follows:—

1st Alfred—N. V. Hull, Maxson Green, Hiram Cornwell, Maxson Stillman, Jr.
1st Genesee—John A Langworthy, J. L. Scott, J. Maxson.
Friendship—E. Lanphear, Dr. B. B. Babcock.
Clacence—L. Pratt, S. Hunt, J. Barrett.
Huyfield—A. A. F. Randolph, B. Stelle.
Persia—O. C. Babcock, D. C. Burdick.
2d Alfred—C. D. Langworthy, S. R. Smith.
Hebron—R. Babcock, E. S. Main.
Independence—S. S. Griswold, A. C. Burdick.
Scio—C. Rowley.
2d Genesee—S. B. Main.
3d Genesee—E. Crandall, H. P. Green.
Ulysses—R. Babcock, N. Hallett.
Pendleton—Leman Andrus.

Address to the Committee.

Dear Brethren,—You, with myself, are appointed a committee to execute an important trust. For a number of years past, our missionary concerns have been in a most deplorable condition. Among the causes that have contributed to this, probably none has been more potent than want of system. It is with this, as with all other matters, where we have not order we most certainly have confusion, and with this "every evil work." Now it is believed, that if this committee will interest themselves in the matter, and feel deeply the importance of the subject, they may, by the blessing of God, so arrange and systematize it that at least in this respect the evil may be cured. Brethren of the Committee! will you serve the cause of your Master in this thing? You are earnestly requested to accept of your appointment. You have been chosen because your brethren have confidence in you, that you love the cause, and will do all you can to advance it. Will you do it?

Address to the Members of the several Churches.

Beloved Brethren,—You are again called upon, in behalf of that cause which to you is dearer than all others—the cause of God. Brethren, do you love the blessed Jesus? I know you do. Do you love his religion—that religion by which you are saved? To this question you return the emphatic, Yes! Once more, do you love the souls of your fellow men? To this you also respond in the affirmative. In view of this, I inquire, Has God ordained any other method for the salvation of their souls than that which has operated to the salvation of your own, namely, the preaching of the gospel? If not, then we ask you, in all earnestness, Will you not throw aside all and every excuse, and respond to this call, and aid in sending the gospel to the destitute? A number of ministers in the Association have responded to the call made by their brethren at the Association in June last, and have entered the field, expecting to live upon your liberality. They set no price upon their labor. They expect to receive for their temporal reward only the contributions you see fit to remit. And now we leave the matter with you, to answer to God and your own consciences.

N. V. HULL, Committee.

Alfred, Jan. 3d, 1847.

Change of Opinion.—The Alliance and Visitor says that Dr. Arnoldi, the Archbishop of Treves, so famous for his part in the "holy-coat" affair, has addressed a circular to all the ecclesiastics of his diocese, recommending them in the most pressing terms, to employ all their influence to discourage the faithful from all further pilgrimage to Treves, and stating that such demonstrations, far from being acts of piety, were rather prompted by vanity, savoring of superstition. The use which Ronge has made of the holy coat, has taught the archbishop a profitable lesson. A few more such coats will go far towards making this infallible church of Rome change its coat.

The Nestorians.—The Missionary Herald for the present month speaks thus of the work of the Lord among these people: "Seldom is it the privilege of the Christian to dwell upon occurrences of such present interest and such prospective importance. In the midst of the universal dearth of revivals at home, in our own country, some of the missions have enjoyed seasons of refreshing, for which they nor we can be sufficiently grateful. To say nothing of other fields, the work of grace among the Nestorians stands before the world as having in some respects no parallel in the history of modern missions."

The Choctaw Indians.—At a recent missionary meeting in Boston, Dr. Anderson, Secretary of the American Board, stated that 218 members had been admitted to the Choctaw churches as a result of the revivals of the past year. And it was worthy of note, as an example to their neighbors, that their national councils and courts were daily opened with prayer by members; thus, in the most open and becoming manner, recognizing the supreme Ruler and Judge. This people, moreover, were now contributing more, in proportion to their numbers, for common schools, than any one of the United States!

New York Legislature.—This body has been principally occupied thus far in preparing for business. The different parts of the Governor's Message have been referred to the appropriate committees. Several portions of the New Constitution have been referred to select committees. The anti-rent petitions on file were referred to a select committee. A bill has been passed to provide for the register of births, marriages, and deaths. Petitions have been received to subject New York City to the License Law. We shall keep an eye open to the proceedings of the Legislature, and inform our readers of whatever is particularly noteworthy.

Important Decision.—We learn from the Columbus papers that the Supreme Court of Ohio, among other decisions, have decided adverse to the City of Cincinnati in what has been called the Jew case. The Court declare "the ordinance of the Cincinnati Council, prohibiting trading, bartering and selling on Sunday, void as to those who conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath.

The New Pope and the Jews.—"Der Jude" states that Baron Rothschild had an audience of three-quarters of an hour's duration with the new Pope, who gave him the assurance that he would take his Jewish subjects under his special protection.

Foreign News.—By the arrival at New York of the packet-ship Rochester, two days later intelligence from England has been received. The news is not important, but, such as it is, favorable to this country. There had been a slight rise in wheat, while other grains remained firm.

New Agent.—Bro. Thomas E. Babcock having removed to Richburg, Allegany Co. N. Y., is requested to act as agent for the Recorder in that vicinity.

Missionaries on their Way.—The Christian Secretary publishes a letter from Rev. E. N. Jenks, one of the missionaries of the American Baptist Missionary Union, who sailed for China in the ship Cohota, with Rev. Mr. Dean, and others. The letter is dated in the Indian Ocean, Sept. 8, lat. 28, lon. 101, after they had been seventy-seven days at sea. The Hon. A. H. Everett, U. S. Minister to China, is among the passengers. They have all enjoyed good health, with the exception of the usual amount of sea sickness. Of the manner of passing away their time at sea, Mr. J. says:—

"Our social evenings afford us much enjoyment. Mr. Everett is a valuable acquisition to our little party; his literary attainments and his general knowledge of the world and its different languages, customs and political institutions, all making his conversation very entertaining and instructive. At our request he commonly delivers a literary address of some kind every week, generally on Wednesday evening. His first address was on the 4th of July, on the early history, and the political institutions of our country. He has since addressed us twice on the French Revolution, on the Bible, its Philosophy, Poetry, and History, on English and American Literature, &c. &c. Besides these addresses, we have stated meetings each week, for conversation on some important moral question. Our time has been otherwise employed chiefly in the study of the Chinese language. We have learned the 214 Radicals, which may be called the alphabet of the language, though in a very different sense from the English alphabet, and some seven or eight hundred words besides, together with a few common phrases. We have studied it enough to see how hard it is, but are not dismayed; on the contrary, we are inclined to think its difficulties may have been overrated."

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the SENATE, on Monday of last week, bills were reported for the temporary increase of the military force, and also to authorize the appointment of a Lieutenant General. On Tuesday and Wednesday, little else was done than to hear the announcement of the death of Senator Pennybacker, of Virginia, and attend his funeral. On Thursday and Friday, the bills in relation to the military and a Lieutenant General, were under consideration, together with several proposed amendments, granting sections of land to each person serving through the war, &c. The Lieut. General Bill was laid on the table by a vote of 28 to 21.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, the principal subject of discussion was the bill to establish a Territorial Government in Oregon. It was determined, after considerable debate, that all persons shall be allowed to vote at the first election, who have declared on oath their intention to become citizens, and have sworn to support the Constitution of the United States. An amendment was adopted, limiting the pay of the Delegate to Congress to $2,000 per annum, and requiring that he should be a citizen of the Territory, and serve for the session only for which he shall be elected. Also an amendment, prohibiting all banking in the Territory. But the most difficult question to settle in connection with this subject, was about the prohibition of slavery in the Territory. It was debated with much warmth, in the course of which several representatives from the South showed no little sensitiveness upon this point. The bill was finally passed on Saturday. A bill was introduced by Mr. Seaman, of New York City, to prevent the importation of paupers and criminals from foreign countries, which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The heavy appropriation bills are now all before Congress—the Committee of Ways and Means having reported the Loan and Treasury Note bill, and the bill for the Civil and Diplomatic expences of the General Government. The bills already reported amount to the following sums:

Army	$ 6,813,373
Volunteer	17,932,331
Navy	8,920,204
Deficiencies for volunteers	4,793,000
Civil and Diplomatic (est)	6,044,399
Loan and Treasury Note bill	23,000,000
Total	$67,503,307
Additional Indian bill	$1,179,324
Fortifications	1,672,165
Pensions	2,102,690
Interest	1,408,344
Total	$73,865,830

NEWS FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.—Various exciting and conflicting reports from the seat of war have reached New York within a week past. It was first rumored that Santa Anna had advanced upon Saltillo with a force of 30,000 men, intending to fall upon and overpower Gen. Worth at that post, or to intercept and roughly handle some of the attachments on their way to reinforce him. Later news renders it probable that the danger of an attack upon Saltillo was not so imminent as at first supposed. The following items embrace the principal news which can be relied upon:—

The whole valley of the Rio Grande was in a state of great ferment, apprehensions of attacks being entertained at Camargo, Matamoros, and other points, from the Rancheros under Canales. At Matamoros, Col. Clark had called on the citizens to enrol themselves for service; and at Brazos, General Jessup had done the same thing. Both points were sadly deficient in arms and men. It was thought that Canales had 2,000 men.

Official Mexican accounts have been received of events at Los Angelos, on the Pacific. In the action of the 24th Sept. at that place, 27 Americans were made prisoners, and 3 wounded; one Mexican was killed, but no Americans. The conquerors then laid siege to the City of Angels, and on the 30th of September the town capitulated to Flores. The terms of surrender are drawn up with as much deliberation as those at Monterey, and are detailed at length in the New Orleans papers.

On the 20th December, Commodore Perry, with several vessels, took possession of Laguna, and destroyed all the enemy's guns and munitions of war found in the forts and the town.

Com. Sands, with two vessels, was left in charge off Alvarado.

The Mississippi captured a Mexican schooner called the Amelia, and sent her to New Orleans for sale.

Purser Crosby was killed by falling from aloft on board the Vixen.

Gen. Santa Anna is declared by the new Congress duly elected President of the Republic of Mexico.

A letter in the Picayune, dated Tampico, 23d Dec. from a reliable source, confirms the report that the Mexican Congress have decided that the war shall not cease. Nor will they receive commissioners to treat for peace until every hostile foot has left the soil of Mexico, and every s[illegible]hip that lines the coast withdraws. They have [illegible]rther resolved that they will accept no foreign interv[illegible]ention whatever to bring about a peace. This con[illegible]ms previous statements, of the truth of which doub[illegible] have been expressed in certain quarters.

Five Universities in England rec[illegible]ive each a copy of every work entered for a cop[illegible]y-right. A larger number of libraries once enjoye[illegible] this privilege, but it was found to be a burden to b[illegible] required to find room for so many books that were useless to the Institutions. The Bodleian Library has half a million of volumes. The British Museum have ordered the purchase of every American book, including pamphlets, sermons, school-books, &c.

FROM HONDURAS.—By the arrival of the brig Montserrat, Captain Gray, from Balize, we have papers of that place to the 19th of Dec. Great destruction of property, and it was supposed loss of life, had occurred to the southward of that place, from the recent gales. The rivers had been uncommonly high. At Sitee, the river had risen thirty feet, covering the plantations and drowning stock. Houses, doreys, trees, &c. were swept off by the torrent, and the rise of the waters was so sudden that many persons found great difficulty in making their escape to the highlands.

The Observer of the 12th contains the following from Yucatan: A war has broken out between Merida and Campeachy, in consequence of the former proclaiming in favor of Mexico, and the latter for the United States. The people of Campeachy wish to depose the Governor of Merida, and establish the seat of Government in their own city.

Active hostilities have commenced in the vicinity of Sisal, and several lives have been lost, but the particulars have not reached here. Campeachy has raised 2000 men, and the army is daily increasing; 800 soldiers are marching to join them from Peto, (an Indian village 30 leagues from Bacalar,) under the command of Gen. Benito Pacheco, a most desperate man and outlaw.

The towns of Tisimin, Valladolid, Tyesuco and Peto have also proclaimed in favor of the United States; and Tiscobl, Txeas, Paduke, and Saban, in favor of Mexico. Bacalar remains neutral at present, but the people are making great preparations, mounting cannon on the old fort, enrolling volunteers, &c. Having made no demonstration as yet, they will in all probability join whichever appears to be the strongest party.

WHALERS.—News was received at New London on Monday from two hundred whale ships in the Pacific Ocean. The accounts from Honolulu to Oct. 10, state that the Conohassett, of Sag Harbor, was wrecked on the reef which extends around Pell's Island, about 17 miles from where the Holder Borden was lost in 1844. Capt. Worth and crew had arrived at Honolulu. The vessel was insured for $30,000. She had no oil on board. The ship Baltic of Fairhaven was wrecked on Bhering's Island, June 15. She had on board 2,000 bbls. whale oil, of which 900 were saved. Capt. Butler and crew were at H. The ship Columbia of New London was wrecked on Sydenham's Island, one of King Mill's Group, Jan. 6, and was a total loss. She had on board 27,000 bbls. oil. Capt. Kelly and crew saved. The bark Elizabeth of Freetown was burned while lying at anchor at the Fajee Islands in February last; it is supposed that the fire was set in the hold by some of the crew.

A FREE PRESS AT THE CAPITOL.—At a meeting of the City Council at Georgetown, D. C. Jan. 8, Mr. Jones offered the following resolution, which was read and adopted:—

"Whereas, it having been represented to the Corporation that an 'Abolition Newspaper' has recently been established in the City of Washington, and its first number having actually appeared in that city, and,

"Whereas, the publication and distribution of such a paper within our midst would undoubtedly be calculated to arouse the worst feelings of our peaceful population and its vicinity, and thereby tend very greatly to endanger the peace and harmony of the community; therefore,

"Be it Resolved, That a Select Committee of three be appointed by the Chair, whose duty it shall be to inquire into the propriety of Legislative action upon the part of this Corporation in the matter set forth in the preamble, and that they report their deliberations at as early a day as practicable."

SUMMARY.

Gov. Smith, of Virginia, in his message to the Legislature, proposes the passage of a law providing that each county, at the next election, shall have the right to vote upon the question of removing the free negroes within their respective limits beyond the Commonwealth. The whole free negro population of the State amounts to 49,842 souls, and the recommendation has caused much comment in the journals of that State.

Charles Dunkin Wake, the British Consul for North and South Carolina, has notified all British subjects in these States, in conformity to instructions from his government, that all British functionaries, residing in slaveholding countries, are prohibited from administering upon the estates of deceased persons in cases in which slaves form part of the property of the deceased. This is said to be one of Lord Palmerston's new projects to avoid the recognition of slaves as property when held by British subjects.

By recent publications in the Courrier des Etats Unis, it is rendered indubitable that a general system of deporting to this Country their criminals, paupers and vagrants, but especially those unable to earn a subsistence, has been entered upon by the cities and villages of Germany, and that the cargoes of human wretchedness and destitution which have recently been landed on our shores are a part of the fruits of this nefarious and cowardly business.

A very melancholy accident occurred at Sheboygan on the 22d ult. Mrs. Ormsbee, returning from the funeral of Mrs. J. L. Moore, was thrown to the ground by the upsetting of a wagon, and her neck broken by the fall. She died in 10 or 15 minutes. Mrs. Ormsbee was the daughter of Judge Strong of Vermont, and the sister of Mr. John Strong of Milwaukie and Moses M. Strong of Mineral Point.

The Milwaukie Sentinel says that with a view of founding a Literary Institution in Wisconsin, Mr. Amos A. Lawrence, of Boston, has offered to give the sum of twenty thousand dollars, in money provided a like amount, in lands or money, be contributed there. The necessary amount will doubtless be immediately raised, and the Institution will be called "The Lawrence Institute."

William S. Campbell, a fur merchant in Water-st., while in the third loft of his store, fell through the opening through which goods [illegible]re drawn up. He alighted on his feet, on the first floor, breaking both ankles very badly, the bones b[illegible]eing driven through the flesh. It is remarkable t[illegible]hat, although a very heavy man, he is conscious o[illegible] having received no internal injury from the fall.

We learn from the Providence Transcript of Friday, that during the severe storm on Thursday night, the ship Rhode Island, lying at Bristol, was torn from her moorings at the wharf, and driven ashore, high and dry, at the head of the harbor. She was laden with barges for the service in Mexico. It is believed that she cannot be got off until her cargo is discharged.

Senator Pennybacker, of Virginia, died at Washington, Jan. 11, of a complaint of the bowels. Though he had been but a short time in the Senate, he had received the respect of his colleagues, by whom his loss will be felt.

The American Bible Society issued last month 43,401 copies of Bibles and Testaments, making the issues for nine months 504,509. The receipts of the month were $17,112—making during the last nine months $139,217—less than last year by about $6,000.

The sheriff of Columbia County attempted to serve a process upon a man named Finkle, in the town of Ancram, recently a squatter upon the Livingston estate, and now a squatter upon the lands of Mr. Job S. Tanner. Finkle collected a party of abuut seventy, and succeeded in preventing the Sheriff from discharging his duty.

Miss Louisa West, a girl fifteen years of age, a resident of Georgetown, (Ky.) committed to memory accurately, the whole New Testament in six weeks, at the same time attending to her domestic duties.

John Quincy Adams, we are rejoiced to hear, is fast regaining his health. The Boston Courier says the venerable statesman attended church on Sunday, 10th, looking apparently as well as he has for the last four or five years.

The damage occasioned by the recent freshet in the Scioto, Miami and Mad rivers (O.) is set down at about two millions of dollars. Over one million of bushels of corn have been swept away from the Sciota valley alone. The whole country was inundated.

Nearly one-seventh of the entire surface of Ireland is occupied with bog; and it has been estimated that the total amount of turf fuel is equivalent in power to above 470,000,000 tons of coal, which, at 12s. per ton, is worth £280,000,000 sterling.

Silsbee, the comedian, in one of his farces, says that the United States are bounded on the North by the aurora borealis, on the East by the rising sun, on the West by the horizon, and on the South as far as we choose to go.

On the night of the 16th, one of the small schooners captured at Tampico, being on her way to Anton Lizardo from that place, under command of Lieut. Winslow, was wrecked on Green Island shoal during a Norther—crew saved.

There were built in the city of Washington, D. C. during the last year, 208 dwellings—86 brick and 122 wooden—16 shops, and 17 additions. The total number of dwellings in Washington is 5,865.

Father De Smett, the pious Roman Catholic missionary, has arrived safe at St. Louis, from a trip to Oregon, in good health and spirits. He came down the Missouri river 2,000 miles in an open skiff.

The New York Supreme Court has decided that strong beer is spiritous liquor, and that an action lies for vending it.

A merchant of Cincinnati, seeing a lady come into his store, mistook her for a notorious female who had been convicted of passing counterfeit money, and ordered her out of doors. Suit was brought against him, and he was mulcted in the sum of $380; for the lady who was thus rudely treated, was one of the most respectable women of Cincinnati.

It is stated that the area of coal beds in the United States is equal to 750,000 square miles, the average depth of which is 40 feet, which includes only the good, merchantable article. This enormous quantity is sufficient to supply the present rate of consumption for a period not less than two hundred thousand years.

The Memorial Bordelais says, that near St. Sevier, there lives an old soldier, with a false arm, a glass eye, a complete set of false teeth, a nose of silver covered with a substance resembling flesh, and a silver plate replacing part of his skull.

It has been asserted in an English publication, that Glasgow, with a population of 250,000, expends $6,000,000 annually for intoxicating drinks, or twenty-four dollars for each inhabitant!

The German farmers in Pennsylvania say this is the famous "nineteenth year," (the last being in 1827,) which, while it admits of ploughing all winter, has a protracted spring. In Maryland the trees are budding, birds singing, et cetera.

The deepest coal mine in Pennsylvania is the Salem vein, at Pottsville, Pa., which is now worked at a depth of 900 feet below the level of the surface seams.

Dr. Amos A. Mann, of Mercer, Me., has been committed to jail, to await his trial, on a charge of refusing to marry, after having promised.

An important canal has been opened in Bavaria, by which the Rhine and Danube, and consequently the Black and North seas, are united.

Thomas Finnegan has been condemned to the State Prison for five years, for the crime of kidnapping free citizens of color from Pennsylvania.

An account is given in a French journal of a gentleman committing suicide by cramming his ears full of gun-cotton, and igniting it with a cigar.

About 10 o'clock on Saturday evening, Jan. 10, a sudden and tremendous gale passed through the lower portion of Troy, blowing down the west wall of the Clinton Foundry, situated a few rods below the Troy Railroad dépôt, on the Troy and Greenbush Railroad, sweeping away some ten or fifteen feet of the roof of the building on the west side, killing three of the workmen engaged in the establishment at the time, and badly injuring several others.

By the arrival of the brig Rufus Saule, Capt. Dillingham, from Neuvitas, we learn that the ship Creole, Capt. Kijal, of and for New Orleans from Bordeaux, was wrecked in the gale of the 19th ult. about six miles east of Neuvitas, and that the captain and forty-five passengers were lost. Of one large family on board a little girl fourteen years of age only was saved. The body of one woman was found with two dead infants clasped closely to her breast.

On the evening of the 14th inst., a disastrous explosion occurred on the Reading railroad, ten miles from Philadelphia. A locomotive, drawing a train of empty cars, exploded, killing seven persons. One body was thrown six hundred yards, and mangled limbs were thrown in every direction. Every pane of glass in a house near by was broken. The report was heard four miles distant.

The bill for the relief of the widow of Alexander Hamilton, which passed the U. S. Senate a few days since, 26 to 12, provides for the payment of $20,000 to her from the national Treasury, whenever she shall deliver to the Librarian of Congress 1000 copies of the five volumes which she proposed to publish of the writings of Gen. Hamilton, together with the entire manuscripts of the same, to be deposited and remain forever in the archives of the government.

Another suicide occurred at Washington on Thursday afternoon. A Dr. Wickham, a brother-in-law of the Hon. Watkins Leigh, of Virginia, shot himself through the head at the pistol gallery. He had come to Washington as an applicant for the place of Surgeon in the Virginia regiment of volunteers, and being disappointed, thus terminated his life. This is the second suicide which has been committed there, in the same way, within two or three weeks.

It is the intention of the Directors of the Utica and Schenectady Railway, when the new superstructure is completed, to make four hours the ordinary running time between Albany and Utica. They also propose to run one train daily at a much greater speed. The day, we hope, is not far distant, when the whole distance from Albany to Buffalo will be accomplished in 12 hours, at a fare of $6.

In the conservatory of Col. J. Davis of Worcester, Mass., is an orange tree about six feet high and well proportioned, and branching out into a beautiful head. It bears at present 28 oranges, 22 of them having already assumed the full court costume of their golden maturity. One of the largest measures 14 inches in circumference.

Cook's woolen mills, in Preston, Conn., took fire on Friday evening, and burned to the ground. The fire took in the second loft, by what means is unknown, but when discovered it had gained too much headway to be got under. Nothing was saved from the mills. Estimated loss $7000.

It is said that a retreat for disabled clergymen is about to be established in the diocese of Maryland, near Georgetown, District of Columbia, for the Protestant Episcopal Church. A suitable property has been purchased, as we are informed, and active measures are in progress to consummate the plan at an early period.

News has been received from Col. Stevenson's "California Expedition." The four ships arrived at Rio Janeiro about the 20th of November. One Volunteer had died, and the others were generally well.

Calvin Russ has been for nearly a fortnight on trial before the Court of Oyer and Terminer, in this city, charged with the murder of his wife. On Friday last the Jury pronounced the fatal verdict of guilty. He will be hung on the 12th day of March.

John Davis, LL. D, and for many years Judge of the U. S. District Court, died suddenly at his residence in Boston on Friday morning last, in the 87th year of his age.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

PROSPECTUS OF
THE NATIONAL ERA,
To be published at
THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The cause of Human Freedom calls for the establishment at the seat of the National Government of a Newspaper devoted to the support of its claims.

Circumstances and the present state of Public Sentiment are peculiarly propitious to such an undertaking.

The publication of an Anti-Slavery paper entitled "The National Era," will be accordingly commenced in the City of Washington, District of Columbia, on the first of January, 1847.

It will be edited by G. BAILEY, Jr., assisted by A. A. Phelps, and J. G. Whittier, Corresponding Editors. While due attention will be paid to current events, Congressional Proceedings, General Politics and Literature, the great aim of the paper will be a complete discussion of the Question of Slavery, and an exhibition of the duties of the Citizen in relation to it—especially will it explain and advocate the leading principles and measures of the Liberty Party—seeking to do this, not in the spirit of Party, but in the love of Truth—not for the triumph of Party, but for the establishment of Truth.

The journal will be printed weekly, on a mammoth sheet, of the finest quality, in handsome type, at the rate of Two Dollars a year, always in advance. This will be invariably adhered to.

All necessary arrangements have been made for giving stability to this important enterprise, and it is hoped that it may command the warm sympathy and prompt support of the friends of Liberty throughout the country.

Subscriptions may be forwarded to William Harned, No. 5 Spruce-st., New York City, or to the Publisher of the National Era, Washington.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

FLOWERS.

Ye are the Scriptures of the earth,
Sweet flowers, fair and frail;
A sermon speaks in every bud
That woos the summer gale.

Ye lift your heads at early morn,
To greet the sunny ray,
And cast your fragrance forth to praise
The Lord of night and day.

Sown in the damp and cheerless earth,
Ye slumber for a while,
Then waken into glorious life,
And bid creation smile.

Thus, when within the darksome tomb
Our mortal frame shall lie,
The soul, freed from the bonds of sin,
Shall join the choir on high.

THE ELECTRICAL EEL.

This species is common in South America. It is from three to five feet in length, and ten or twelve inches in circumference in the broadest part of the body, and has the capability of swimming backward as well as forward.

The electrical shock is conveyed either through the hand, or any metallic conductor which touches the fish; and a stroke of one of the largest kind, if properly applied, would prove instant death even to the human species. This extraordinary power is given to this fish, not only for defence, but subsistence. For whenever small fishes or worms are thrown into the water, they are first struck dead by the electric power of the animal, and afterwards swallowed by him.

Mr. Humbolt gives an interesting account of the manner in which they catch these creatures, by what they call "fishing with horses." After having scoured the savannah, and caught about thirty wild horses and mules, they drove them into the pool in which were the electrical eels. "The extraordinary noise caused by the horses' hoofs makes the fish issue from the mud, and excites them to combat. These yellowish and livid eels resemble large aquatic serpents, swim on the surface of the water, and crowd under the bellies of the horses and mules. A contest between animals of so different an organization furnishes a very striking spectacle. The Indians, provided with harpoons and long slender reeds, surround the pool closely; and some climb upon the treess the branches of which extend horizontally over the surface of the water. By their wild cries, and the length of their reeds, they prevent the horses from running away, and reaching the bank of the pool. The eels, stunned by the noise, defend themselves by the repeated discharge of their electric batteries. During a long time they seem to prove victorious. Several horses sink beneath the violence of the invisible strokes, which they receive from all sides in organs the most essential to life; and, stunned by the force and frequency of the shocks, disappear under the water. Others panting, with mane erect, and haggard eyes expressing anguish, raise themselves, and endeavor to flee the storm by which they are overtaken. They are driven back by the Indians into the middle of the water; but a small number succeed in eluding the active vigilance of the fishermen. These regain the shore, stumbling at every step, and stretch themselves on the sand, exhausted with fatigue, and their limbs benumbed by the electric shocks of the Gymnoti. In less than five minutes two horses were drowned. The horses were probably not killed, but only stunned. They were drowned from the impossibility of rising, amid the prolonged struggle between the other horses and the eels.

"We had little doubt that the fishing would terminate by killing successively all the animals engaged; but by degrees the wearied Gymnoti disappeared. They require a long rest, and abundant nourishment, to repair what they have lost of galvanic force. The mules and horses appear less frightened; their manes are no longer bristled, their eyes express less dread. The Gymnoti approach timidly the edge of the marsh, where they are taken by means of small harpoons fastened to long cords. When the cords are very dry, the Indians feel no shock on raising the fish into the air. In a few minutes we had five large eels, the greater part of which were but slightly wounded."

RUSSIAN CUSTOMS.

In this desolate region I saw old men with grey hair and ruddy faces, who had lived through sixty dark winters and as many shadeless summers, and seemed contented, if not happy. But utter forgetfulness seems to be their highest pleasure. When the Russian peasant has earned enough to afford the luxury, he goes to town when all the church bells are ringing, to hail some saint's day; he solemnly attends the ceremony of worship, and goes through all the required forms of kneeling, prostration, and making signs of the cross. This done, he hastens to the brandy shop, (and sometimes the priest goes with him,) there he wastes no time, but pulls out his money, and buys as much brandy as he can afford. He does not toy with his liquor, but swallows it at once, and in a few minutes falls senseless upon the floor. The tavern keeper takes his satisfied customer by the heels and draws him out into the street there to lie until the next morning. Frequently as we entered a town after the celebration of some festival, we saw a score of the brandy drinkers lying by the side of the road.

Even love in this country seems to have caught some frost from the climate. We continued on as far as Ustjug-Weliki, and here we found an amusing instance of national taste. In the market-place stood a long row of stout, honest-looking, ruddy-cheeked peasant girls, each with a basket upon her arm. They had come up the river to sell themselves! It was a market for wives, with their dowries in their baskets! The young men of Ustjug-Weliki walked along the tempting line of faces, in a very apathetic way, and seemed to be quite as earnest in peeping into the baskets, as looking on the faces of these willing girls. I and my companion made an apprisal of the charms thus freely exhibited, and I think we noticed two or three that might have served us as excellent wives, had our circumstances allowed of such a speculation. Positively, there was a business like arrangment of matrimony, as contrasted with the same thing done in our fashionable circle, in such an indirect, round-about and hypocritical style. [Work of a late Traveler.

AGE OF TREES.

A person who has been engaged for a long series of years in prosecuting the lumber business, on the upper tributaries of the Penobscot, assures us that he has frequently felled trees which, every grain to indicate a year's growth, were six hundred years old. Of this we have no doubt. Some of the cedars of Mount Lebanon measured in 1660 by Maundrell and Pocock, were found to be 800 years old. In Fontaine Abbey, in the county of York, there are yew trees that have survived twelve centuries, and those in Crowhurst church yard are fourteen hundred years old. One yew tree in Fotherengil, Scotland, is two thousand six hundred; one in Braburn, in the county of Kent, three thousand. The cypress at Taxadium, in South America, described by the same travelers, is 117 feet 10 inches in circumference, and supposed by them to be upwards of 5150 years old. Near the ruins of Hiliopolis, in Egypt, there is a tree which, according to tradition, was standing before the visit of Joseph and Mary. It is said that these illustrious personages sat under its shadow and drank water from a neighboring well.

In America, upwards of one hundred and forty different trees reach the altitude of thirty feet and upwards; in Europe, only thirty-seven grow to this height. Of these, only eighteen enter into the composition of forests; and seven only are employed for domestic or maratime purposes. Of the oak, botanists enumerate forty-two species as indigenous to America; seventeen of the pine, and eight of the maple. Of the walnut, a very useful and valuable tree, we have eleven species. Of this wood, not a single species is indigenous to Europe; the variety ordinarily cultivated there, being derived from Persia. The pine is, in the Eastern States, the tree on which our lumbermen placc the greatest value. For boards, planks, timber, shingles, clap-boards, &c. &c., it is unequaled by any other tree of the forest.

GENIUS AND COLD WATER.

Men of genius are always unfortunately addicted to drinking. Nature, as she has gifted them with greater powers than their fellows, seems also to have mingled with their cup of life more bitterness. There is a melancholy, which is apt to come like a cloud over the imaginations of such characters. Their minds possess a susceptibility and delicacy of structure, which unfit them for the gross atmosphere of human nature; wherefore, high talent has always been distinguished for sadness and gloom. Genius lives in a world of its own; it is the essence of a superior nature, the lofty imaginings of the mind, clothed with a more spiritual and refined verdure. Few men, endowed with such faculties, enjoy the ordinary happiness of humanity. The stream of their lives runs harsh and broken. Melancholy thoughts sweep perpetually across their souls, and if those be heightened by misfortune, they are plunged in the deepest misery.

To relieve these feelings, many plans have been adopted. Dr. Johnson fled for years to wine under his habitual gloom. He found that the pangs were removed while its immediate influence lasted, but he also found that they returned with double force when that influence passed away. He saw the dangerous precipice on which he stood, and by an unusual effort of volition, gave it over. In its stead he substituted tea; and to this milder stimulant had recourse in his melancholy. Voltaire and Fontenelle, for the same purpose, used coffee. The excitements of Newton and Hobbes were in the fumes of tobacco; while Demosthenes and Haller were sufficiently stimulated by drinking freely of cold water. Such are the differences of constitutions.

AN ENTHUSIAST.

We read in a Belgian journal—'The sale of the gallery of paintings of M. Van N. of Brussels, who died in the course of the last month, is advertised. This celebrated amateur not only devoted his life, but sacrificed the whole of his fortune, which originally produced him a revenue of four hundred thousand francs a year, to his passion for possessing the masterpieces of the great Flemish artists. Reduced by this to the want of the necessaries of life, he could not be induced to part with one of his cherished treasures. At last, an old servant, who continued to serve him without wages, converted the gallery into a source for the maintainance of his master and himself, by applying the gratuities given him for showing the splendid collection to visitors, in purchasing food for them both. A few years ago, the faithful and affectionate old servant died, and M. Van N., hopeless of finding another upon the same terms, took the office upon himself. When visitors came to view the gallery, he put on the old livery, and attended them through it, displaying a critical acquaintance with the merits of each picture that delighted all, and astonished those who were able to appreciate his erudition. Sometimes the visitors, supposing him to be really the servant, would make the master the subject of sarcastic observations, some calling him an eccentric fool, and others, a madman, and wondering that his friends did not have him declared a lunatic. All this he listened to either with perfect indifference, or making palliating excuses, as his old servant used to do, and, when their curiosity was satisfied, holding out his hand for the accustomed fee.'

GIVING UP SELLING LIQUOR.

Dr. Nott says, in the Enquirer, that during the cholera in New York, a man who had been a grocer, came into the office of a gentleman who had made an address on temperance, with whom he was acquainted, and said with much agitation, "I am going to givo up selling liquor." "Why?" "Because there came into my store this morning, at a very early hour, a young man, who looked up to the brandy bottle which stood upon the shelf, and exclaimed with a fearful oath, 'COME DOWN! COME DOWN!—you killed my grandfather—you killed my father—come down now and kill me!'

"What that young man said was but too true. His grandfather died a drunkard, with liquor obtained at my store. Both drank from the same bottle, and both were dead; both the grandfather and the father; and now the son had come to claim the sad privilege of drinking from the same bottle and dying as his grandfather had died. I looked at the young man—I thought of the past—and it seemed as if the way to Hell from my store was very short—that I could, from behind the counter where I stood, look quite into it. I felt that the business of selling liquor was a bad business, and I made up my mind to quit it."

THE FIRST TEA DRINKING.—A Carlisle (England) Journal says:—The following well-authenticated account of the first pound of tea which reached the primitive neighborhood of Cotherston, is given by the grand daughter of the recipient, Mr. James Raine, of London, who died at the age of one hundred years, about thirty years ago. Mr. Raine, a comfortable farmer, had married a wife of equal respectability from London; and, as a wedding present, the lady's friends sent them a pound of tea, and a new brass kettle from London, tea being then only just introduced in Cockaigne, with a recipe for its use, namely: "That it be boiled in cream and sugar." The tea was thus duly poured into a new kettle, and a goodly portion of sugar and cream added, to the delight of a party of friends who had met to celebrate the wedding. After this process, the contents, leaves included, were put into a large earthen bowl, and placed on the middle of a table, and the assembled guests, each provided with a spoon, set to work to sip this new beverage, which, on account of its novelty, we opine, more than its excellence, was duly consumed, tea leaves and all.

A DREADFUL SCENE.—The Natchez Courier, in giving an account of the sufferings of the wounded by the collision of the steamers Maria and Sultana, says:—"One man would pray to the doctor to cut his throat, another that he might be pierced to the heart and relieved of his excruciating pain, another that he might be dispatched in any way to quell the incalculable agony that was consuming him. Shrieks, groans, sobs, most piercing, agonizing howls, were heard on every hand, from the 22 sufferers to whom he was ministering. 'Will I live, Doctor?' said one man, from whom nearly all the skin was pealed. 'You will die, sir.' 'It is perhaps my duty to tell you that you will die in an hour.' 'Well, I am sorry for it,' said he, 'for I have a wife, an aged mother, and several children.' In an hour he was dead; and such were the sufferings of every one of the poor victims of a wrath more destructive, more to be dreaded, than ten thousand cannon."

NEXT YEAR.—The Portsmouth Journal says that the observer of signs may look upon 1847 with a fearful face. The year begins with Friday—that very unlucky day. The 4th of July comes on Sunday—very unlucky. For the first time in the "recollection of the oldest inhabitant" there will be no full moon this year in the month of February—unlucky month. Our national political day begins on Sunday, the 4th of March—unlucky day. There will be no eclipse visible in the year—unlucky for the star-gazers. But as an offset against the whole, January is to be blessed with two full moons and March with a like number—this will be lucky, and will perhaps throw light enough over the dark features of the year to overcome all evil prognostications.

BATTLE OF THE BEES.—On Thursday afternoon, the 18th, a farmer in the neighborhood of Twyn Barlwin Mountain, was watching his flocks, when suddenly his attention was attracted by a buzzing noise, and a cloud of insects almost darkened the air. Upon closer examination he found the multitude to be engaged in serious warfare, which lasted a considerable time, until heaps of the vanquished covered the ground, some without heads, others minus their wings, and others completely separated into two parts. They proved to be different sorts of the bumblebee and the honey-bee. A friend assured me that he scraped together three or four bushels with his foot, and many persons carried away the slain in basketfulls, to show to their friends the result of this unaccountable warfare.

WALNUTS.—It has been ascertained that the shag-bark walnut may be sufficiently engrafted, and that the engrafted trees are much the surest bearers. It is probable that the hickory, or shag-bark, would do well engrafted on the pignut. If it should, the quantity raised might be greatly increased, and the quality much improved. The Maderia nut, which is usually sold at the shops under the name of the English walnut, at twelve and a half to sixteen cents per pound, may be cultivated here without difficulty, and is very productive. In the vicinity of New York there is a tree which has produced in a single year as many as sold in the market for $200. We have no doubt that it might be engrafted on the butternut or walnut with perfect success.

LIME.—It is stated in the American Agriculturist, that one farmer saved his crop of clover from destruction by the slug or small snail, on land bearing a wheat crop, by a slight dressing of powdered lime, scattered through a clover-seed machine, late in the evening, when the insects were busy at their work. These insects, in some regions, are very troublesome, often perpetrating much damage to the crops, especially in the spring. If lime is a preventative, the fact deserves to be extensively known. Salt is sometimes used successfully in arresting their ravages, and so, we are informed, is sulphur.

TO CURE HAMS.—The Burlington Gazette publishes the famous Newbold receipt for curing hams. The old gentleman was very choice of his secret, and preserved it until the day of his death. After that event, the receipt was found hid away in a hole in the cellar wall. Here it is:

Take 7 lbs. coarse salt; 5 lbs. brown sugar; 2 oz. salt petre; half oz. pearl ash; and 4 gallons of water. Boil together, and scum the pickle when cold. Put it on the meat. Hams to remain in pickle 8 weeks—beef 3 weeks. The above is for 100 lbs. weight.

TO IMPROVE PEARS.—During the winter, lay bare the roots of the tree, by digging for a space of two or three feet each way from the tree; fill the hole half full of blacksmith's cinders or old iron, and in the spring fill up the hole with new earth or compost; the cinders or iron being exposed to the weather, oxidizes during the winter, and conveys by means of the roots to the tree and fruit; the quality of the fruit will be found much improved, and many trees, now worthless, may have their health and usefulness restored.

VARIETY.

Dr. Macgowan says: "A painful circumstance occurred not long since, which, in some parts of China, would have been attended with serious consequences. The whole of my arsenic—between two and three pounds—was surreptitiously obtained by one of my neighbors, who, thinking it was flour, had it made into cakes with lard. Eleven persons partook of it, but the quantity was so large that it acted like an emetic, being ejected from the stomach the moment it was swallowed. One poor woman, however, only tasted the fatal cake, and by the time I reached her dwelling she was a corpse. Those who escaped, suffered for several days from inflammation of the stomach. I cannot learn that they attached any blame to me in this painful affair.

The Methodist Church at Guilford, Accomac Co., Va., was surrounded by a mob some weeks since while the congregation were engaged in religious services on Sunday. The preacher, Rev. James Hagis, had proceeded a while in the discussion of his subject, when the mob commenced shooting around the Church, throwing missiles against it, and hallooing to such a degree, that the congregation was so alarmed that some left the Church. Under these circumstances Mr. Hargis could not proceed. The cause of these riotous proceedings was, that the preacher and his congregation had come to the conclusion to retain their connection with the Methodist Church North, of whose allegiance to Slavery the mobocrats entertained some doubt.

The editor of the New Orleans Picayune has had his eyesight gratified with a string of snake rattles, which must have belonged to a snake of the Gyastacutus species—as there were fifty-two rattles on the string, showing, according to the generally concived opinion, that the animal must have numbered that many years. It was killed on the Bayou Dugdemona, near Monroe. The editor has also been presented with a pig from the same neighborhood, the head of which can be likened to nothing save that of a monkey, while it has a trunk resembling that of an elephant in many respects, and out of which it is said to have breathed as long as it lived.

There is quite an extensive and powerful sentiment awakened against the continuance of slavery in Delaware. A Wilmington paper says that petitions are in circulation recommending the Legislature to abolish Slavery on fair and equitable terms. The paper very quietly adds:—"We have heretofore said that no other measure would conduce so much to the prosperity of little Delaware. A tide of emigration would set in here to buy up and improve our old and worn-out lands, and the million acres supposed to be contained in Delaware would be worth more than five millions of dollars more as soon as the law is passed. Our interests require it. There are only about 2,000 slaves in Delaware."

A company of about thirteen, chiefly Burlington county Friends and farmers, have bought 2,000 acres of land in Fairfax county, Virginia, for about $25,000, or $12 1-2 an acre. They intend to colonize and farm it, Jersey fashion. The whole or most of the land belonged formerly to the Mount Vernon estate. A very large immigration to Virginia, from New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and other States, is now going on. Under the plows and spades of these Northern farmers, the worn-out lands of old Virginia are beginning to blossom like the rose.

A man calling himself J. Rand Thompson, has been arrested at Louisville, on charge of nine robberies at different hotels in that city. He is a man aged about 40 years, and of good address and appearance, and it is supposed the same individual who has been committing depredations on the hotels in Cincinnati and St. Louis. He has a wife and daughter at Louisville.

The whole stock of the New York and New Haven Railroad ($2,500,000) has been subscribed without condition, and the contractors and engineers are busily engaged on the line, preparatory to letting the sub-contracts. Lord Palmerston, on a recent occasion, speaking of the progress of the magnetic telegraph, remarked in illustration, that the time might come when the Premier might be questioned in Parliament on some point of Indian policy, and in reply might say to his questioner, "In half an hour I will give you an answer from the Governor General at Calcutta."

On the 1st inst. Benj. Craig, Sen. Silas L. Craig, and M. Howard, a fisherman, and two black men, were crossing the Ohio river in a skiff, from Verny Island to the Kentucky shore; the wind being very high, the skiff, it is supposed was upset, and the persons are all thought to have been drowned.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.
REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor, and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

Remittances and communications must be made in all cases without expense to the publishers. The former may always be done through a Post-master, by handing him the amount to be remitted, taking his receipt, and forwarding the receipt by mail, post paid; or the money may be enclosed in a letter, post paid, directed to the publishers.

N. B. The Postage on all these Periodicals is reduced by the late Post Office law, to about one-third the former rates, making a very important saving in the expense to mail subscribers.

* * In most of the large cities and towns in the United States lying on the principal Railroad and Steamboats routes, these periodicals will be delivered FREE OF POSTAGE.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.
ELIHU BURRITT, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in ADVANCE.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life. It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

CLAIMS OF TEMPERANCE ON THE CHRISTIAN WORLD.

The writer of an article under the above caption, in the Recorder of Jan. 7th, seems to labor under a delusion which it is hoped a more thorough acquaintance with the claims of temperance on Christians, and a closer examination of the Scriptures, will dispel. I am not among those who believe that "temperance is religion;" but I do believe it to be a sine qua non in the Christian character; else why should the inspired teachers of Christianity have "spoken against intemperance in the strongest terms, and pointed out its results in such a forcible manner as to make the inconsiderate mind tremble," as the writer premises. And if, as he farther premises, "the adoption of temperance principles has brought many to the reception of truth, and the faith of Christ, removed the incubus on their moral sense, and led them to calm and serious reflection on their present and future state, and finally to the reception of the gospel as their only hope," well may we hail that adoption as an auspicious day—a day of rejoicing.

The writer pronounces the position, that total abstinence is insisted on by the sacred writers, to be false, and expresses his opinion, that the advocates of temperance have done much harm by founding their arguments upon it. For some, this wholesale denunciation may suffice; others think they have a right to expect proof that they entertain and promulgate false sentiments, when thus accused. This proof the writer may have in reserve, and for reasons known to himself, has not attached it to his declaration. His naked declaration that "the position cannot be maintained," weighs but little with those who deem it susceptable of proof by abundant testimony from the Scriptures. Reason and revelation never conflict. The steps from moderate drinking to inebriation are so imperceptible, that no man has yet been able to draw a dividing line; and yet the one follows the other, if persisted in, as sure as night follows day, and that too in obedience to a law as imperative. The one is but the germ of the others, and will as certainly expand and produce fruit, if nourished, as the seed in the earth will burst its shell and seek the light. Now God, the enactor of these imperative laws, when he applies his awful denunciations to intemperance, does as certainly apply them to the incipient stages of it as to its more full development. The application of the axe to the root of the tree, is a Bible doctrine. When, therefore, Christ cursed the fig tree, he left not the roots to spring up anew. When God denounces intemperance, he leaves not the embryo to hasten into life.

That God has forbidden drunkenness, all must admit who read the writings of the prophets and apostles. See Is. 28: 7, 8; Jer. 25: 27; Hosea 4: 11; Is. 5: 11—22; Rom. 13: 13; 1 Cor. 6: 10; Gal. 5: 19—21. Here we find the awful declaration, that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God. But not by inferential reasoning alone do we prove the position. Precept and example of inspired writers offer themselves in abundance. Prov. 20: 1—"Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. 23: 2—"Be not among wine-bibbers." 31st verse—"Look not upon the wine when it is red, ... at last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." Prov. 6: 27—"Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned?" Rom. 14: 21—"It is not good to eat flesh, or drink wine, or any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or made weak." These, and many other precepts, prove the position. For why are wine and strong drink thus denounced, if their use is innocent. Nothing is here said about moderate or immoderate drinking; but their use is totally prohibited. We are even exhorted to shun the sight of it as we would flee from a deadly serpent. Paul, in closing his first address to the Thessalonians, exhorts them to abstain, not from actual evil only, but says, "Abstain from all appearance of evil;" and will any one, after reading the above quotations, say that there is not even the appearance of evil in the sparkling glass—the biting serpent and stinging adder? Revelation, reason, and every day's experience, all unite with the voice of wo from thousands of crushed hearts, in a mournful response, 'There is death eternal.' To us, as loudly as to the Thessalonians, is the voice of inspiration, Abstain, Abstain! Here, then, is a glorious, heaven-born, total-abstinence pledge. Rally around it, ye Christians. Urge its holy principles, in the name of God and truth, and you shall triumph. If you build on other foundations, wo to you when the winds come. The Bible contains fundamental principles enough to build all moral enterprises upon. If the principles of total abstinence originate not there, it is impiety to embrace and disseminate them. If they do originate there, in what better name can they be urged than in the name of God? If "good men" will resist us because we appeal to God's Word for authority, then will we turn to bad men, and endeavor to win them to the love of God, by showing them that He approves of so good a thing as all men know total abstinence to be. The assertion of the writer, that our position is false, is equivalent to a declaration that the opposite is true. The sacred writers did approve or disapprove of total abstinence. If the first be false, then the last is true. If the last be true, then has the writer criminated the inspired writers; for he says, "If persons could be made to understand the real nature of alcohol, and its effects on the body, no rational being would defend the use of it, except he was bent on his own destruction." Now, if his position be true, the sacred writers did defend what would work the destruction of mankind. The habit which has obtained in the world of imputing wrong to God's Word, is well calculated to inspire contempt for it, and it should be deprecated by every Christian.

The author farther says, "This evil is not to be suppressed by legislative enactments—by passing laws against making or vending ardent spirits. True, it may never be suppressed by these agencies alone; but it is thought by many that it cannot be suppressed without their aid. Moral suasion can never be effectual, unless accompanied by corresponding action. What would my friend 'W—R' think of me, should he see me approach the poor drunkard with a temperance pledge in one hand, beseeching him by all that is lovely and good to become temperate, sign the pledge, and be sober, while in the other I held a glass of sparkling wine, thus with one hand appealing to reason, and with the other to his already perverted appetite. This course seems to me to be allowable by the position taken, and is in reality practiced wherever the sale of intoxicating drinks is allowed by law. Where is the force of our suasion to abandon the use of alcohol, when at the same time we countenance, and throw the shield of legal enactment around, the very practice we have denounced as destructive, vile, and degrading, thus involving ourselves in an inconsistency which has and will ever cripple and paralize the enterprize. Of this our opposers are not slow to take advantage, and there is force in the argument often used by the intemperate to repel the good devotee of moral suasion. 'If it be so bad a thing, why do you legalize and make it honorable?' is a question often asked by the drunkard, and as often remains unanswered. So long as we do, in any department of action, give sanction to the sale, and therefore the use of ardent spirits, we do virtually deny and stamp with hypocrisy all our preaching against it. Suppose I see a man with a dagger raised to slay his fellow, and after persuading the victim to run away, and the offender to desist, in vain, I should (having power) legalize the act he is about to commit. Which act of mine will speak the louder? We do place in the hand of the licensed rum-seller a dagger more fatal than that of steel—one with which he can sever nature's tenderest ties, pierce the fondest hopes of connubial bliss, send the sting to the immortal soul, and plunge it into a drunkard's hell. This barbed arrow—this "biting serpent"—we place in his hand, and then, with impious malignity, he will flourish it in our faces when we would persuade him to cease his carnage, and, if possible, fasten its fangs upon our souls, and bear us to destruction. And are we told that we may not use legislative action in tearing down what, by the same means, we have raised up? Just so far as legislative action gives countenance to intemperance, just so far it may extend in tearing it down. Until we repeal all laws which in any way give support to the sale and use of rum, we cannot consistently denounce it, any more than we can denounce sheep-stealing and every year enact laws allowing certain privileged persons, "for and in consideration of the sum of $30," to steal all the sheep they can catch. Who would advocate that, or say that such laws ought not to be repealed? And yet the results of such a course could not equal the effects of rum-selling. Such laws cannot be repealed without legislative action. Nor can prohibitory laws be enacted except by the same mode. But it may be urged, that we have no power to prohibit rum-selling. Then I answer, that we have none to prohibit any injury that man may inflict on his fellow. That the victim is a voluntary one, is no palliation. If a man set himself up as a mark for me to shoot, I am as really a murderer as if I shot him against his will. And now I say, in the language of the writer, "Brethren, let us turn our backs upon every custom which will tend to injure our neighbor, or encourage those habits, which sap the foundations of virtue and the prosperity of our fellows." And does not rum-selling injure our neighbor? and does not legal enactment for it encourage that habit? Then let us tear it away, and leave the monster in all his naked deformity to sink in disgrace and deserved oblivion. D. E. M.

MYSTIC BRIDGE, Conn., Jan. 10.

WRITTEN ARTICLES OF FAITH AND COVENANT.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

It was with much interest that I read the interrogatories of "INQUIRER," in the Recorder of Dec. 17. His first question—"Is it proper for a church to have a written Covenant and Articles of Faith?"—attracted my attention particularly, as involving the practice of those with whom man-made church covenants and articles of Faith have originated. Either all human bonds and rules of thought are proper, or those do wrong who make or support them. To determine which of these conclusions is right, I conceive to be the object of "Inquirer." I do not think he wished to know whether it is right to take the New Testament Covenant as a church bond, and its plain language as a rule of faith. I presume that this is now universally admitted, and believed to be right and proper by all Protestants. The question is, I think, whether that covenant and rule of faith, written under the direction of the great Author and Finisher of our faith, will admit of any other not possessing like evidence of inspiration.

Before proceeding to discuss this question, I beg leave to notice the remarks of "PRESTONIAN," in the Recorder of Jan. 14. Replying to "Inquirer," he says, quoting from Paul's epistles and Luke's Acts of the Apostles, "These passages fully teach the existence of such a covenant in the gospel church; and as God's covenant with Abraham and Noah, and the Gospel or new covenant, as well as the one contained in the above scriptures, were written," he is of the opinion 'that it is proper for a church to have a written covenant; only let it be gospel-wise.' If I do not misapprehend him, he is ingeniously evading the question—"Only let it be gospel-wise!" Let what be gospel-wise?—a written covenant? "Prestonian" will answer, Yes. But he saith not who is to be the writer of this covenant—whether the Holy Spirit, or some modern world's convention, or some ancient council or synod; or perhaps some aspiring leader may assume the lordship over God's heritage, and accommodate us with a genuine modernized and humanized covenant, ready written. In the Bible we read of two, which are styled the first and second covenant. See Heb. 8: 7, 8. The first has passed away to make room for the second, the new, the better; and this covenant is a written covenant. Surely we have not a better than this new covenant. If a better can be produced, written or unwritten, with an equal evidence of divine authenticity, I will respond to it. If not, give me the old one. Now, if bro. "Prestonian" wished to say that it was proper for a church to have this divinely-inspired covenant, he was answering, I think, an unasked question. For it is very evident that there can be no church without this same new covenant. If, on the other hand, he means to be understood that it is right for the church to have some man-made covenant to bind it together, he has snugly ensconced himself behind a convenient qualification, 'only let it be gospel-wise.' The Papist, with equal propriety, can say, It is proper for the church to persecute and burn all she may deem heretics, 'only let her do it gospel-wise.' And who can dispute it? If she does it gospel-wise, it must be right. The "written covenant" which bound the apostles and the primitive church together, was written with the pen of inspiration, and sealed with the blood of the Son of God, and is infinitely superior to any of those written subsequent to it. If "Prestonian" meant this covenant, it could not help being gospel-wise in its very nature. If, on the contrary, he meant that we have a right to frame improvements upon this covenant, or substitute another, he may as well say that fire will not burn, only let it be cool-wise, as to say that this is proper, only let it be gospel-wise. God has given us a covenant, a perpetual covenant; this is "gospel-wise;" none other can be. "The word of the Lord standeth sure."

"Prestonian" says, "As to Articles of Faith, I would ask, Is it proper for churches to have faith? Most assuredly; for by it the elders obtained a good report and through faith we understand that the worlds were made by the word of God, and by it they wrought righteousness. In fact, without faith it is impossible to please God," &c. Here our brother proceeds to cut and slash the above into parts of firstly, secondly, thirdly, and fourthly, calling them articles; and then sagely inquires, "May we have articles written?" He concludes that Paul's epistles are articles of faith. Here, then, he furnishes us with an example of Paul's writing articles of faith; hence we may write them; and as the church adopted his, it must be proper for it to adopt ours. This is what I call jumping to a conclusion. You will notice, in his quotations from Hebrews, not a word is said about articles of faith. It does not say, By articles of faith the elders obtained a good report; through articles of faith, nor without articles of faith, it it is impossible to please God. But it is, By faith, and through faith—not a part of faith, nor an article of faith—but a whole, living, acting faith, in all the word of God—not in a part of it, or in some of its speculative articles. In the Bible it is as easy to find a Sunday Sabbath as to find any authority for a human church covenant, or human articles of faith, whether oral or written. The faith that Paul wrote of and taught, is the faith which I hope to live and die by; yet he said nothing in favor of articles of faith; and as all the sacred writers treated them with the same neglect, I am safe in such good company, and think the church is infinitely better off without them. CRYPTIC.

THE WELCOME BACK.

BY ELIZA COOK.

Sweet is the hour that brings us home,
Where all will spring to meet us—
Where hands are striving as we come,
To be the first to greet us.
When the world hath spent its frowns and wrath,
And care been sorely pressing,
'Tis sweet to turn from our roving path,
And find a fire-side blessing.
Oh, joyfully dear is the homeward track,
If we are but sure of a welcome back!

What do we reck on a weary way,
Though lonely and benighted,
If we know there are lips to chide our stay,
And eyes that will beam love-lighted?
What is the worth of the diamond's ray
To the glance that flashes pleasure,
When the words that welcome back betray
We form a heart's chief treasure?
Oh, joyfully dear is our homeward track,
If we are but sure of a welcome back!

PRAYER OF MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Our readers will remember that at the instance of Elizabeth, Mary was for many years confined. At that age, it was the custom of ladies in fashionable life to pass their leisure time in tapestry, or needle-work. Mary, the prisoner queen, wrought many beautiful pieces of tapestry. She was a prisoner for about seven years in Hardwich Hall, an old grotto stone building, situated about ten miles from the pretty little town of Mansfield, in Nottinghamshire The place, in the summer season, is much visited by strangers. In this old mansion is a long hall, the sides of which are covered with large pieces of tapestry which were worked by Mary's own hands. Some of these pieces are very large, and present an appearance not unlike the paintings in front of a menagerie. The designs are very numerous. Some being mythological, others representing large animals, but mostly scriptural pieces. Amongst these is one which visitors much admire. It is the shepherd scene between Rachel and Jacob. But the chief attraction is the little ante-room adjoining the large one. Here is the identical bed of the unfortunate Mary, covered with a quilt of scarlet silk velvet, beautifully wrought in needle-work by the queen's own hand. It is guarded by a railing, and no visitor is allowed to touch it. Every thing is aged and dark. The old oaken furniture is full of holes, wrought by the worms of age. It is an awful place. Queen Mary was a poet, and of much plaintive simplicity. But perhaps had she not been a prisoner, she would never have been a poet. During her long imprisonment, she produced many pleasing poetic compositions, one of which, her Lord's Prayer, we transcribe for the sake of its plaintive melody and beauty. It was written originally in Latin; we append an English reading of it for the benefit of those who prefer a vernacular version:

Oh! Domine Deus,
Speravi in te;
Nunch libera me,
In dura catena,
In misera poena
Desidero te,
Languendo, gemendo,
Et genuflectendo,
Adoro, imploro
Et liberes me!

Oh! my God and my Lord,
I have trusted in thee!
Oh! Jesus, my Love,
Now liberate me,
In my enemies' power,
In affliction's sad hour
I languish for thee,
In sorrowing, weeping,
And bending the knee,
I adore and implore thee
To liberate me.

CHARITY.

Translated for the Christian Intelligencer, from the French of La Mennais.

You have only a day to spend upon earth; act in such a way that you may spend it in peace. Peace is the fruit of love; for, to live in peace, it is necessary to put up with many things.

No one is perfect, all have their faults. Every man leans upon his neighbors, and love alone makes the burden light. If you cannot support your brothers, how will your brothers support you?

It is written of the Son of Mary, 'As he loved his own that were in the world, he loved them even to the end.' Love then your brethren who are in the world, and love them even to the end.

Love is indefatigable; it never wearies. Love is inexhaustable; it blooms, and buds again; and the more it is diffused, the more it abounds.

Whoever loves himself more than his brother, is unworthy of Christ, who died for his brethren. Have you given of your goods, lay down your life—love will return you all.

Verily I tell you, he who loves has a paradise in his heart; God is in him, for God is love.

The vicious man loves not; he is envious. He is a prey to hunger and thirst; his eye, like the eye of a serpent, charms only to devour.

Love reposes at the bottom of pure souls, like a drop of dew in the chalice of a flower.

Oh, if you knew what it is to love! You say that you love, and many of your brethren are in want of bread to sustain life, of vestments to cover their naked limbs, of a roof to shelter them, of a handful of straw to sleep upon, while you have all things in abundance.

You say that you love, and there are many sick, who languish, without succor, upon their hard beds; many unhappy, who weep, and no person weeps with them; many children, who go shivering with cold, from door to door, and ask of the rich a morsel from their tables, and who obtain it not. You say that you love your brothers; what then would you do if you hated them?

And I say unto you, whoever, being able, comforteth not his suffering brother, is the enemy of his brother; and whoever, being able, ministereth not unto his brother who famishes, is his MURDERER.

LUTHER'S MODE TO FOIL SATAN.—When thy conscience is thoroughly afraid with the remembrance of thy past sins, and the devil assaileth thee, going about to overwhelm thee with heaps, floods, and whole seas of sin, to terrify thee, and draw thee from Christ, then arm thyself with such sentences as these: "Christ the Son of God, was given, not for the holy, righteous, worthy, and such as were his friends, but for the wicked sinners, and for his enemies;" wherefore if Satan say, "Thou art a sinner, and therefore must be condemned;" then answer thou and say, "Because thou sayest I am a sinner, therefore I will be righteous and be saved;" and if he reply, "Nay, but sinners must be condemned;" then answer thou and say, "No, for I fly to Christ, who hath given himself for my sins, and therefore, Satan, in that thou sayest 'I am a sinner,' thou givest me armor and weapons against thyself, that with thine own sword I may cut thy throat and tread thee under my feet."

AN EASTERN PARABLE.

"A man was traveling in Syria, leading his camel by the bridle. Suddenly the animal is seized with a panic of fear—he raises himself with impetuosity, foams and bounds in a manner so horrible, that the master abandons him in anguish, and tries to save himself. He perceived at some distance from the road a deep stream, and as he still heard the fearful neighings of the camel, he sought a refuge there, and fell over the precipice. But a shrub held him up. He clung to it with both hands, and cast on every side his anxious eyes. Above him is the terrible camel, of which he does not lose sight for a moment. In the abyss below is a dragon who opens his monstrous jaws, and seems waiting to devour him. At the side of him he perceives two mice, one white and the other black, who gnaw in turn at the root of the shrub, which serves him for a support. The unfortunate man remains there, frozen with terror, and seeing no way of retreat, no means of safety. Suddenly on a little branch of a shrub, he discovers some fruit. At that moment he ceases to observe the rage of the camel, the jaws of the dragon, and the frightful activity of the mice. He reaches out his hand towards the fruit, he gathers it, and, in the sweet taste, forgets his fears and his dangers."

Do you ask who is this madman, who can forget so quickly a mortal peril? That man is thyself. The dragon of the stream is the ever open abyss of death. The camel represents the sorrows of life. The two mice who are gnawing at the roots of the shrub, are day and night; and in this situation, the fruit of pleasure attracts you. You forget the anxieties of life, the threatenings of death, the rapid succession of day and night, to seek the plant of voluptuousness, on the borders of the tomb.

THE JUDGMENT DAY.

Jerome used to say, that it seemed to him as if the trumpet of the last day was always sounding in his ears, saying, "Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment." The generality, however, think but little of this awful and important period. A Christian king of Hungary being very sad and pensive, his brother, who was a gay courtier, was desirous of knowing the cause of his sadness. "O brother," said the king, "I have been a great sinner against God, and know not how to die, or how to appear before God in judgment!" His brother making a jest of it, said, "These are but melancholy thoughts." The king made no reply; but it was the custom of the country, that if the executioner came and sounded a trumpet before any man's door, he was presently led to execution. The king, in the dead of the night, sent the executioner to sound the trumpet before his brother's door, who hearing it, and seeing the messenger of death, sprang into the king's presence, beseeching to know in what he had offended. "Alas! brother," said the king, "you have not offended me. And is the sight of my executioner so dreadful, and shall not I, who have greatly offended, fear to be brought before the judgment seat of Christ."

A CLERGYMAN'S FAMILY.

The Rev. John Newton relates that many proofs had passed under his immediate notice of the faithfulness of God in answering the prayers of pious parents, who had left behind them young and helpless children. He especially mentions a friend of his, a laborious Christian minister in the west of England, in whose family the divine promise was fulfilled.

This devoted man, when dying, was advised to make his will, but he replied, "I have nothing to leave but my wife and children, and I leave them to the care of a gracious God;" and soon after he died happily. No prospect appeared for the support of his family; but the Lord disposed a man who had always despised his preaching to feel for his destitute family, and by his means £1,600, or about $8,000, were raised for them; and the clergy of Exeter, who had never countenanced his ministry, gave his widow a house and garden for her life; so that she afterwards lived in greater ease and plenty than in the lifetime of her husband.

"BEARING PRECIOUS SEED."

I have heard, says one in substance, of seeds which will sleep in the earth for ages, and I have read of the young of certain insects, which lie in a state like death for eighty years together, and yet when the hand that scattered the seed has been long mingled with the dust, and when the insect that hath deposited its young had ended its flight for generations, the seed would come forth and form a forest of mighty trees, and the slumbering insect would awake to life, and become the mother of an endless multitude. And so it may be with us. We are scattering the seeds of knowledge, virtue, piety, and immortality, but we may not see the seed at once spring forth. Our instructions may seem to be forgotten; the friends of our liberality may seem to have perished; and our labors to have been in vain. But no; the seed is still undecayed, and the time will come when it shall spring forth, and yield a glorious harvest. And he that soweth and he that reapeth shall yet rejoice together.

New York, January 28, 1847.

CONSCIENTIOUSNESS OF RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Several months ago, notice was given that the Sunday train on the Railroad between New York and Philadelphia would soon be discontinued. An obstacle to this arrangement, however, was found in the contract with the Post Office Department, which required that the mail should be carried on every day of the week. The Government was not willing to sanction the Sunday by discontinuing the mail; and the Railroad Company, since the mail must be carried, was not willing to lose the extra revenue which would be derived from carrying passengers also. Hence the Sunday train continues to run as usual, to the great convenience of those who wish to travel on that day, and to the great annoyance of those who would gladly compel all to lie still. It is now said, that the Directors of the Railroad are bent upon carrying out their Sunday reform measure, and have determined that in making another contract with the Department they will not engage to carry the mail on Sunday.

This all looks very pious and praiseworthy. Indeed, if we could really believe that it resulted from a conscientious conviction of the sinfulness of running cars on Sunday, we should have not a word to say in opposition, but would rather give it our sanction, notwithstanding we can see nothing in the Bible to encourage such convictions But we are sorry to say, that we believe there is very little conscience about this matter any way. By means of publications scattered broadcast over the land, and "Sabbath Conventions" falsely so called, an impression has been extensively created, that Sunday travel on railroads is unprofitable, and that the Lord will abundantly repay in dollars and cents those companies which discountenance it. Hence the railroad offices in various sections of the country have been closed on Sunday, travelers have been compelled to lie over that day, and the Directors of the Railroads have secured the reputation of being very conscientious and religious citizens. But we say again, it is our deliberate opinion, that in a vast majority of cases these movements spring not from an enlightened conscience, but from a love of money and popularity. In this opinion we are confirmed by many stubborn and instructive facts, some of which it may be well to state.

The Reading Railroad, if we mistake not, was one of the first to close its business on Sunday; and when it did so, the circumstance was trumpeted throughout the country as a triumph of the "Sabbath Reformers." Only a short time had elapsed, however, before a bet of one thousand dollars was made upon the amount of coal which could be carried over the road in a month; and to secure this bet, the cars were set to running on Sunday as heretofore. Thus the Directors of the Reading Railroad showed, that notwithstanding their boasted conscientiousness about Sunday, they could sell it all for one thousand dollars. A small price this, one would think, for what had occasioned so much talk. But small or great, it was enough to show the principle upon which their movement was based.

Another of the "Sabbath-keeping Railroads" is that which extends across Long Island. This Company has never been in the habit of running cars on Sunday, and of course it was natural to expect that it would be slow to commence such an unpopular and wicked practice. But it so happened, recently, that a company of foreign dancers in New York wished to get to Boston on Sunday; and although the Long Island Railroad Company is too conscientious to carry ordinary travelers on that day, yet it furnished a special train for the accommodation of these extraordinary passengers. No doubt it was well paid for the accommodation. Well paid, or ill paid, however, this circumstance shows that there is not so much conscience in the matter but what it can be bought up.

There is a railroad in New Jersey, upon which we frequently have occasion to travel, and on which a Sunday train would sometimes be a great convenience. But this road is too conscientious to carry passengers on Sunday. Freight, however, can be transported on any day; and scarcely a Sunday passes in which trains of cars for this purpose do not pass over the road, disturbing, it is reasonable to suppose, "the sacred stillness of the day" as much as a passenger train.

These things are not said to encourage traveling on Sunday. On the contrary, we are heartily in favor of giving every man the privilege of resting or working on any and every day he pleases, and particularly when his pleasure is regulated by his conscience. But we are at the same time in favor of calling things by their right names. If Railroad Companies see fit to discontinue Sunday trains because such trains are deemed sinful, we will gladly record the fact as a triumph of conscience over interest. But if those companies give evidence that their movements are regulated wholly by the question of dollars and cents, we shall be slow to give them credit for sacrificing their worldly interests to the dictates of conscience. The practice has already been carried too far, of calling the name of godliness over arrangements adopted for purposes of economy and gain alone. The sooner it is abandoned the better.

PETITIONS FOR EQUAL RIGHTS.

DERUYTER, Jan. 20, 1847.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In my former communication, I presented the views of the Semi-Annual Meeting of the Central Association upon the subject of petitions for equal rights, and perhaps said enough to explain what was deemed necessary for the occasion. Some, however, seem to think, that in asking of the Legislature protection in our professions and worship as Sabbath-keepers, we are asking a boon, the bestowment of which would lay us under obligations, and which they have a perfect right to withhold. But such is not our view. The Constitution guarantees to us, in common with others, the right to profess and worship what and when we deem proper; but still the statute law, pointing out and particularly defining our rights, and what shall be considered an infringement upon them, and how they shall be protected, is found to be important. The observers of the first day, sensible of this, have availed themselves of the privilege, and have had their rights defined and protected; and this we are now endeavoring to do for Sabbath-keepers, whose claims on the attention of the Legislature are as good as others, for there is to be no partiality or discrimination in legislating or granting legal privileges or protection to different professions.

Owing to the influence of popular custom, laws have been enacted which not merely protect the observers of Sunday from interruption, but savor much of a religious establishment, probably without remonstrance, or even a knowledge at the time that others would be effected by them; while, on account of the unpopularity of our profession, it is difficult to obtain a hearing. Still we ask, and will continue to ask, till we are heard, and our rights recognized and respected. This will and must be, and I am inclined to believe that the time is not remote, when such laws as have extended beyond their constitutional limits, will be repealed. Still I contend that this is not our object at present, nor is it exclusively the business of Sabbath keepers to lead in this matter, though they have as good a right as other citizens, and perhaps some more reason for desiring such repeal. We do not believe, that by thus claiming protection for Sabbath-keepers in the same manner as the observers of first day are protected, we are vulnerable to the charge of selfishness, or that we compromise the truth, or the privileges of others. The Jew is a Sabbath-keeper, and is protected by the laws we ask. Other Sabbath-keeping denominations, if such there are, come under the same provision.

In all great objects, we should be careful that the means do not defeat the end. One thing done at a time, and done properly, is a triumph; but a dozen things attempted at one effort, which fails, is the ruin perhaps of the enterprise. Should we therefore prematurely attempt to involve ourselves in the effort to repeal the Sabbath laws, however improper or unconstitutional, I believe our object will be misunderstood and misrepresented, and we shall fail to secure our rights in these particulars, the want of which has subjected us to great inconvenience.

Yours, &c., JOHN MAXSON.

HOW TO OBTAIN A SENSE OF PARDON.

Many Christians complain of a want of evidence as to the forgiveness of their sins. This may arise from two causes. It may be from not clearly understanding the doctrine of the Scriptures, or from a low state of religion in the soul. If we have a correct view of truth, and the soul is right toward God, we shall see that all the blessings and privileges of the Gospel of Christ are ours as soon as we believe in his name. Every thing in reference to salvation is simple and plain. Much is summed up in a few words by the Apostle Paul, in his letter to Timothy, in one text particularly—"This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ died for sinners, of whom I am chief." Here is the great doctrine of atonement laid down as the foundation of a sinner's hope—a doctrine made known by a God who cannot lie. The reception of this truth by a lost sinner, is indispensable to salvation. It is plain, that as soon as a man feels his sinfulness, and relies upon Christ's atoning blood for pardon and salvation, utterly renouncing himself as unable to merit the least favor of Heaven—exclaiming with Watts—

> A guilty, weak and helpless worm,
> On thy kind arms I fall;
> Be thou my strength and righteousness,
> My Jesus and my all—

and gives evidence by his conduct that this is his real experience, his sins are pardoned, and he is justified in the sight of God. Some people talk as if they expected God to speak to them in an audible voice, or as if they thought some kind of inspiration was to be experienced, before they could claim the blessing of pardon as theirs. Now God says in his Word, that he sent his Son to die in the sinner's stead—to publish his mercy to the guilty and the lost in the most generous terms, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The promise of God then is added to the annunciation of the gospel plan. The blessing is provided. It is inseparably connected with the atonement. We have only to receive the latter—to build upon it, or rest upon it entirely—and accept the former with gratitude at the hands of our Father. To reject it, is to slight him, and depreciate the plan of salvation. Perhaps the great difficulty with individuals is to know whether they are Christians. Is it so difficult, then, for a man to know whether he looks to Christ alone for salvation? Is it hard to know whether the fruits of faith in Christ are produced in his soul and life? Cannot he tell whether he loves God supremely or not, and his people because they bear his likeness? Does he not know whether he obeys God from choice, or as a slave for fear of the lash? Is it possible to pant after holiness, and wish for heaven, that he may fully possess it, without apprehending it? Surely not. It is certainly very desirable that Christians lay hold of their privileges, and not merely have a faint hope, but be assured of their interest in the great salvation. This will make life happy, recommend religion, glorify God, render death easy.

SALEM, N. J., Jan. 11, 1847.

MISSIONS IN HINDOSTAN AND CHINA.

The Missionary Herald for January contains an article surveying the missions of the American Board. The following extracts from it will interest every friend of the missionary cause:—

BOMBAY.—Few missionary fields hold out greater encouragements than the Maharatta country. Its inhabitants, compared with the Hindoos generally, are an intelligent, independent, noble race. They are everywhere accessible to the preacher of the gospel, and a Christian government stands ready to afford him all needful protection in his work. The number of persons who can read, especially in the Concan, is large.

The labors of this mission in preaching and by means of education and the press, have been much as in former years. Only one person has been admitted to the church during the year. Our brethren need a reinforcement, and the Committee are looking for two missionaries to send to this field.

AHMEDNUGGUR.—The spirit of inquiry appears to be spreading more and more in the Deccan, and the missionaries are bringing their influence to bear more directly and effectually on the mass of heathenism around them. Some of the converts are valuable assistants, and the Holy Spirit is manifestly present in this extended field, to clothe the truth with power, and to direct the inquiring Hindoos to the Lamb of God. Missionary tours have been exceedingly useful, and this species of labor promises the most happy results hereafter.

Decisive progress has been made in breaking the influence of caste in the churches; and there begins to be a prospect of establishing small native churches and the ordinances of the gospel in villages scattered through the country.

MADRAS.—The statistics furnished by the mission are incomplete. The educational efforts of the mission are supposed to have been similar to those of preceding years. Several persons have been admitted to the church during the year; but the present number of communicants is not known. Considerable difficulty has arisen from an attachment to caste which lingers in the minds of some church members. The missionaries, however, have set themselves strongly in opposition to this unnatural and wicked system.

The issues of the press, of every sort, amounted to nearly 27,000,000 pages last year; and they have been upwards of 90,000,000 of pages from the beginning. Besides our own printing establishment at Madras, there is one at Bellary, one at Vizagapatan, one at Neyoor, one at Nagercoil, and another in the Tinuevelly district; all being under the control of missionary societies, and furnishing strictly Christian reading matter for the people.

An anti-Christian society was some time ago organized at Madras, which by means of a newspaper, tracts, lectures and agents, is exerting considerable influence, especially in the interior. This, besides being a sure indication of the progressive power of the gospel, is causing the subject of Christianity to be better understood, and leading the government to adopt more effectual measures for protecting the persons and rights of native converts.

MADURA.—The results of the past year have been as favorable as could have been reasonably anticipated. Five missionaries and one assistant missionary, with their native helpers, have had the care of seven infant native churches, more than twice that number of stated congregations, the mission seminary, five boarding schools, and ninety free schools, embracing, in all, nearly four thousand pupils; besides touring and distributing Scriptures and tracts in forty nominally Christian villages that look to them for instruction, and in various other parts of the Madura district. Great advance could not, therefore, be expected; and yet the whole religious movement of the native mind is decidedly onward.

CANTON.—The brethren at Hongkong have all removed to Canton, and the former is not now reckoned among our stations. The population of Canton is about a million, affording, of course, a vast field for missionary labor. It is to be regretted, however, that the inhabitants still cherish their strong aversion to foreigners. The lives of some of our brethren were recently put in jeopardy by a company of Chinese, acting, however, in manifest ignorance of their true character.

Doctor Parker's labors at the hospital have been continued with the same success as in former years. Much attention has been paid to the spiritual interests of the patients, partly by oral exhibitions of the truth, partly by means of tracts and books.

The missionaries have been diligent in making known the way of salvation, as they have had opportunity. It is not doubted that the fruit of these labors will hereafter appear. Doct. Ball has given instruction to a small school of boys, from ten to fourteen years of age. He has been assisted by a native, who regards himself as a Christian. The Chinese government appears disposed to tolerate the Christian religion in China, though foreign teachers are yet restricted to the five free ports. The mission needs a reinforcement, but the Committee know of no missionary candidate who is ready to go immediately. The harvest is great, but the laborers are few.

REJECTION.

LINCKLAEN, Dec. 31st, 1846.

The ministers called to sit in council with the church in Lincklaen on the case of Eld. Sebeus M. Burdick, met at the house of Bro. Benjamin Burdick, to consider the evidence adduced before the church and council. Prayer was offered by Eld. S. B. Crandall. Eld. Eli S. Bailey was appointed Chairman, and Eld. James Bailey, Secretary. The evidence was then all read and considered, and it was unanimously agreed, that the first item of the complaint was fully sustained. The second item was then considered, and it was unanimously agreed, that it was sustained. Eld. S. M. Burdick's letter to the church, relative to the complaints, was next considered, when it was unanimously resolved, that it does not cover the complaint, and his confession is not satisfactory. It was then—

Resolved, (unanimously,) That we conceive that Eld. S. M. Burdick has forfeited his right to church membership, and that nothing but a full, frank, and humble confession of all the charges alledged and proved, should restore him to the fellowship of the church.

Resolved, (unanimously,) That we conceive that Eld. S. M. Burdick, by the above-named conduct, has forfeited his ministerial office, to which he cannot be restored until by an upright course of conduct he has regained public confidence.

Resolved, (unanimously,) That we advise the church to adopt the above resolutions, and forward them to the Sabbath Recorder for publication.

ELI S. BAILEY, Chair'n,
JAMES BAILEY, Sec.,
S. B. CRANDALL,
V. HULL,
R. G. BURDICK,
C. M. LEWIS,
O. P. HULL,
J. CLARK.

The Seventh-day Baptist Church in Lincklaen having heard the evidence adduced, as also the reading of the resolutions of the council resolved to adopt them. In compliance with the request of the church and council, I forward to you the above, for publication in the Recorder.

Yours in Christian fellowship,
B. S. BURDICK, Church Clerk.

SABBATH LECTURES.—Mr. Brown's ninth and last lecture upon the subject of the Sabbath, which was to have been delivered on Sunday evening last, was deferred for the purpose of attending the obsequies of Bro. Franklin W. Stillman at Plainfield, N. J. It will be delivered on Sunday evening next at the Seventh day Baptist Chapel in Eleventh-st. Subject—The progress by which the substitution of the Sunday Festival for the Sabbath was accomplished, and the History of the Sabbath generally.

FIRE IN THE JEWS' QUARTER.—According to the Austrian Gazette, Adrianople was on the night of the 24th August visited by a dreadful conflagration, which broke out in the Jewish quarter, and in a few hours, in spite of all endeavors to stop the progress of the furious element, reduced to ashes more than six hundred houses, six synagogues, and several provision magazines. Above a thousand families are without shelter. The damage done is calculated to exceed eighteen millions Turkish piastres.

THE JEWS IN NUREMBERG.—The Voice of Jacob says: "Since the expulsion of the Jews (in 1409,) from Nuremberg, they have been so rigidly excluded from the precincts of that town, as not even to be permitted to sleep there over night. This severity, however, has lately been somewhat relaxed. A Jewish family has been allowed a temporary residence, and as the Orient sarcastically observes, 'A Jew staying there over night, need no more tremble for his life.'"

JEWISH SCHOOLS IN RUSSIA.—From a report of the Russian Minister of Public Instruction, it appears that there were in Russia, at the close of the last year, 97 school commissions, which had licensed 10,000 Jewish teachers; and that, in order to support the schools to be instituted, two taxes had been imposed—one levied upon the Jewish printing offices, and the other upon the candles lighted by the Jews on Friday night, in celebration of the Sabbath.

MASSACRE OF THE NESTORIANS.—It appears from the accounts received by the Hibernia, that the hostility to the Christians in Turkey continues unabated, and that massacres are of frequent occurrence. Sixty-eight villages have been destroyed, and more than eight hundred persons put to death. Mar Yohanna, the Nestorian Bishop who visited this country a few years ago, has been impaled. Several Bishops had oil poured upon their heads, and were then roasted alive, amid the jeers of the murderers.

EDITORIAL SKIRMISHES.—The Rev. Luzerne Ray, in retiring from the editorial charge of the Religious Herald, speaks as follows:—

"I have been engaged in many controversies during my editorial course, and have borne my part in the exchange of some sharp words on various occasions, but I am not aware of ever having had the least bitterness of feeling toward those with whom I have differed. The life of an editor is in many respects not a pleasant one. He must either say nothing, and endure the universal verdict of stupidity, for the sake of offending nobody; or else speak his opinions frankly, and find himself hotly assailed by men with whom be would gladly be at peace. This is a free-thinking and a free-speaking age, and it is scarcely possible to put forth an opinion of any kind, without hearing its quick and sharp clash against some opposite belief. I gladly retire from this intellectual skirmishing."

MR. ONCKEN.—Dr. Baird, in his correspondence from Europe, in the N. Y. Evangelist, thus speaks of this apostle of truth and religious liberty in Germany:—

"One of the most valuable men in Hamburg is the Rev. Mr. Oncken, a Baptist minister, who a few years ago endured much persecution. Those days are now passed away, I hope forever. No man is doing more good than he, in this city. I have attended his meetings, and have been delighted to see how many persons have been brought to the knowledge of the truth by his labors. He will probably visit America next spring."

AN EXAMPLE TO RULERS.—Rev. Messrs. Fairbank and Wilder, with their wives, missionaries from this country to India, have just arrived at Bombay. Mr. F. says in a letter to the American Board:—

"Those who hold the highest offices of the government, interest themselves deeply in whatever pertains to the evangelization of the Hindoos; and they have received us with many wishes for our success, and in various ways have favored us. It is surely a cause of thankfulness, that the disposition of this Government towards American missionaries has undergone such a revolution, and that the natives can see among the rich and the rulers of the land, examples of Christian humility, devotedness, and zeal."

AN EDITOR'S POSITION.—The following is the language of the editor of the Michigan Christian Herald in view of the responsibilities of his position. With slight modifications, it might be adopted by many of his brethren:—

"A brief experience has discovered to us some of the trials and responsibilities of an editor, but we never felt their full force until called to exercise the supervision of a religious paper. All others are published for the world—to enlighten, amuse, instruct, or lead; but a Christian periodical is Christ's—and is to warn men of a judgment to come—to treat with immortal souls. Within the bounds of the Herald's circulation, there are more than ten thousand Baptists, whose influence should be exerted upon each other through its columns. It is the editor's duty to see that this is properly done. With what cautiousness and prayerfulness should this situation be approached. No less zeal and piety is required than for the sacred ministry."

NOBLE EXAMPLES.—The Corresponding Secretary of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, in a letter which we find in the Baptist Register, mentions the following examples of well-directed liberality. May they excite many others to go and do likewise:—

"A short time ago a gentleman from New Jersey called at the Home Mission Rooms, and handed the Secretary his note for $500, payable in quarterly installments, for the support of a missionary in the valley of the Mississippi; saying, that he was not wealthy, but wished to bestow a part of what God had given him in that way. He modestly declined having his name appear with the acknowledgment, and merely requested that when the entire amount is paid, it may be passed to the credit of the Convention of his State. The donation is designated for the support of a missionary in one of the most beautiful and promising villages of Wisconsin. One-fifth is paid. The balance is sure.

"About the same time a gentleman of this city informed the Secretary, that he was anxious to have a representative at the West, to preach the gospel; and if we had a missionary whose salary would not exceed his ability, he would gladly furnish the amount. The missionary was designated, and the amount necessary for his support for a year was advanced. This gentleman, also, is in only moderate circumstances, and has no wish to be known, but is desirous that his example may be imitated."

RATES OF POSTAGE.—Mr. Niles, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, has reported a bill in the Senate, which provides that after the first day of July next, the tariff of postage shall be as follows:—

"On all letters not weighing more than one-third of an ounce, five cents; if weighing more than one-third, and not exceeding one-half of an ounce, ten cents; and five cents for every additional half ounce or fraction thereof; but it shall not be lawful to deposit in any Post Office, to be conveyed in the mail, two or more letters, directed to different persons and enclosed in the same envelope or packet; and every person so offending shall forfeit the sum of ten dollars, to be recovered by action, one half for the use of the informant, and the other half for the use of the Post Office Department; and all newspapers conveyed in the mail shall be subject to postage; and newspapers not sent from the office of publication, and all handbills or circulars printed or lithographed, shall pay postage of three cents, to be paid when deposited in any post-office to be conveyed in the mails, anything in the act to which this is an amendment to the contrary notwithstanding; and the franking privilege of the members of the two Houses of Congress and the Delegates of Territories, in respect to letters addressed to them, shall be the same as it is in respect to letters written by them, and conveyed in the mail, and their right to frank documents printed by the order of either House of Congress, shall continue as long as their privilege to frank letters; and it shall be lawful for any mail carrier to transport newspapers out of the mail and not subject to postage, for sale or distribution to subscribers."

Rev. A. B. Smolnikar, formerly a Catholic priest, but now a self-declared apostle of a New Era of Universal Peace on Earth, writes from Cincinnati to give notice that a Convention of Christian friends of Universal Brotherhood and Peace is invited to meet at the Wesleyan meeting-house, Cortsville, near Selma P. O., Clark Co. Ohio (10 miles from Springfield, 13 from Xenia,) on the 15th of April next, to be continued as long as shall be deemed advisable.

The American missionaries at the Gaboon have been preparing a grammar of the Pangwee language, which they consider one of the most perfect of which they have any knowledge. This language is spoken coastwise nearly 200 miles, and how far into the interior is unknown.

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the SENATE, on Monday, General Cass was appointed a Regent of the Smithsonian Institute. Mr. Sevier presented his instructions from the Legislature of Arkansas, against the payment of the claims on the French spoliations. A resolution was then offered, asking the Secretary of the Treasury whether the Sub-Treasury embarrassed the operations of the Treasury, and whether it ought not to be suspended or repealed. The bill to create the office of Surveyor General of Oregon, and to grant a donation of land to settlers therein, was ordered to be engrossed for the third reading. On Tuesday the Committee on Foreign Relations reported a bill placing three millions of dollars at the disposal of the President during the war with Mexico. The Army bill was reported back with amendments, granting land to non-commissioned officers in the Mexican war, when it was moved to amend by inserting officers and volunteers also; whereupon a long debate ensued, after which the amendment was rejected, by a vote of 26 to 26, the Vice President voting in the negative. Wednesday, various unimportant resolutions and memorials. On Thursday twenty-six abolition memorials were presented, from Pennsylvania. The motion to receive them was laid on the table. Amendments were offered to the bill relative to the appointment of Chaplains for the army, which were finally modified so as to make the chaplains of volunteer regiments elective, and fixing the pay at one thousand dollars per annum, and two rations per day, and forage for a horse. Friday, nothing of general interest. Adjourned to Monday.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, on Monday, the bill to increase the pay of non-commissioned officers and privates, regulars and volunteers, two dollars per month, and to give a hundred and sixty acres of land, was taken up. An amendment was offered making the increase pay three dollars per month, which was adopted. On Tuesday the bill to increase the pay of the regulars and volunteers, was taken up and referred to a Select Committee. Communications were received from the War Department, together with a statement of certain expenditures of the last year, as required by law; also, a communication from the Adjutant General in reply to the resolution calling on the President for the number of volunteers and officers mustered for service in Mexico, for the specified terms of three, six, and twelve months; also, for the number who have died in the service, and those who have resigned, and those who have been discharged. Wednesday and Thursday were occupied in making appropriations for pensions, for the military academy at West Point, and for various other purposes. On Friday the select committee to whom was referred the bill to increase the pay of regulars and volunteers, reported an amendatory bill, which was read twice and referred to a Committee of the Whole. Leave was asked to introduce a joint resolution declaring that the war against Mexico was not waged with a view to the conquest of that republic, but from honorable motives. Objection was made to the resolution being received, and a move made for a suspension of the rules, which was rejected A number of private bills were passed. The House then went into Committee of the Whole on private bills.

TWENTY-SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Hibernia reached Boston on Monday, the 25th inst., after a passage of 19 1-2 days. She had a rough passage, and was detained over her usual time at Halifax, to take in a supply of coal, and also to land his Excellency the Governor General of Canada, and suite.

The price of corn had advanced in England. The best quality of corn was quoted at 68 and 72 shillings.

The price of flour had advanced. Flour in bond, best quality, was quoted at 37 and 38 shillings per barrel.

The cotton market had been more animated during the past month, so that there had been considerable business transacted.

American beef and pork continued in excellent demand, and although supplies are coming in free, very stiff rates are paid.

It is said that about £200,000 to £300,000 in specie came out to Boston by the Hibernia.

Mr. O'Connel is looking feeble, and is said to be fast assuming the character of extreme old age.

A Paris paper asserts that the French Government intends to propose to the Chambers a considerable deduction in the duties on foreign corn.

Severals light shocks of earthquakes have lately been felt in the neighborhood of Marseilles.

Rome has been visited by terrible inundations; the distress is great; the amount of property destroyed is serious. The new Pope has mitigated their hardships by his purse and his personal exertions.

The last message of President Polk, which was received in this country a few days before the sailing of the Hibernia, has been assailed by the whole press, and ugly names have been given to the process of reasoning in which the President accounts for the Mexican war.

The condition of Ireland continues to be the absorbing object of attention. Day after day the distress continues to increase, and famine is doing the work of death in various parts of the country. Immense numbers of poor, half-starved creatures find their way across the Channel, and beg and exist as best they can by appeals to the feelings of the inhabitants in the great towns of England.

The suffering population of the highlands and islands of Scotlands is estimated at 100,000.

A pension of £100 a year has been offered by the Government to Father Mathew.

REGISTRY OF BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES.—In the Legislature of the State of New York, on the 15th inst., a bill was passed in relation to the registering of Births, Deaths and Marriages. It provides that certain official persons shall annually ascertain the number of births, marriages and deaths, which have occurred in their districts respectively during the year, the month and day of their occurrence, the names and residences of the persons so married or dying, and the names of the parents of such children born during the year, the sex, color and names of the children, name and residence of the clergyman or officer performing the marriage ceremony in cases of marriage, the age of the persons who shall have married or died during the year, and the particular disease or cause of their death.

And, that it shall be the duty of clergymen, magistrates and other persons who perform the marriage ceremony, to keep a register of the marriages celebrated by them, and to ascertain as far as practicable and note the ages of the persons married and their residences, in such register. It shall also be the duty of physicians and professional midwives to keep a register of the several births in which they have assisted professionally, and the time of such birth, sex, color, and the residence of the parents; and physicians who have attended deceased persons in their last sickness, clergymen who have officiated at the funeral, and sextons who have buried deceased persons, to keep a register of the name, age and residence of such deceased persons, and the times of their deaths.

PIRATES ON THE COAST OF SUMATRA.—A correspondent of the Salem Register, who we should suppose is a sea captain, under date of Sumatra, Sept. 14, insists upon the necessity of having at least one United States vessel of war stationed permanently on that coast. Animadverting upon a communication from Captain Percival to the Navy Department, in May, 1846, to the effect that he had visited the Island of Sumatra and had an interview with the Rajahs and head men, the writer says that Captain P. had only visited one port (Quallah Batto) out of the three hundred, and that his interview with the head men was limited to the Rajah of that port. The correspondent of the Register farther alledges that the threats of Captain Percival, of revenge on the part of the United States, in case of further piracy, and the assurances of the Rajah that the offence should not be repeated, amounted to just nothing, and that within a month after Captain P.'s departure an attempt was made to cut off the barque Cynthia, of Salem, and had not the captain been an old cruiser and vigilant, they would have succeeded. The same year an attempt was made on another Salem ship, and again this year.

THE LAND GRADUATION BILL.—The provisions of the bill now before Congress to reduce and graduate the price of the Public Lands, are thus stated by the correspondent of the Journal of Commerce:—

1. All public lands which have been offered for sale fifteen years or more, prior to Dec. 1st, 1846, shall be subject to entry at one dollar per acre, for the term of five years; if then unsold, shall be subject to entry at seventy-five cents, for another term of five years; and after that term, at fifty cents an acre.

2. The same rule of reduction is applied to all lands offered for sale after Dec. 1st, 1846, provided that no one person shall enter more than one section at the lowest rate of fifty cents.

3. At each reduction, the settlers on any of these lands shall be entitled to preëmption at the reduced prices.

4. All acts providing for an exemption from the imposition of taxes upon land sold by the United States for five years from and after the day of sale, are repealed by this act.

FOREIGN PAUPERS AND CRIMINALS.—A bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives to prevent the importation of Paupers and Criminals into the United States. The following is a synopsis of its provisions:—

1. The Consuls of the United States are required to examine on oath, or otherwise, as they may think best, all emigrants who may take passage for the United States.

2. If, upon examination, such person shall not appear to have been either a pauper or a criminal, the Consul shall give him a certificate thereof—otherwise, not.

3. Duplicates of these certificates shall be sent to the magistrates of the ports for which the emigrants may have embarked, so as to anticipate their arrival if possible.

4. All immigrants who shall arrive in the United States after six months from the passage of this act, without such certificate, shall be deemed paupers or criminals, and shall be reshipped for the ports which they left; and no master of a vessel shall land them in the United States, under a penalty of $250 for each offence.

EFFECT OF CHARCOAL GAS.—On Thursday evening at a marriage ceremony, which was performed in Grace Church, the spectators had assembled in considerable numbers some time before the wedding party made their appearance. Several of them began to be affected with disagreeable sensations; faintness, palpitation of the heart, and a sense of pressure in the forehead. Two or three ladies fainted, four had to be carried out of the church, and several persons found themselves obliged to withdraw. Others, who remained until the ceremony had been performed, found themselves much indisposed during the evening, and not quite well for a day or two afterwards, and one lady swooned as soon as she reached home. On inquiry being made into the cause, it was found that the stoves in the church had been heated for the evening with charcoal; and that this was a case of incipient suffocation, from the fumes evolved. SUMMARY.

The Albany Evening Journal says that ever since the close of navigation the Mohawk and Hudson Railroad has been doing a very heavy freighting business. The amount of flour received at the dépôt in this city for one week was 5,857 barrels. But this only constitutes a small part of the business done. A glimpse in Montgomery-st., about the dépôt, at the quantity of flour, wool, butter, pork, &c. which now literally fill that street, will soon convince the owners of the stock that their agents seldom get a chance to take long naps, and less to play.

The Washington Union says the first business transacted by the Mexican Congress was to lay on the table the American overture for peace. They then passed a resolution declaring determination to prosecute the war to the last extremities—in the words of our informant, to make it a war to the hilt. An act was also passed to raise half a million of dollars a month, as required by the Executive estimates, for the support of the army—though how the money was to be raised does not yet appear.

We learn from the Cayuga Tocsin that the earnings of the prisoners in Auburn State Prison for the past year have been $56,336 80. Expenditures $52,788 09, showing a balance of earnings of $3,798 77. The greatest number of convicts at any one time during the year was 706. Smallest number 609. Number at the commencement of the year 685—at the close, Sept. 30, 620. Average earnings of each man 22 5-8 cents. Daily average expense of each man 21 2-3.

The Staff-Surgeon at Prescott, Canada, recommends as a remedy, and for securing carious teeth from the effects of changeable weather, a daily and habitual use of a weak solution of Kreosote, saturating the tooth-brush with it and using it first; and cold or tepid water with any other tooth-brush afterward. He thinks that the carious process is suspended by this use of kreosote.

The Louisville Courier of the 11th gives an account of the sinking of several flat-boats and loss of life attendant thereon. It says the storm was one which for severity has rarely, if ever, been equaled in our Western waters. Flat-boats were sunk, property destroyed, steamboats were damaged, their chimneys blown overboard, and the boats themselves placed in a situation so critical that they were obliged to seek harbors with the least possible delay.

The bill for the erection of a suspension bridge over the Niagara river near the falls having been sanctioned by the Queen, the books for subscription, the Toronto Colonist states, will shortly be opened by the Commissioners. The work will be on a stupendous scale—800 feet long and 200 feet above the river, and will, no doubt, be the means of drawing an immense increase of visitors to this most attractive spot; combining, on the completion of the bridge, the noblest work of nature and art.

In the New Orleans District Court, judgment in the case of Ansene alias Caraco vs. L. A. Pigneguy for himself and wife, Madame Pigneguy. It appears that the plaintiff was a slave of Madame P. and accompanied her to France in 1836, where she remained for some time. After her return, she continued in defendant's service some years. She sued for her freedom and $1,200 wages since her return from France. The Court decreed that her liberty be granted, and condemned defendant in costs.

The New York Tribune says that a state of things exists in Kentucky which will inevitably produce much discussion within the next two years on the subject of Slavery. The Legislature has at last agreed to submit to the people the question of calling a Convention to amend the Constitution. If the people vote in favor of a Convention two years in succession, it must then be held; and as Slavery is one of the prominent causes of dissatisfaction and uneasiness, it will hardly be possible to prevent a discussion of the subject in all its various bearings upon the prosperity of the State.

Prof. Meigs delivered a lecture in New York last week. His subject was the Origin of Language, and was handled in a manner evincing considerable research. He decidedly thought that Adam was Divinely inspired with language, or a mode of expressing his emotions to Madam Eve, and that the Hebrew is the oldest language of earth, notwithstanding the Chaldean has been considered in this light.

Mr. Espy having established the general rule that storms, during the winter months, travel from the West to the East, in the United States, generally beginning far West, and seldom breaking up till they pass off into the Atlantic, suggests that the seaport cities should cause a statement of the weather to be communicated daily to them, from all the different telegraphic stations West of them, and he thinks that even at present any intellectual person, who is acquainted with what is already known on the subject, would thus be able to form a pretty correct estimate, at least during the cold months, whether a storm of dangerous magnitude would reach his place, thirty or forty hours before its advent.

We published the statement of Mr. Harvey, that the laboring Irish, male and female, of this city, had remitted to their poor friends in Ireland during the past year the sum of $808,000. Mr. Harvey says in a note to the Post, that he has since received similar returns from Philadelphia and Baltimore, as follows: Amount of small drafts remitted to Ireland from Philadelphia in 1846, $170,150; from Baltimore, $23,500. Add New York, and we have a grand total of $1,001,650.

A meeting of the descendants of Thomas and Aquilla Chase and others was held at the Town House in Newbury on the 15th inst., to ascertain if possible the truth or falsity of the reports respecting the large estate having fallen to them in England. It is estimated that 600 persons were present, and though nothing important was elicited respecting the object which called them together, the meeting was a very agreeable one. A committee of five persons, viz. Joshua Coffin, of Newbury, Joshua Webster, of Lynn, Enoch M. Chase, of Canada West, Isaiah D. Pease, of Edgartown, and Ralph C. Huse, of Newburyport, were chosen to take such measures as might be deemed expedient, and to call a future meeting if necessary.

Hon. Henry A. Wise, United States Minister at Rio Janeiro, has written to the Patent Office a valuable letter, published in the Union, on topics of much agricultural interest. He recommends the transplanting of many Brazilian plants, especially of the Angola grass. The cotton about Rio Janeiro is said to be high and of good quality; the cereal gains to have degenerated. Mr. Wise says that great service can be rendered to the agriculture of our own country by attention to the productions of Brazil.

Gilbert Ogden, a countryman from S. Middletown, N. Y. while gaping at a bear near Washington market, was accosted by two men who informed him that they had found a pocket-book filled with bank bills, and would give it to him for $4 in cash, which proposition the simpleton agreed to; doubtless supposing he had "driven a great trade." On examining his prize, spurious bills on pretended banks of Canada, purporting to be $20, rolled around a half newspaper were developed.

There was a very destructive fire in Boston, on Thursday night, the 21st, inst., by which from 75 to 100 buildings were burnt. The weather was piercing cold, and much suffering was the consequence.

The Washington correspondent of the United States Gazette, "Oliver Oldschool," published in that paper of the 22d inst., his seven hundred and eighty-ninth letter! Assuming these letters to be double, (many of them are treble,) the postage, under the old law, would have been very near $300; under the new law, about $40.

The Cotton and Woolen Factory at Potter Hill, R. I., was burned on the morning of the 22d inst. The fire caught from a lamp which was accidentally tipped over into some cotton by a workman. Insured.

The 141st anniversary of the Birth of Benjamin Franklin was celebrated by the printers of Western New York, at the Blossom House, in Rochester, on Monday, the 18th inst.

A sentence containing 132 letters was, a few evenings since, transmitted from Philadelphia to Jersey City in the short space of one minute. These letters were written several times in succession without abbreviation, the characters being made with such exactness that they were read off with the greatest ease by the operator at Jersey City.

One hundred and thirty members of the Church of the Disciples (Unitarian) in Boston have appended their names to a solemn public declaration of their judgment that the war with Mexico is unjust and inhuman, and carried on from the lust of territory, and for the extension of slavery.

N. E. Johnson, formerly editor of the New York Evangelist, died on the 15th inst., at the hospital in Richmond, Va., of dropsy. He was attended in his last moments by several ministers of the gospel and brethren of the Sons of Temperance, of which order he was a member.

From official returns, it appears that two hundred and forty-two persons were arrested in the city of New York during nine days in this month, for drunkenness—from the fifth to the thirteenth inclusive. 161 of these were males, and 81 females.

There is a great deal of sickness in the Theological Department of Pennsylvania College at Gettysburgh. We understand that about twenty of the students are down with some fever of a typhoid character. There was one death on Sunday morning, 17th inst.

A. J. Tirrell, having been tried and acquitted on the charge of murder, and also on the charge of arson, plead guilty on the indictment of adultery, and was, last week, sentenced to three years' imprisonment.

A man convicted of murder in Louisiana, has been sentenced to 99 years imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

A horse belonging to Mr. S. Thorn, of Utica, died on the 3d of December, aged thirty-eight years. It is very seldom that a horse attains this age.

There has been some doubt whether the Court of Errors of the State of New York exists under the New Constiution. It was decided on Friday last that it does exist constitutionally.

There is only one convict in the Iowa Penitentiary, and he is an Indian.

DIED,

In New York City, on the morning of the 22d inst., of consumption, FRANKLIN W. STILLMAN, in the 29th year of his age.

For several years past, Bro. Stillman has been actively and usefully connected with the benevolent operations of our denomination. His judgment has been much relied upon, and his zeal and liberality have frequently led to the adoption and execution of important plans for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom. When overtaken by disease, and there seemed no hope of recovery, his principal regret was at being so soon called from the field of toil and usefulness. But this regret was checked by the assurance that He who had called him to a higher service could abundantly supply his place here. He was a much valued member of the Sabbath-keeping Church of New York, and while he lived cherished its welfare as one of the dearest objects of his heart. In his removal the church has sustained a heavy loss, which nothing but the power of Him in whom all fullness dwells can repair. A widow, a father, and a large circle of friends, mourn his death; yet they sorrow not as those who have no hope, being comforted in the assurance that he sleeps in Jesus. Throughout his illness, he evinced perfect resignation to the will of his Heavenly Father, and showed that his hope was fixed within the veil. No tormenting fear attended his dying moments, but peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. His remains were interred at Plainfield, N. J., where a large concourse of people assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to his memory. He sleeps by the side of two fond sisters, each of whom has fallen by the same disease, in the same month of the year, and at intervals of a year from each other. A funeral discourse was delivered on the occasion by Eld. T. B. Brown, from 1 Thess. 4: 13—"I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep," &c.

In Plainfield, Otsego Co., N. Y., on the 24th of October last, WILLIAM BASSETT, in the 94th year of his age. Mr. B. was a soldier of the Revolution, and a pensioner at the time of his death. He was also a soldier and a faithful follower of the Captain of our salvation, and a useful and steadfast member of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, N. Y. In his afflictions he had "the patience of the saints," and in the prospect of his approaching departure, he was filled with triumphant joy, in the reflection that he had fought a good fight, had finished his course, and had kept the faith, and in the hope of a crown of glory that will not fade away. "The memory of the just is blessed." W. B. M.

At New Market, N. J., January 15th, SARAH DUNHAM, consort of Dea. Abraham Dunham deceased, aged ninety-one years. She has been, from her youth, a devoted Christian, and her life has been adorned by a consistent deportment. Though for six years her mind has been diseased, and reason nearly dethroned, yet religion appeared to occupy all her thoughts. Almost with her last breath, while in the arms of her son-in-law Dea. L. Titsworth, she said, "I love God." At that moment the last flickering of the lamp went out to shine more brilliantly in heaven. W. B. G.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

N. B. No charges made unless satisfaction is given.

PROSPECTUS OF

THE NATIONAL ERA,

To be published at

THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The cause of Human Freedom calls for the establishment at the seat of the National Government of a Newspaper devoted to the support of its claims.

Circumstances and the present state of Public Sentiment are peculiarly propitious to such an undertaking.

The publication of an Anti-Slavery paper entitled "The National Era," will be accordingly commenced in the City of Washington, District of Columbia, on the first of January, 1847.

It will be edited by G. BAILEY, Jr., assisted by A. A. Phelps, and J. G. Whittier, Corresponding Editors. While due attention will be paid to current events, Congressional Proceedings, General Politics and Literature, the great aim of the paper will be a complete discussion of the Question of Slavery, and an exhibition of the duties of the Citizen in relation to it—especially will it explain and advocate the leading principles and measures of the Liberty Party—seeking to do this, not in the spirit of Party, but in the love of Truth—not for the triumph of Party, but for the establishment of Truth.

The journal will be printed weekly, on a mammoth sheet, of the finest quality, in handsome type, at the rate of Two Dollars a year, always in advance. This will be invariably adhered to.

All necessary arrangements have been made for giving stability to this important enterprise, and it is hoped that it may command the warm sympathy and prompt support of the friends of Liberty throughout the country.

Subscriptions may be forwarded to William Harned, No. 5 Spruce-st., New York City, or to the Publisher of the National Era, Washington.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

Miscellaneous.

ROBERT BURNS.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, writing from Scotland, says: "Burns, still only in the dawn of his celebrity, was invited to dine with one of the neighboring so-called gentry, (unhappily quite void of true gentle blood.) On arriving, he found his plate set in the servants' room! After dinner he was invited into a room where guests were assembled, and a chair being placed for him at the lower end of the board, a glass of wine was offered, and he was requested to sing one of his songs for the entertainment of the company. He drank off the wine, and thundered forth in reply his glorious song. 'For a' that and a' that,' which we here give, for we doubt not there may be, even in republican America, those who need the reproof as much, and with far less excuse than had that Scottish company:—

Is there for honest poverty
That hangs his head, and a' that?
The coward-slave, we pass him by,
We dare be poor for a' that!
For a' that and a' that,
Our toils obscure and a' that;
The rank is but the guinea stamp,
The man's the gowd for a' that.

What though on homely fare we dine,
Wear hoddin gray, and a' that?
Gie fools their silks and knaves their wine,
A man's a man for a' that;
For a' that and a' that,
Their tinsel show and a' that,
The honest man, though e'er sae poor,
Is king o' men for a' that.

Ye see yon birkie, ca'd a lord,
Wha struts and stares, and a' that?
Though hundreds worship at his word,
He's but a cbof for a' that;
For a' that and a' that,
His riband, star, and a' that,
The man of independent mind,
He looks and laughs at a' that.

A prince can mak' a belted knight,
A marquis, duke, and a' that;
But an honest man's aboon his might,
Guid faith, he manna fa' that!
For a' that and a' that,
Their dignities and a' that,
The pith of sense, and pride o' worth,
Are higher ranks than a' that.

Then let us pray that come it may,
As come it will for a' that,
That sense and worth o'er all the earth,
May bear the gree, and a' that;
For a' that and a' that,
It's coming yet for a' that,
That man to man, the wide warld o'er,
Shall brothers be for a' that.

And giving this prophecy and prayer, the nobleman of Nature left his churlish entertainers to hide their diminished heads in the home they had disgraced."

THE CROWNED HEADS OF EUROPE.

BY DR. BAIRD.

Eight of the twenty monarchs are Protestants; nine are Roman Catholics; two are of the Greek church, and one is a Mahomedan. Those belonging to the Greek church are the Emperor of Russia and the King of Greece. Four of them are men of irreproachable character. Many of them are as respectable as our public men whom we delight to honor. The Queens are all of spotless character, which could not have been said of former times.

The King of Prussia is a decidedly pious man. Several of the Queens are true Christians, as I think, and among them is the Queen of France. She reads many religious books. As to talent, Louis Phillippe, King of the French, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor of Russia, are admitted to rank first; and Louis Phillippe stands pre-eminently above all. He was educated at a French college; spent many years in foreign lands, and then sixteen years in quietly pursuing his studies. Talleyrand said he had no idea of his vast acquirements, before he was his minister after he became King. He speaks English with ease, and never pronounced but one word wrong, which was ice, which he calls hice. He said he and his brother hired a boat at Pittsburgh to go down the river, but was obstructed by the hice. That he had learned from the English cockneys, when he lived in England. He has no minister who is his equal.

The King of Prussia is nearly the equal of Louis Phillippi; he speaks English well, but not so well as the King of the French. He is a self-made man. He was not allowed to get his education of the German universities, as he desired, as it was thought degrading to the King's son to associate with other young men. He regrets to this day that he was not permitted to go to the university and associate with the students. The King of Sweden graduated at college, and is a fine scholar.

The King of Prussia is not popular. He is too good a man for that. He proposes many reforms, and pushes them forward with too much energy, to please the people.

The Emperor of Russia is not inferior in talent, but he came unexpectedly to the throne, at the age of twenty-seven or twenty-eight years —his brother, the law heir to the throne, having abdicated in his favor. He has no time to read. Being a resolute monarch, his duties are most arduous. He is most devoted to public affairs. I spoke to him about temperance societies, when he began to make the objections which were once so common here, that brandy was needful for laborers, to give them strength, and protect them in heat and cold. He also made objections on account of the revenue from that source, which is very great. He, however, at once perceived the force of my arguments, admitted their correctness, and said:—"As for the revenue we will let it go, and get a revenue somewhere else." Nicholas is very decided and independent.

A nobleman of great wealth and talent had governed his brother Alexander. When Nicholas came to the throne, in less than three days he came to see him unasked. Nicholas said to him, "Who asked you to appear before me? I know how you governed my brother, and imposed upon his weakness. I give you three days to arrange your affairs in St. Petersburgh, after which time you will retire to your country seat," which he did, and has remained there ever since.

The King of Sweden is a literary man, and the author of several books. He gave me a copy of his work on prison discipline, just published. The King of Holland is not so popular; is an older man, about fifty-four. He was distinguished at the battle of Waterloo, and badly wounded. The King of Denmark is a man of fair talents, but of no decision of character.

The manners of Princes are polished, easy and simple. Such are the characters of the nobles of Europe, whom I have seen. It is easy to converse with them. They are however more formal to diplomatists. There is more difficulty to get along with our distinguished men, who sometimes assume a tone and haughtiness which I never saw in a Prince. Their Monarchs ordinarily, and their Queens, dress in the same plain way as other well-bred people. In public they of course appear in splendor. The Queens wear, on ordinary occasions, little jewelry.

In the families of the Emperor of Russia and the King of the French, there is great affection.

THE PROPER TIME FOR CUTTING TIMBER.

Nine-tenths of the community think winter the proper time for this purpose, but the reason assigned, that the "sap is then in the roots," shows its futility, as it is evident to the most superficial observer, that there is nearly the same quantity of sap in the tree at all seasons. It is less active in the winter, and like all other moisture, is congealed during the coldest weather; yet when not actually frozen circulation is never entirely stopped in the living tree. Reason or philosophy would seem to indicate that the period of the maturity of the leaf, or from the last of June to the first of November, is the season for cutting timber in its perfection. Certain it is, that we have numerous examples of timber cut within that period, which has exhibited a durability twice or three times as great as that cut in winter, when placed under precisely similar circumstances. After it is felled, it should at once be peeled, drawn from the woods, and elevated from the ground to facilitate drying, and if it is intended to be used under cover, the sooner it is put there the better. Wood designed for fuel will spend much better when cut as above mentioned and immediately housed; but as this is generally inconvenient, from the labor of the farm being then required for the harvesting of the crops, it may be economical to cut it when there is most leisure.

GOOD WIVES.

That young lady will make a good wife who does not apologize when you find her at work in the kitchen, but continues her task until the work is finished.

When you hear a lady say, "I shall attend church, and wear my old bonnet and every-day gown, for I fear we shall have a rain-storm," depend upon it she will make a good wife.

When a daughter remarks, "Mother, I would not hire help, for I can assist you to do all the work in the kitchen," set it down that she will make somebody a good wife.

When you overhear a young woman saying to her father, "Don't purchase a very expensive or showy dress for me, but one that will wear best," you may be certain she will make a good wife.

When you see a female rise early, get breakfast, and do up her mother's work in season, and then sit down to sew or knit, depend upon it, she will make a good wife.

When you see a female anxious to learn a trade, so as to earn something to support herself, and perhaps assist her aged parents, you may be sure that she will make one of the best of wives.

The best qualities to look for in a wife are industry, humility, neatness, gentleness, benevolence, and piety. Where you find these there is no danger. You will obtain a treasure, and not regret your choice to the last period.

TEN GUINEAS WORTH OF ADVICE.

The following anecdote is told of the celebrated Henry Fielding:—The son of one Boaz de Paba, a celebrated Jew, was on the point of marrying a young Christian lady; his father made no objection to the intended wife's religion, but was greatly dissatisfied with the match on account of her small fortune, in consequence of which he refused his consent. The son, who was most desperately in love, threatened the father that he would marry her without his consent; and the father, in his turn, threatened that he would not give him a shilling. The young Jew answered that he would force him to do it; and that, if he refused dividing his substance with him, he would get himself baptized to enjoy the benefit of the English law, which (then) assigned to a Jew child becoming Christian the half of his father's property. Boaz, confounded at this answer, went to consult Fielding, to know if such a law really existed. Fielding told him that it certainly did exist, and was in full force; but added, if he would give him ten guineas he would put him in a way of frustrating his son's hopes, so that he should not be able to get a farthing. Boaz instantly told down ten guineas. Fielding having pocketed the money, told him his only remedy was to 'turn Christian himself!'

FARMERS AND THEIR CHILDREN.

The paramount duty of the agriculturist is to elevate his class, and place himself in the position to which he is entitled. No idea more fatal to the supremacy of the farmer ever possessed him, than that of educating some one child in particular for what is denominated a learned profession. Let agriculturists educate their children thoroughly, regardless of any such unfair and unjust consideration. Let them not give bread to one and stones and serpents to the others. Let them bear in mind that education adorns and improves the cultivator of the soil, as much as it does the lawyer, the doctor, or the divine. It is a false notion, and unworthy the citizens of a free republic, that education is not necessary to the cultivator of the soil. When we reflect that this is a free country, and that freedom can only be preserved by the pure light that is reflected by knowledge, can the cultivator of the soil hesitate a moment to put his shoulder to the wheel? If he loves his children, educate them; if he loves his country, educate them. It is a duty he owes both to children and country.

The Buffalo and the Wolf.—The American buffalo, terrible in its aspect, is dangerous only when driven to extremity by the hunter; and it has an absolute terror of the wolf. The latter, conscious of the superior strength of the buffalo, and of its inability to attack it singly, forms a pack of twenty or more individuals, which, advancing on the herd of buffaloes in a crescent, drives it before them with unabated speed, till the weakest drop, or the herd, in an ecstacy of terror, leap over a precipice, and there perish. No circus can produce such a scene, and it is difficult to conceive the grandure of it. Blood-thirsty and ravenous for their spoil, the wolves pursue with fiery speed, with every nerve and passion strained to the utmost tension, while the buffaloes, with their whole being absorbed in one feeling, fly with blinded terror, their eyes and nostrils inflamed with its agony, breathless and panting, their tongues protruding, and their shaggy hides embossed with foam. The eye beholds the scene with awe and without horror; nature is the prompter, and the boundless prairie the theatre.

THE HOLY LAND.

The present agitation among the Jews of Europe, in relation to the colonization of the land of their fathers, is worthy the attention of the friends of religion throughout Christendom. A society has been recently formed in London, composed of all sects, in promotion of this movement; and it is provided that it shall be entirely silent and neutral as to any point of religious controversy. Palestine is now readily reached from Western Europe. It is represented as almost depopulated; and as opening unequaled advantages to settlers. It is said that—

'A country once densely inhabited lies solitary—her pastoral hills unfrequented by the shepherd—her rich fields untilled, and shaggy with thistles and prickly shrubs—her villages sunk into heaps of ruins, and her cities without inhabitants. During the identical years in which Ireland quadrupled its population, the population of Palestine has sunk to a tenth. This is surely a very extraordinary fact; and when all seem to agree that there remains nothing but emigration for the sorely afflicted race of Israel in Poland, it seems scarce less generally held that the only land which remains for them to occupy is just the land of Palestine. Nor is it mere enthusiasts of the Jewish or Christian faith that unite in indicating this country as a country eminently fitted for colonization. We find it recommended by men of the most practical character.'

The Theatre a School of Morals.—Will any of you who have been to theatres, please to tell me whether virtue ever received important accessions from the gallery of theatres?

Will you tell me whether the pit is a place where an ordinarily modest man would love to seat his children?

Was ever a theatre known where a prayer at the opening, and a prayer at the close, would not be tormentingly discordant?

How does it happen that in a school for morals, the teachers never learn their own lessons?

Would you allow a son or a daughter to associate alone with actors or actresses?

Do these men who promote virtue so zealously when acting, take any part in public moral enterprises, when their stage dresses are off?

Which would surprise you most, to see actors steadily at church, or to see Christians steadily at a theatre? Would not both strike you as singular incongruities?

What is the reason that loose and abandoned men abhor religion in a Church, and love it so much in a theatre?

Since the theatre is the handmaid of virtue, why are drinking houses so necessary to its neighborhood, yet so offensive to Churches?

Effects of Tobacco.—Dr. Rush says of tobacco—"It impairs appetite, produces dyspepsia, tremors, vertigo, headache, and epilepsy. It injures the voice, destroys the teeth, and imparts to the complexion a disagreeable, dusky brown."

Dr. Boerhaave says that "since the use of tobacco has been so general in Europe, the number of hypochondriacal and consumptive complaints has increased by its use."

Dr. Cullen says: "I have known a small quantity snuffed up the nose to produce giddiness, stupor and vomiting. There are many instances of its more violent effects, even of its proving a mortal poison."

Dr. Darwin says, "It produces diseases of the salivary glands and the panereas, and injures the power of digestion."

Dr. Tiscott once saw the smoking of it prove fatal.

Our own highly distinguished Dr. Muzzy, speaks thus:—"Tobacco is one of the most active and deadly vegetable poisons known. It acts directly upon the nervous power, enfeebling, deranging, or extinguishing, the action of life."

Endorsing.—Governor Edwards, of Missouri, in his Message to the Legislature, places before that body, in a strong light, the evils which often accrue to families and communities, from the custom of endorsing. He says, with a mixture of gallantry and good sense, which we seldom meet with in public documents:—

"It might be well, then, before a man in a convivial moment, or when overcome by the persuasions of an imprudent friend, or deceived by the false representations of a bad man, puts his whole estate—the earnings of a long and laborious life, and of much toil and care, in jeopardy of the law, to require him at least to get the signature of his wife. If she is to be reduced to poverty, it may be as well to let her know it in advance, and to let her consent to it. This might remedy the evil to some extent, by adding a little more time, reflection and caution, to all such transactions, without preventing much of the good resulting from the practice. Experience has shown that the wife is a good adviser and a safe counsellor."

Hins to Retailers.—The editor of the Hartford "Charter Oak," in a recent account of a "trip to the Bay State," makes the following statement in reference to Blandford:—

"There have been in Blandford, since the incorporation of the town, thirty-eight tavern-keepers. Of these, three died of delirium tremens—seven became intemperate—one died in the poor-house—eighteen lost all their property—seventeen did not improve their pecuniary condition by the business—three only acquired property—four were cursed with intemperate wives—twenty-five sons, and four daughters, became intemperate!"

There is more true charity in one kind tear that falls in private for the sorrows and sufferings of others, than in a thousand guineas proudly ushered into the notice of the world, in all the pomp and parade of public contribution.

VARIETY.

The more quietly and peaceably we all get on, the better—the better for our neighbors—the better for ourselves. In nine cases out of ten, the wisest policy is, if a man cheats you, to quit dealing with him; if he is abusive, quit his company; if he slanders you, take care to live so that nobody will believe him; no matter who he is, or how he misuses you, the wisest way is generally to let him alone, for there is nothing better than this cool, calm, quiet way of dealing with the wrongs we meet with.

Memorable are the words of the Duke of Wellington to Sir Walter Scott, on his visit to the continent, after the scenes of Waterloo; "Believe me," said the Duke, "that nothing, except a battle lost, can be half so melancholy as a battle won. The bravery of my troops has hitherto saved me from that greater evil; but to win even such a battle as that of Waterloo, at the expense of the lives of so many gallant friends, could only be termed a heavy misfortune, were it not for its important results to the public benefit."

The editor of the Christian Citizen says: A gentleman whom we met a few days ago, stated that he had recently applied for a cornetcy, or for the lowest commission in the English Army, for a ward of his. The government price of this commission is £650, or nearly $2,250. He was told that there were already twelve thousand applications before his, for the same office! Here, then, it appears that there are parents and guardians in England so in love with military glory, as to be ready to pay £7,800,000, or nearly 40,000,000 dollars, for places in the army for their wards, or sons!

A clergyman addressed his people a few Sabbaths since as follows:—"I said to you, my dear hearers, on the day when we last lifted a collection, that philanthropy was the love of our species. From the amount obtained at that time, I fear you understood me to say specie. I trust your contributions of to-day will serve to show that you are no longer laboring under that mistake."

A strange occurrence took place in one of the French provinces, a short time since. A Frenchman who, in 1812, had gone with Napoleon to Russia, and was long since believed dead, suddenly returned. His wife, meantime, had been married to three other husbands, and had just buried the last of them, when her first returned from Russia, and she began married life once more anew, and under happy auspices.

How is it that some men, thought to be so old, still look so young; whilst others, thought to be so young, must still look old? The cause lies very frequently within themselves. Mr. Rant once, on being asked the reason, said—"I never ride when I can walk; I never eat but one dish at dinner; and never get drunk. My walking keeps my blood in circulation; my simple diet prevents indigestion; and never touching ardent spirits, my liver never fears being eaten up alive."

A man down East, who has occasionally been employed as a country schoolmaster, in speaking of the place where he lived, said—"I have lived to see the wilderness blossom as the rose, the village church spire glisten in the rays of the morning sun, and one night the stream rose twenty feet and carried away my mill, which cost one thousand dollars."

In an imaginary conversation between Petrarch and Boccaccio, from the pen of Walter Landor, there is the following passage:—"The damps of Autumn sink into the leaves, and prepare them for the necessity of their fall; and thus insensibly are we, as years close round us, detached from our tenacity to life by the gentle pressure of recorded sorrows."

The excess of females over males in Great Britain, is over half a million. Five hundred thousand women pining for a home to labor in, a husband to love, and children to cherish—is a desolate condition of a country. How many of these females have been denied the natural privileges of a human being by the bloody wars in which England has been engaged?

"There were three hours and a half lost by you this morning," a superintendent said to a tardy teacher. "I was only half an hour late," he replied. "True, but there were seven scholars waiting for you."

A Mr. John D. Pope, in the United States Gazette, thinks he has discovered the quadrature of the circle. He finds that if the diameter of a circle be 2-875, the circumference will be 9-032100, or if the diameter be 1, the circumference will be 3-1416. He asks the attention of mathematicians to this, and promises a demonstration should it be needed.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

Remittances and communications must be made in all cases without expense to the publishers. The former may always be done through a Post-master, by handing him the amount to be remitted, taking his receipt, and forwarding the receipt by mail, post paid; or the money may be enclosed in a letter, post paid, directed to the publishers.

N. B. The Postage on all these Periodicals is reduced by the late Post Office law, to about one-third the former rates, making a very important saving in the expense to mail subscribers.

 In most of the large cities and towns in the United States lying on the principal Railroad and Steamboats routes, these periodicals will be delivered FREE OF POSTAGE.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

Elihu Burritt, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in Advance.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life. It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

Worcester, Mass., June, 1846.

SUNDAY-MAIL REPORT.

BY RICHARD M. JOHNSON.

In Congress, House of Representatives, 5th March, 1830.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom the memorials were referred for prohibiting the transportation of Mails and the opening of Post Offices, on Sunday, report—

That the memorialists regard the first day of the week as a day set apart by the Creator for religious exercises; and consider the transportation of the mail, and the opening of the post offices on that day, a violation of religious duty, and call for a suppression of the practice. Others, by counter memorials, are known to entertain a different sentiment, believing that no one day of the week is holier than another. Others, holding the universality and immutability of the Jewish Decalogue, believe in the sanctity of the seventh day of the week as a day of religious devotion; and by their memorial now before the Committee, they also request that it may be set apart for religious purposes. Each has hitherto been left to the exercise of his own opinion; and it has been regarded as the proper business of government to protect all, and determine for none. But the attempt is now made to bring about a greater uniformity, at least, in practice; and, as argument has failed, the government has been called upon to interpose its authority to settle the controversy.

Congress acts under a Constitution of delegated and limited powers. The Committee look in vain to that instrument for a delegation of power authorizing this body to inquire and determine what part of time, or whether any, has been set apart by the Almighty for religious exercises. On the contrary, among the few prohibitions which it contains, is one that prohibits a religious test; and another, which declares thal Congress shall pass no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The Committee might here rest the argument, upon the ground that the question referred to them, does not come within the cognizance of Congress; but the perseverance and zeal with which the memorialists pursue their object, seems to require a further elucidation of the subject. And as the opposers of Sunday mails disclaim all intention to unite church and state, the Committee do not feel disposed to impugn their motives; and whatever may be advanced in opposition to the measure, will arise from the fears entertained of its fatal tendency to the peace and happiness of the nation. The catastrophe of other nations, furnished the framers of the Constitution, a beacon of awful warning, and they have evinced the greatest possible care in guarding against the same evil.

The law, as it now exists, makes no distinction as to the days of the week, but is imperative that the postmasters shall attend at all reasonable hours, in every day, to perform the duties of their offices; and the Postmaster General has given his instructions to all postmasters, that, at post offices, where the mail arrives on Sunday, the office is to be kept open one hour, or more, after the arrival and assorting the mail; but in case that would interfere with the hours of public worship, the office is to be kept open for one hour after the usual time of dissolving the meeting. This liberal construction of the law does not satisfy the memorialists. But the Committee believe that there is not just cause of complaint, unless it be conceded that they have a controlling power over the consciences of others. If Congress shall, by the authority of the law, sanction the measure recommended, it would constitute a legislative decision of a religious controversy, in which even Christians themselves are at issue. However suited such a decision may be to an ecclesiastical council, it is incompatible with a republican legislature, which is purely for political, and not religious purposes.

In our individual character, we entertain opinions, and pursue a corresponding practice upon the subject of religion. However diversified these may be, we all harmonize as citizens, while each is willing that the other shall enjoy the same liberty which he claims for himself. But in our representative character, our individual character is lost. The individual acts for himself—the representative, for his constituents. He is chosen to represent their political, and not their religious views—to guard the rights of man, not to restrict the rights of conscience. Despots may regard their subjects as their property, and usurp the divine prerogative of prescribing their religious faith. But the history of the world furnishes the melancholy demonstration, that the disposition of one man to coerce the religious homage of another, springs from an unchastened ambition, rather than a sincere devotion to any religion. The principles of our government do not recognize in the majority, any authority over the minority, except in matters which regard the conduct of man to his fellow man. A Jewish monarch, by grasping the holy censer, lost both his sceptre and his freedom; a destiny as little to be envied may be the lot of the American people, who hold the sovereignty of power, if they, in the person of their representatives, shall attempt to unite, in the remotest degree, church and state.

From the earliest period of time, religious teachers have attained great ascendency over the minds of the people; and in every nation, ancient or modern, whether Pagan, Mohamedan, or Christian, have succeeded in the incorporation of their religious tenets with the political institutions of their country. The Persian idols, the Grecian oracles, the Roman auguries, and the modern priesthood of Europe, have all, in their turn, been the subject of popular adulation, and the agents of political deception. If the measure recommended should be adopted, it would be difficult for human sagacity to foresee how rapid would be the succession, or how numerous the train of measures which might follow, involving the dearest rights of all—the rights of conscience. It is perhaps fortunate for our country, that the proposition should have been made at this early period, while the spirit of the revolution yet exists in full vigor. Religious zeal enlists the strongest prejudices of the human mind; and, when misdirected, excites the worst passions of our nature, under the delusive pretext of doing God service. Nothing so infuriates the heart to deeds of rapine and blood; nothing is so incessant in its toils; so persevering in its determinations; so appalling in its course; or so dangerous in its consequences. The equality of rights secured by the Constitution, may bid defiance to mere political tyrants; but the robe of sanctity too often glitters to deceive. The Constitution regards the conscience of the Jew as sacred as that of the Christian, and gives no more authority to adopt a measure affecting the conscience of a solitary individual, than that of a whole community. The representative who would violate this principle, would lose his delegated character, and forfeit the confidence of his constituents. If Congress shall declare the first day of the week holy, it will not convert the Jew nor the Sabbatarian. It will dissatisfy both; consequently, convert neither. Human power may extort vain sacrifices; but Deity alone can command the affections of the heart. It must be recollected, that, in the earliest settlement of this country, the spirit of persecution which drove the pilgrims from their native home, was brought with them to their new habitations; and that some Christians were scourged, and others were put to death, for no other crime than dissenting from the dogmas of their rulers.

With these facts before us, it must be a subject of deep regret, that a question should be brought before Congress, which involves the dearest privileges of the Constitution, and even by those who enjoy its choicest blessings. We should all recollect that Cataline, a professed patriot, was a traitor to Rome; Arnold, a professed whig, was a traitor to America; and Judas, a professed disciple, was a traitor to his Divine Master.

With the exception of the United States, the whole human race, consisting it is supposed of eight hundred millions of rational beings, is in religious bondage; and in reviewing the scenes of persecution which history every where presents, unless the Committee could believe that the cries of the burning victim, and the flames by which he is consumed, bear to heaven a grateful incense, the conclusion is inevitable, that the line cannot be too strongly drawn between church and state. If a solemn act of legislation shall, in one point, define the law of God, or point out to the citizen one religious duty, it may with equal propriety define every part of divine revelation, and enforce every religious obligation, even to the forms and ceremonies of worship, the endowment of the church, and the support of the clergy.

It was with a kiss that Judas betrayed his Divine Master, and we should all be admonished, no matter what our faith may be, that the rights of conscience cannot be so successfully assailed as under the pretext of holiness. The Christian religion made its way into the world in opposition to all human governments. Banishment, tortures, and death, were inflicted in vain to stop its progress. But many of its professors, as soon as clothed with political power, lost the meek spirit which their creed inculcated, and began to inflict on other religions, and on dissenting sects of their own religion, persecutions more aggravated than those which their own apostles had endured. The ten persecutions of pagan emperors were exceeded in atrocity by the massacres and murders perpetrated by Christian hands; and in vain shall we examine the records of imperial tyranny for an engine of cruelty equal to the Holy Inquisition. Every religious sect, however meek its origin, commenced the work of persecution as soon as it acquired political power. The framers of the Constitution recognized the eternal principle, that man's relation with his God is above human legislation, and his rights of conscience unalienable. Reasoning was not necessary to establish this truth; we are conscious of it in our own bosoms. It is this consciousness which, in defiance of human laws, has sustained so many martyrs in tortures and in flames. They felt that their duty to God was superior to human enactments, and that man could exercise no authority over their consciences; it is an inborn principle which nothing can eradicate.

The bigot, in the pride of his authority, may lose sight of it—but strip him of his authority; prescribe a faith to him which his conscience rejects; threaten him in turn with the dungeon and the faggot; and the spirit which God has implanted in him, rises up in rebellion and defies you. Did the primitive Christians ask that government should recognize and observe their religious institutions? All they asked was toleration; all they complained of was persecution. What did the Protestants of Germany, or the Huguenots of France, ask of their Catholic superiors? Toleration. What do the persecuted Catholics of Ireland ask of their oppressors? Toleration.

Do not all men in this country enjoy every religious right which martyrs and saints ever asked? Whence, then, the voice of complaint? Who is it, that, in the full enjoyment of every principle which human laws can secure, wishes to wrest a portion of these principles from his neighbor? Do the petitioners alledge that they cannot conscientiously participate in the profits of mail contracts and post offices, because the mail is carried on Sunday? If this be their motive, then it is worldly gain which stimulates to action, and not virtue or religion. Do they complain that men, less conscientious in regard to the Sabbath, obtain advantages over them, by receiving their letters and attending to their contents? Still their motive is worldly and selfish. But if their motive be to induce Congress to sanction by law their religious opinions and observances, then their efforts are to be resisted, as in their tendency fatal both to religious and political freedom. Why have the petitioners confined their prayers to the mails? Why have they not requested that the government be required to suspend all its executive functions on that day? Why do they not require us to enact that our ships shall not sail—that our armies shall not march—that officers of justice shall not seize the suspected, or guard the convict? They seem to forget that government is as necessary on Sunday as on any other day of the week. The spirit of evil does not rest on that day. It is the government, ever active in its functions, which enables us all, even the petitioners, to worship in our churches in peace. Our government furnishes very few blessings like our mails. They bear, from the centre of our republic to its distant extremes, the acts of our legislative bodies, the decision of the judiciary, and the orders of the executive. Their speed is often essential to the defense of the country, the suppression of crime, and the dearest interests of the people. Were they suppressed one day of the week, their absence must be often supplied by public expresses, and, besides, while the mail bags might rest, the mail coaches would pursue their journey with their passengers. The mail bears, from one extreme of the Union to the other, letters of relatives and friends, preserving a communication of heart between those far separated, and increasing the most pure and refined pleasures of our existence; also the letters of commercial men convey the state of the markets, prevent ruinous speculations, and promote general as well as individual interest; they bear innumerable religious letters, newspapers, magazines, and tracts, which reach almost every house throughout this wide republic. Is a conveyance of these a violation of the Sabbath? The advance of the human race in intelligence, virtue, and religion itself, depends in part upon the speed in which the past is disseminated. Without an interchange between one country and another, and between different sections of the same country, every improvement in moral and political science, and the arts of life, would be confined to the neighborhood where it originated. The more rapid and the more frequent this interchange, the more rapid will be the march of intellect, and the progress of improvement. The mail is the chief means by which intellectual light irradiates to the extremes of the republic. Stop it one day in seven, and you retard one-seventh the advancement of our country. So far from stopping the mail on Sunday, the Committee would recommend the use of all reasonable means to give it a greater expedition and a greater extension. What would be the elevation of our country, if every new conception could be made to strike every mind in the Union at the same time? It is not the distance of a province or state from the seat of government which endangers its separation, but it is the difficulty and unfrequency of intercourse between them. Our mails reach Missouri and Arkansas in less time than they reached Kentucky and Ohio in the infancy of their settlements; and now, when there are three millions of people extending a thousand miles west of the Alleghanies, we hear less of discontent, than when there were a few thousand scattered along their western base.

To stop the mails one day in seven, would be to thrust the whole western country, and other distant parts of the republic, one day's journey from the seat of government. But, were it expedient to put an end to the transmission of letters and newspapers on Sunday, because it violates the law of God, have not the petitioners begun wrong in their efforts? If the arm of government be necessary to compel man to respect and obey the laws of God, do not the State governments possess infinitely more power in this respect? Let the petitioners turn to them, and see if they can induce the passage of laws to respect the observance of the Sabbath; for, if it be sinful for the mail to carry letters on Sunday, it must be equally sinful for individuals to write, carry, receive, or read them. It would seem to require that these acts should be made penal, to complete the system. Traveling on business or recreation, except to and from church; all printing, carrying, receiving, and reading newspapers; all conversations and social intercourse, except upon religious subjects, must necessarily be punished to suppress the evil. Would it not also follow, as an inevitable consequence, that every man, woman, and child should be compelled to attend meeting? and, as only one sect, in the opinion of some, can be deemed orthodox, must it not be determined, by law, which that is, and compel all to have those teachers, and contribute to their support? If minor punishments would not restrain the Jew, or the Sabbatarian, or the Infidel, who believe Saturday to be the Sabbath, or disbelieve the whole, would not the same system require that we should resort to imprisonment, banishment, the rack, and the faggot, to force men to violate their own consciences, or compel them to listen to doctrines which they abhor? When State governments shall have yielded to these measures, it will be time enough for Congress to declare that the rattling of the mail coach shall no longer break the silence of this despotism. It is the duty of this government to afford to all—to Jew or Gentile, Pagan or Christian—the protection and the advantages of our benignant institution, on Sunday, as well as every day of the week.

Although the government will not convert itself into an ecclesiastical tribunal, it will practice upon the maxim laid down by the Founder of Christianity, that it is lawful to do good on the Sabbath day. If the Almighty has set apart the first day of the week as a time which man is bound to keep holy, and devote exclusively to his worship, would it not be more congenial to the precepts of Christians to appeal exclusively to the great Lawgiver of the universe to aid them in making men better—in correcting their practices by purifying their hearts? Government will protect them in their efforts. When they shall have so instructed the public mind, and awakened the consciences of individuals, as to make them believe that it is a violation of God's law to carry the mail, open offices, or receive letters on Sunday, the evil of which they complain will cease of itself, without any exertion of the strong arm of the civil power. When man undertakes to be God's avenger, he becomes a demon. Driven by the frenzy of a religious zeal, he loses every gentle feeling, forgets the most sacred precepts of his creed, and becomes ferocious and unrelenting.

Our fathers did not wait to be oppressed, when the mother country asserted and exercised an unconstitutional power over them. To have acquiesced in the tax of three pence upon a pound of tea, would have led the way to the most cruel exactions; they took a bold stand against the principle, and liberty and independence was the result. The petitioners have not requested Congress to suppress Sunday mails upon the ground of political expediency, but because they violate the sanctity of the first day of the week.

This being the fact, and the petitioners having indignantly disclaimed even the wish to unite politics and religion, may not the Committee reasonably cherish the hope that they will feel reconciled to its decision in the case; especially, as it is also a fact, that the counter memorials, equally respectable, oppose the interference of Congress, upon the ground that it would be legislating upon a religious subject, and therefore unconstitutional.

Resolved, That the Committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

GLORIES OF HEAVEN.

"Far from these narrow scenes of night,
Unbounded glories rise,
And realms of joy and pure delight,
Unknown to mortal eyes."

There is the throne of God and the Lamb. There the pure river of the water of life will flow forever and ever. There saints with angels will offer unceasing praise. There our departed Christian friends are mingling their voices with the immortal choir. There they shout, "Alleluia, Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." "Blessings and honor and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, forever and ever." There will be the eternal home of the humble Christian. Yes, to God be the glory, he will reach that glorious place free from the cares and troubles of life. There will be the consummation of unending happiness. There will be an abundance of pleasures increasing with the extending capacity of the immortals. Seek, then, these unending glories where unending glories reign. In view of such bright scenes, bid adieu to the vanities and fading glories of this earth, by renouncing all sin, and by conforming to the doctrine of Christ, remembering,

That no cloud those blissful regions know—
Realms ever bright and fair!
For sin, the source of mortal woe,
Can never enter there.

O may the heavenly prospect fire
Our hearts with ardent love!
Till wings of faith and strong desire,
Bear all our thoughts above.

THE MISSION OF ROGER WILLIAMS.

But it is not upon his writings that the fame of Roger Williams most depends, or that his claims to the respect and gratitude of the world principally rest. His name, especially in this country, has long since become identified with the great principle of political philosophy, which he spent the greater part of his life, and his best energies, in supporting and carrying into practice. This principle of the supremacy of conscience, the underived independence of the soul, now so familiar and well understood, was, in the age in which he lived, a startling paradox, and, in the judgment of his contemporaries, prolific only of evils both to the church and the state. He alone conceived it in its true import and application, and he fearlessly announced it as an elementary truth in morals. Starting with the great doctrines of the reformation, the right of private judgment, and man's accountability to God alone for his religious faith and worship, he demonstrated his sublime principle. To set it forth, to vindicate it from the persecutions with which it was assailed, to rescue it from the selfish ends to which it was perverted, this was the noble mission of his life, to which he sacrificed comfort and ease, and all his hopes of worldly preferment. In the pursuit of this end he never wavered. In public and private life, as a minister and a legislator, amid the rudeness and penury of his plantation in the wilderness, or in the society of scholars and statesmen in the mother country, he kept it constantly in view, as the pole-star of his hopes and aims.

His days were passed amid the obscurity of a New England settlement, a sphere too narrow and humble to call out the full energies of his character. Had he returned, like Sir Henry Vane, to England, he might have asserted his noble principles on the floor of the British Parliament, or uttered them at the Board of the Council of State. His influence could not fail to be felt, and his name might have stood, on the page of English history, among the brightest and best of the republican statesmen of the time. But he was reserved for a less conspicuous, though scarcely an humbler destiny, to become the founder of a state in the American confederacy, and the first advocate, in modern Christendom, of the entire freedom of conscience. The truths for whose sake he was persecuted and banished, and which he toiled so long to establish, have become incorporated into our whole social system, and like many of the most useful arts, from their very commonness and familiarity, have now ceased to remind us of their original discoverer and advocate. But he, who analyzes our American civilization, and traces the influences that now control it back to the sources whence they sprang, will not fail to appreciate the character, and do honor to the name, of ROGER WILLIAMS. MODE OF PREACHING IN INDIA.

I one day preached on the general corruption of mankind, and the impossibility of being saved by our own works. A person present expressed his surprise at my assertions, and thought it strange that I should enforce the necessity of our keeping the whole law, if we desired to be saved not by our own merits. It was unjust, he urged, to consider a man cursed who confirmeth not all the words of the law to do them; and cried out, "How can this be true, that whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all? How can this be? If I keep six of the commandments, and break four, have I not kept the majority? And is not God in justice bound to give me heaven, because I have kept more than I have broken?"

In explaining these results, we can easily make ourselves understood to cultivated minds; but I could never make the common people understand me without a parable. Instead of entering into an argument, I have often replied by describing a scene on the Ganges: "The day was dismal, the wind roared, the thunder pealed, the lightning was vivid, the waves of the Ganges raged, the stream was swollen, and the current rapid, the infuriated elements threatened destruction to every vessel on its waters; no boat could outlive the storm for any length of time. But, see, what is that? It is a boat in distress, filled with people, rapidly hurrying along by the waves. Between the peals of thunder, the shrieks of the people are heard; they fear the rocks on the shore to which the current is driving them. Could they but be drawn into this creek, they would be safe. Those on shore look anxiously around, and discover a chain lying near them. A man instantly fastens a stone to the rope, binds the other end to the chain, and flings the stone into the boat. The rope is caught; the people eagerly lay hold on the chain, while those on shore begin to draw them, amid the raging elements, toward the creek. They already rejoice at the prospect of deliverance; but when they are within a few yards of the land, one link of the chain breaks; I do not say ten links, but one link, in the middle of the chain. What shall these distressed people do now? Shall they cling to the unbroken links?" "No! no!" exclaimed one of my hearers, "overboard with the chain, or it will sink them the sooner." What then shall they do? "Cast themselves upon the mercy of God," exclaimed another. "True," I replied, "if one commandment be broken, it is as though all of them were broken; we cannot be saved by them; we must trust in the mercy of God, and lay hold on the almighty hand of Christ, which is stretched out to save us." I have frequently used this parable, and always found it to answer.

THE OLD BURMAN INQUIRER.

The Rev. Mr. Kincaid says, when he was traveling in the northern part of Burmah, on the borders of China, he was one evening, on the shore of the river, engaged in reading and expounding, and distributing tracts, until ten o'clock at night. He then put off in his little boat a short distance from the shore, to guard against thieves, and lay down to sleep. About midnight he was awakened by a voice, calling, "Teacher, Teacher," in the Burman language. As he awoke the stars were shining dimly, and he could just see the outlines of the figure of an old man standing in the water, by the boat. He asked him what he wanted, and the old man replied, that he wanted a tract which told about God. With a very deferential air, the applicant appeared to think he had intruded, gave an account of his having been absent from the village the day previous, of his return in the evening, and of his reading one or two of the tracts, and his great desire to obtain some of the books. He had never before heard of a book which so spoke of the divine law and God. He spoke like a man who had been accustomed to read and reflect. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians and another tract were given to him, and in the Oriental style he made profuse acknowledgements, and retired filled with great joy.

CHINESE WORSHIP.

The Chinese worship the spirits of their ancestors on the occasion of a festival, called "the feast of the tombs." They suppose that spirits in the eternal world eat, drink, and sleep, and need money, as we do in this life. Large supplies of food are provided, and gongs and drums are beaten to give notice to the hungry ghosts that the feast is ready, and that they are welcome to feed on the savory fumes. In order to send money to them, they burn paper covered with gold and silver leaf, which they say is thus turned into real money, passing with the smoke into the invisible world. They also cut paper into the shape of coats and other garments, houses, chairs, tables, fans, pots, jugs, and various other things, and feel quite satisfied that their friends receive the benefit of what is sent them. The dishes of food which they offer them seem full to overflowing; but, in reality, the middle of each dish is filled with coarse paper and stalks of vegetables, with the provisions thinly scattered over the top. When a missionary asked them why they tried to cheat the spirits of their departed friends, they said that the ghosts knew no better, and by this means they made a little go a great way.

REPROOFS OF MURMURING.—Ebenezer Adams, an eminent member of the society of Friends, on visiting a lady of rank, whom he found, six months after the death of her husband, on a sofa covered with black cloth, and in all the dignity of wo, approached her with great solemnity, and gently taking her by the hand, thus addressed her:—"So, friend, I see, then, thou hast not yet forgiven God Almighty." This reproof had so great an effect on the lady, that she immediately laid aside the symbols of grief, and again entered on the important duties of life.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, February 4, 1847.

HOW WAS THE SABBATH CHANGED?

Mr. Brown's Ninth Lecture upon the subject of the Sabbath, was delivered at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in this City on Sunday evening last. Its object was to show the process by which the Sunday festival came to be substituted in place of the Bible Sabbath. We wish we could give an account of the Lecture which would leave such an impression upon the reader as we are sure was left upon every hearer. But as this is impossible in a hasty sketch, we must content ourselves with simply stating the several positions established by the speaker.

He commenced by saying, that many persons will acknowledge, that so far as the scriptural argument is concerned, the evidence in favor of the seventh day is overwhelming. Nevertheless the fact stares them in the face, that almost the whole Christian world is in the observance of another day; and in their minds it is important to account for this. But however important this may be for other reasons, he could not admit that it is absolutely necessary in order that a Christian may decide what his duty is. As a Protestant, he could admit of no other rule of duty than the Bible. That is the only rule which will be recognized in the day of judgment, and it ought to be the only one recognized here. This was not said because he was unwilling to bring his cause to the test of history, but merely to show that he did not need any help from that source. Only those who are lame in the Scriptures need the crutch of history to help them along.

It is well, said the speaker, before entering upon an examination of history, to inquire what kind of historical developments the Word of God teaches us to expect. To assist in deciding this question, he reviewed the vision of the prophet Daniel concerning things to come, recorded in the seventh chapter of that prophecy. The "little horn," spoken of as thinking "to change times and laws," was shown to be nothing else than the Papal Power, or Man of Sin. In respect to the times and laws changed, he maintained that this could not refer to changes in any of the festivals or holy seasons peculiar to the Mosaic economy, because under that economy the "little horn" had no existence. It could not refer to the numerous festivals appointed by the church of Rome, because the prophet speaks not of the appointment of times, but of the change of them. It must therefore refer to some "times" of divine appointment, which continue to be binding upon men under the Christian dispensation. The only season answering to this description, binding upon Gentile Christians, is the Sabbath of the fourth commandment; and to this the prophecy of Daniel must be referred. History shows how completely the prophecy has been fulfilled. The first day of the week, upon which God began his work, and commanded men to begin theirs, has been made a day of rest; while the last day of the week, upon which God rested from his work, and commanded men to rest, has been made the busiest day of the seven.

Having thus shown what kind of historical developments were to be expected, he next proceeded to look at the facts in the case. The first fact to which he called attention, was that recorded in the second chapter of 2d Thessalonians, viz. that the mystery of iniquity began to work even in Paul's time. From this he argued the fallacy of the common notion, that because the practice of observing the first day can be traced back to near the age of the apostles, it must therefore have commenced under their sanction and authority. There is abundant reason to be suspicious on this point, since it is just as likely, in view of its age, to be one of the fruits of the mystery of iniquity, as it is to be an apostolic practice. In this connection he wished to make one distinction which it is important to bear in mind—the distinction between a Sabbath and a festival. A Sabbath is a day in which no servile work may be done. But a festival is merely the commemoration of some important event by public worship during a part of a day, while the rest of the day may be spent in labor or amusement. In the investigation of this subject, it is necessary to inquire not only whether the first day of the week was observed at an early period, but also how it was observed, and whether by divine authority.

Mr. Brown then entered upon a minute examination of the controversy which arose between the Eastern and Western Churches, in the second century, concerning the proper time and manner of observing the Passover. The Asiatic churches maintained that it should begin at the same time that the Jews began their Passover, and end in like manner, without regard to the particular day of the week. The Western churches, on the other hand, maintained, that the Passover should commence each year on the same day of the week; so that the day after the Passover, on which the sufferings of Christ were commemorated, might always fall on a Friday; and the third day after the Passover, on which the resurrection was commemorated, might always occur on a Sunday. The controversy about this question was continued until the Eastern Churches, for the sake of peace, partially adopted the custom of the Western Churches. This notice of it was introduced to show the difficulty of understanding some of the writers who are quoted in favor of the first-day of the week. They lived and wrote during the progress of this controversy; and such is the nature of their testimony concerning the observance of the first day, that it is not easy to determine whether they allude to it as being the constant weekly practice of the churches throughout the year, or whether they simply have reference to an annual observance of it during the progress of the Passover festival. Yet this point is absolutely necessary to be settled before their testimony can be available. Take the testimony of Justin Martyr, A. D. 140. He says, that "on the day called Sunday is an assembly of all who live in city or country, and the memoirs of the apostles and the writings of the prophets are read." It cannot be determined from this that he intended any thing more than that they did this on the Sunday in which the church of Rome, a short time after, is known to have closed the paschal feast, which was observed annually. Nor is his testimony any more explicit in regard to the extent of this practice, since by the expression "in the city and in the country," it is not certain that he intended any thing more than the city of Rome and its suburbs. Still less does this testimony make any thing for the observance of the first day as the Sabbath, because he adds, "and after certain religious devotions, all returned home to their labors." All the quotations commonly produced from the Fathers of the first three centuries were brought under consideration, and it was shown that not one of them testifies explicitly to the weekly observance of the first day, or that it was observed as the Sabbath. The annual observance of the day once adopted, it gradually grew into a weekly custom, in connection with the observance of several other holy days which are now rejected by all consistent Protestants.

Mr. Brown then took up three occurrences in the fourth century, which had an important bearing upon the subject—viz. the conversion of Constantine to Christianity, the Council of Nice, and the Council of Laodicea. He quoted the acts and decrees issued by the Emperor and these Councils, in favor of the first day, and in opposition to the Sabbath—thus showing that it was through the fulminating decrees of the Bishops of Rome, and the decisions of Councils, backed by the Roman Emperor, that the first day was raised to honor as a festival of the church, and the Sabbath of the Lord trampled under foot. Thus the "mystery of iniquity," which had been infusing itself into the churches from the days of Paul, and had at length become consolidated by a union with the civil power, succeeded at last in "changing times and laws," in fulfillment of the prophecy of Daniel.

The lecturer concluded with a brief reference to what he regarded as the principal reasons which led to the change, viz. hatred of the Jews, and a disposition to take advantage of the veneration which the heathen entertained for the first day of the week as the day of the Sun. His next lecture will be in continuation of the historical argument, and will complete the series.

TRIUMPH OF CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

The recent decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio, in what is called the "Jew Case," and in which it is declared "that the ordinance of the Cincinnati Council, prohibiting trading, bartering and selling on Sunday, is void as to those who conscientiously observe the seventh day as the Sabbath," is a full vindication of the religious rights of the citizens of that State, and a perfect triumph for Sabbath-keepers throughout the land; upon whom onerous and unequal burdens have been imposed by the Sunday laws, and thereby most invidious and unjust distinctions made in the enjoyment of religious privileges among the compeers of the Republic.

The editor of the "Palladium," published in this place, who is a lawyer, and was a member of the last Legislature, and voted against the exemption feature to favor the Seventh-day Baptists, on the passage of the Act to enforce the observance of Sunday, makes the following remarks on the above decision:—

"This is an exceedingly important decision, settling, conclusively, a principle which has been long contended for by that respectable and influential class of Christians, the Seventh-day Baptists. This sect is quite numerous in this State, and are every where distinguished as a quiet, intelligent and pious people."

Take courage, brethren, your deliverance is at hand. An independent Judiciary—the constituted tribunal to test constitutional rights—is the true resort, and the only resort for Sabbath-keepers, to demand the restoration of their charter-rights as citizens of the Republic—not to beg, as a favor, what belongs to them as a right, from truckling politicians, and compound for stinted relief. We have rights, and by demanding them, at the proper tribunal, they cannot be denied to us. I repeat what I asserted in a former communication: the Supreme Court of our Republic will never declare to the world, that the American Republic does not tolerate Religious Freedom! They cannot, they never will, stultify our Constitution, and make our Government a laughing-stock to all Europe—to the whole civilized world.

Nearly the same question will be brought before the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania at the May Sessions, on an appeal of the German Seventh-day Baptists of Franklin County, who have been prosecuted for laboring on Sunday on their secluded farms. From some knowledge of the legal acumen and purely republican principles of the distinguished jurists now occupying that Bench, all being deeply versed in constitutional law, I have no apprehensions for the result. They must succeed in having that iniquitous law removed, and having their inalienable religious privileges, as freemen, restored to them. If the Supreme Court of Ohio has decided thus in deference to the Jews, the Supreme Bench of Pennsylvania will, certainly, extend the same rights and immunities to an irreproachable body of Christians—to a people known from the earliest settlement of the State, as peaceable, conscientious citizens, who rendered the Government much good service during the war of Independence, and made more sacrifices, as a people, than any other denomination of Christians in the Commonwealth. Take courage, brethren, your deliverance is at hand. Thank God, and persevere. Take courage, I say, the foul blots, contravening your religious privileges, and oppressing your rights as freemen, will be wiped from every statute book in the land; you will no longer be robbed of an additional sixth portion of your precious time, but soon you shall again worship God on his own sanctified day, as your fathers did, and give the remainder of the week to your own wonted, unostentatious industry; "there being none to make you afraid," under the panoply of a free, rescued Constitution, and the trusty shield of an unsullied Judiciary, W. MATTERS AND THINGS AT ALBANY.

Rechabite Celebration—Mexican War—Anti-Rent Convicts Pardoned—Sabbath Petitions.

Albany, January 28, 1847.

On Tuesday evening, the 26th inst., the Rechabites, Sons of Temperance, Daughters of Rechab, and of Temperance, held a celebration. A procession was formed in Broadway, which marched through State, South Pearl, and Hudson streets, to the Methodist church. The exercises at the church were designed to be a splendid exhibition of the exclusive benevolence and temperance of the Rechabites; and if full credit is to be given to the speakers on that occasion, then the church, with its ministers and laboring members, had better yield, and conclude that wisdom, benevolence, and temperance, are to die with the Rechabites, and that they have both deceived themselves and others in insisting that the Gospel alone was necessary to make a man what he should be. The first speaker undertook to make the audience believe, that the present Order of Rechabites had its origin with the cotemporaries of Moses, and that it was instituted to reprove the prevailing crime of the Jews, to wit, drunkenness. In this effort, he made most palpable perversions of the Rechabite's Bible—the thirty-fifth chapter of Jeremiah.

Modern Rechabiteism, I regard as one of the devices of satan to hinder the progress of the church. It comes professing to be the Simon Pure Temperance Organization, promising to do what temperance men, ministers, and the church, have not done and can not do; and yet, in the outset, it demands from three to ten dollars of a man before it will extend to him any temperance influence or encouragement; and after that, it demands four dollars per year for that continued influence, besides extras for regalia, rules and bye-laws, clearance cards, &c. This is the sine qua non temperance of the Rechabites. There is nothing in the rules of the Order, requiring any thing but individual influence in the cause of temperance. The drunkard who has become impoverished by his inebriation, is passed by of these exclusives, unless he can convince them by the plea of the three, five, or ten "almighty dollars," as his age may be, that he wishes to reform, and wishes their aid for this purpose. It next claims great benevolence, of which it has not a particle, and against the exercise of which it exerts a positive influence. It is nothing but a Mutual Insurance Company. Its members, in case of sickness, are entitled to four dollars per week; in case of death, to thirty dollars for funeral expenses. And this he pays for by his initiation fees, and weekly and monthly dues. The inevitable result of this system is, to exclude all from the benefit of their charity, by the plea that they pay four dollars a year for benevolent purposes, let others do the same and all will be provided for. For all the good that the Rachabites are doing, let them have the praise. But when they profess to be the embodiment of temperance and benevolence, let them give better evidence of it than they have as yet, or be rejected as vain pretenders. No Christian can consistently become a Rechabite. In doing so, he leaves the substance and embraces a shadow. Temperance and benevolence are the fruits of religion; and every Christian aware of his responsibilities and of his noble calling, must regard the exercise of these as only a part of his duty.

January 27.—The Legislature is "hastening slowly" with the people's business. Yesterday the Assembly passed a bill making an appropriation of $10,000 for the first regiment of New York State Volunteers. It was opposed and voted against by the Democrats on account of the preamble, charging the President with making war. To-day the Senate passed a bill, instructing Senators, and requesting Representatives in Congress, in substance, to oppose the annexation of any territory without first forever prohibiting the introduction and existence of slavery in it. These two subjects have occupied the time of the Legislature several days, at an expense of some $600 per diem, and have been opposed and defended on party considerations. A very long session is anticipated, and a few seem anxious to attend to business and let party interests alone. This being the last long session that we are to have, there will doubtless be an effort, on the part of some, to make it as long as possible, on account of the $3 per diem it places in their pockets. Gov. Young has exercised the pardoning power vested in him, toward the Anti-Rent Convicts. They have, with the exception of four, been restored to the rights of citizenship. These, viz., Dr. Boughton (alias Big Thunder,) Moses Earl, Edward O'Conor, and John Van Steenberg, have not this right restored to them, on account of the magnitude of the offences for which they were committed. This, however, may be conferred when it shall be ascertained that they have proved themselves worthy of it.

We now say to those having petitions for the protection of Seventh-day Baptists, send them on without delay, POST PAID, to some Senator from the district in which you live, with the request that he present them to the Senate. A bill will be prepared by Hon. Ira Harris, and handed to the Standing Committee to which the petitions are referred. Several Senators say they think the petitions will be granted. Let there be no delay about the petitions. J. BAILEY.

JOHNSON'S SUNDAY-MAIL REPORT.

This important document will be found on our first page. It deserves, and will be sure to receive, a careful perusal. The broad principle which it maintains, that Congress has no authority to legislate in favor of the first day of the week, will find a response in the bosom of every true friend of equal rights and religious freedom. This principle, we rejoice to know, has been carried out to a good degree in every department of the General Government. The Constitutions of the several States are framed professedly after the model furnished by the Constitution of the United States. Yet in nearly every State of the Union laws have been passed to favor the first day of the week, which necessarily restrict the freedom of those who observe the seventh day. Now the question naturally arises, if the General Government has no right to pass such laws, what right have the State Governments, acting under similar Constitutions, to pass them? In some of the States this question has never been raised, because there have been no inhabitants observing the seventh day. But the time has come when people are beginning to feel, that it is dangerous to acknowledge the principle of legislating upon religious questions, even where there is no difference of sentiment. If this principle is acknowledged in one case, who can tell in how many others it will be applied? Only encourage it, and religious controversies will open a wide field for the exercise of legislative authority. Nor will there be wanting applicants for the exercise of such authority. Bigots are always active, and will avail themselves of the first apportunity to secure the legal sanction of their favorite notions. The only safe course, in such circumstances, is to shut down the gate at once, by denying the right of Government to dictate in matters of religion. The Congress of the United States has done this. We believe the day is not far distant when the State Governments will see the necessity of following the example.

REVIVAL IN GENESEE.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Thinking that it may interest your readers to hear what the Lord is doing, I send you a notice of a revival of religion in the 3d Seventh-day Baptist Church in West Genesee, N. Y. The Quarterly Meeting of the Friendship, Wirt, and Genesee Churches, took place with this Church on the second Sabbath in December. At the commencement of the meeting, the Lord gave evidence of his presence by the outpouring of his Spirit. Brethren Thomas E. Babcock and James L. Scott administered the word of life to the people on the Sabbath and first day. After Bro. Scott left, Bro. Babcock preached in the evening, and the Lord attended the word, to the awakening of backsliders, and the conviction of poor sinners. Such was the interest manifested, that the meeting continued fourteen evenings. Brother Babcock and myself labored from house to house during the day, and attended meetings in the evening. As a result of the meetings, the Church has been generally awakened, many backsliders in heart have been reclaimed, about twenty have been hopefully converted to God, and many more are under awakenings. Other denominations have shared in the blessed work. I have baptized twelve since the meeting commenced, and hope that others will soon follow. May this new year witness a revival of religion in all the Churches of every Christian denomination.

H. P. GREENE.

LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE TRIUMPHANT.

The editor of the 'Occident and American Jewish Advocate,' says:—"We some time since stated that the local Court of the City of Cincinnati had decided that the ordinance enforcing a compulsory resting on the Sunday was inoperative as regards the Jews. We now learn from the public papers that the Supreme Court in the State in banc, sitting at the capital, Columbus, have also decided in the same way, declaring "the ordinance of the Cincinnati council prohibiting trading, bartering, and selling on Sunday, void, as to those who conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week, as the Sabbath." We do not doubt that a similar decision would be given in Pennsylvania and Virginia, if a case of the kind should be carried up to the highest tribunal, not to mention the Supreme Court of the United States; for if any thing is certain in legislation, it is the emphatic prohibition, by the fundamental law of the land, to enact any regulation with respect to religion. Hence we have always regarded any such enactments as gross violations of the constitution of the country; religion being the business of every individual, and no affair of the commonwealth, with which legislators have to busy themselves. Moral regulations alone belong to the State; and in enforcing them lies the conservative power of the judiciary department;—conscientious matters are however between man and his God. Persuasion here is the instrument, not fine and imprisonment; the church or synagogue should work here, not the court-house or the jail. But it is difficult to convince some zealots; they, however, injure their cause more than they benefit themselves in the first instance."

Millions for a Curse to Man, but nothing for a Blessing.—The Government of the United States can afford millions of dollars to carry on a most disgraceful war upon a feeble, half-civilized neighbor, which in any event must be an enduring curse to both nations; but it cannot afford any thing to sustain one of the greatest blessings to the nation which its political rulers have ever devised—a cheap and expeditious mail for the people's letters and newspapers. Therefore it asks a change in the rates of postage, which will make the people pay up, dollar for dollar, to the full amount of the accommodations, and no trust. Perhaps the people of the nation think that the revenues are better expended in wholesale butchery, than in sustaining cheap mail facilities—in trying to curse their neighbor, than in blessing themselves. We had formed a better opinion of them, however, and trust that we were not entirely mistaken.

A Veteran Missionary.—The Christian Mirror informs us that the first missionary sent from Massachusetts to the State of Maine, was Father Sewall, now upwards of 90 years of age; and though now thus advanced, he is still traversing the new settlements, and preaching the gospel with the vigor of youth. He says, "I have just closed my mission of twelve weeks. I have visited Starks, Freeman, Phillips, and seven other towns. During the time of my short mission, I preached 90 times, made 158 family visits, attended 6 conference meetings, visited a few common schools, opened a few Sabbath schools with prayer and short addresses. People generally attended all the meetings well, and appeared to be attentive to the word. But alas! I fear that none have been turned from darkness to light, and the power of satan to God. It is a matter of deep humiliation that my labors in this respect should be so unproductive of good."

Protestant Missions.—The N. Y. Evangelist learns from the reports of the various missionary institutions, for 1846, that the whole number of ordained missionaries, so far as reported, is eleven hundred and forty-seven; of whom sixty-three are laboring among the Indian tribes, one hundred and eighty-six in Africa, thirty-eight in Western Asia, three hundred and forty in India and Ceylon, thirty-two in Burmah and Siam, thirty-three in China, one hundred and seventeen in the Pacific Islands, three hundred and five in the West Indies, and forty-three among the Jews. They are aided by twenty-one hundred and forty native assistants, and have under their care one hundred and eighty-four thousand, two hundred and sixty-eight communicants.

Altering Books.—It is stated that the London Tract Society, which has heretofore taken great liberties with authors in their reprints, has come to the conclusion either to refuse books which have a sectarian aspect, or to publish them entire, with explanatory notes appended to passages of this kind. This is an important decision—important as a matter of justice to the character of the dead, and important as a measure to save the best theological works in our language from a process that divests them of their distinguishing spirit and energy, and converts them into milk-and-water productions which the most sickly stomachs can bear. So says the Christian Observer, to which we respond, Amen.

Death of Mrs. Devan.—The New York Recorder says that at the moment of going to press we have intelligence of the arrival of Rev. William Dean at Hong Kong in 105 days from New York—all well. His letter brings likewise the distressing intelligence of the death of Mrs. Devan, after an illness which had continued for some time. We have no farther particulars. Dr. Devan had gone to Hong Kong. He was greatly sustained by the consolations of religion. Mrs. D. was a daughter of Mr. David Hale of the Journal of Commerce.

Converted Catholics.—The Boston Recorder says that two vessels have lately arrived at Trinidad, bringing about five hundred passengers from Maderia. They are all "Kalleyites," or followers of Dr. Kalley, a physician, who has succeded in converting large numbers of Maderians to the Protestant faith, and who has lately taken refuge in Trinidad. Report says that there are about three thousand more of these sectarians who have received notice to quit Madeira. They are decidedly superior in education and appearance to the majority of Madeirans.

Letters for our Missionaries.—Packages of letters, newspapers, &c., will be forwarded to our missionary brethren, Carpenter and Wardner, by nearly every vessel which sails from New York for Canton. Persons wishing to communicate with them, should address their letters, pre-paid, to the care of Geo. B. Utter, New York.

Parley's Magazine and Robert Merry's Museum.—We have received the January and February numbers of this standard periodical for youth. It is edited by S. G. Goodrich, author of Peter Parley's Tales, whose world-wide reputation is a sufficient recommendation of the work. Published by G. W. & S. O. Post, at No. 5 Beekman-st., Clinton Hall, N. Y.

The Farmer and Mechanic commences the new year in a quarto form, and considerably improved in appearance. Published by W. H. Starr, 135 Nassau-st.

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The SENATE passed the Treasury Note Bill, after a great deal of talk. A resolution to withdraw the troops from Mexico was laid on the table. Mr. Upham presented a resolution from the Legislature of Vermont against the Mexican War and the acquisition of Slave Territory. A memorial was presented from citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for aid in the formation of a colony in Oregon, and offering to serve in the war against Mexico without pay. The Bill to raise ten regiments of volunteers was discussed, and an amendment adopted giving each soldier the option to receive a certificate on six per cent. stock for four hundred dollars, instead of 160 acres of land.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, the bill to increase the pay of, and grant bounties to, regulars and volunteers in the army, was finally passed. A joint resolution was passed directing the President to procure gold and silver medals for the officers and men of the French, Spanish, and English vessels of war, who aided in rescuing the seamen of the brig Somers.

FROM THE ARMY.—A telegraphic dispatch from Washington to the N. Y. Tribune, dated Jan. 31, says:—

The brig Georgiana, from Tampico 14th inst. arrived at New Orleans 22d inst. Col. Kinney arrived at Tampico on the 12th, direct from Victoria, with dispatches from Gen. Taylor to Gen. Shields, to suspend operations for the present. He entered Victoria with Gen. Quitman on the 9th. Gen. Quitman drove the Mexicans before him the last thirty or forty miles before entering Victoria. The Mexicans were very reluctant to give up the place, but went out one side as Quitman entered the other. Gen. Quitman having no cavalry, could not pursue them. Col. Kinney parted with Gen. Taylor at Montemorales and pushed on with Gen. Quitman to Victoria, and thence alone to Tampico.

There was no reason to suppose that Gen. Fuller and Gen. Worth had moved from Saltillo, though it was so reported. The Mexican army, it is believed, was not far off. The Mexican soldiers seen in the neighborhood of Saltillo are now supposed to have been advanced parties of some fifteen hundred or two thousand men kept in possession on this side of the desert between Saltillo and San Luis, to destroy the water tanks in case the American army should move in force in the direction of San Luis, which precludes the idea of any serious attack being contemplated upon Gen. Worth or Gen. Wool, the object of the Mexicans being only to keep watch upon the American forces, to retreat before any advance—and cut off supplies of water.

INDIAN MASSACRE.—We briefly announced that an Indian fight had taken place near Council Bluff, in which sixty Omahas were killed by a party of Sioux. The St. Louis Republican has a letter containing the following particulars:

It was a cold-blooded butchery of women and children, in the absence of all the warriors of the village. On the night of the 12th and 13th, the letter states, a war party of Yancton Sioux Indians defeated and destroyed fourteen lodges of the Omaha tribe of Indians, located at the time at Wood's Bluffs, situated about sixty miles from this place—Belleview. The men and warriors of the Omahas had left the camp on a hunt; and the Sioux, soon after they reached the camp, discovered that they only had women and children to contend with. The slaughter was terrible; seventy-three were killed, and nineteen mortally wounded. Two men made their escape; one of them named Jos. Lafleche, a trader in the employ of Mr. Peter A. Sarpy, and at the time in charge of a stock of goods. He ran from the scene of blood bare-footed, and arrived at Belleview with both feet frozen. Mr. Sarpy and Maj. Miller, the present agent, dispatched a party of men to ascertain the facts, and they confirmed, on their return, the report of Lafleche. They also reported that five of the Sioux Indians had been killed, no doubt stabbed by the Omaha squaws. Going twenty miles farther than the ground of the massacre, they found the place where the goods of the trader had been divided among the robbers.

EXTRAORDINARY CASE.—We learn that one of the workmen on the Central Railroad, between here and Montpelier, was killed last week in the following distressing manner. A rock that they were blasting not going off readily, one of the hands went to the rock, supposing the match had gone out; but while on the rock the charge went off, producing a seam sufficiently large to take in his legs and a part of his body. The seam then partly closed up, confining him closely. After using every means in their power to extricate him, with no hope of success, a consultation of physicians was called, and at his earnest solicitation a blood vessel was opened, by which an end was put to his sufferings.

[Burlington, Vt., Liberty Gaz.

The above statement is of so extraordinary a character that we felt some hesitation in crediting it; yet the source from which it comes seems to authorized full belief. It strikes us, however, that the decision and action of the physicians consulted in this case were most remarkable and reprehensible. On the same principle of reasoning, any person whose life is given over by consulting physicians, may be bled to death, or otherwise hastened into eternity. [Boston Trav.

ALARMING OCCURRENCES.—The Coburg, (Canada) Star has a letter from Grafton Steam Mills, Grafton Harbor, Jan. 9, which states that a most singular phenomenon occurred at that place on the afternoon of the 8th, about 3 o'clock. The lake was calm and the wind in the north, when suddenly the lake receded from the shore in one immense wave, upward of 350 feet, leaving the beach perfectly dry for that distance; it seemed to gather itself into a vast one, and immediately returned in one unbroken wave, four feet higher than it usually is, burying the wharf completely, and overflowing the usual boundaries upward of a hundred yards, sweeping everything before it, accompanied by a dreadful noise. This happened eight or nine different times, gradually decreasing in violence, until the lake resumed its usual appearance.

The Coburg Star farther states, that their readers will remember that in 1845 they chronicled an occurrence similar to the above, as having taken place in their own harbor. The same convulsion that affected the lake at Grafton Harbor on Friday, ran along the coast from that place to Port Hope. It was, however, unattended with the heavy thundering sound heard at Grafton.

PARDON OF THE ANTI-RENTERS.—The Anti-Renters in the State Prison have all been pardoned. Their names are as follows: Daniel W. Squires, Zerah Preston, John Phœnix, Calvin Madison, Isaac S. Burhans, John Burch, W. Reside, Daniel Northrop, John Latham, W. Brisbane, W. Jocelin, C. T. McComber, John B. Coons, Thomas Morgan. The foregoing were all confined in the Clinton Prison, and are not only pardoned, but restored to the rights of citizenship.

The following named persons have been pardoned, but not restored to citizenship: Smith A. Boughton, Edward O'Conner, John Van-Steenburgh, Moses Earle. O'Conner and Van-Steenburgh have been in the Sing Sing, and Boughton and Earle in the Clinton Prison.

SUMMARY.

A postmaster in the interior of Pennsylvania recently had judgment given against him for the price of a subscription of several years to a distant newspaper, on the plea that he had not given sufficient legal notice to the publisher to stop it, and had continued to receive the numbers for several years and sell them for the postage. The magistrate decided that merely returning a copy of "John Smith's" papers with "stop this" written on it, without postmark, or other indication of locality, was not sufficient or legal notice, but a written notice, with name, place, date, and reason, must be sent the publisher, and "franked," that it may be taken out by him.

Almost every one has heard of an individual by the name of Calvin Edson, who, several years since, was exhibited around the country as a living skeleton, and who was regarded at the time as an object of great curiosity by every one who saw him. What is very singular, since his death, which happened some 12 years since, a brother (Dr. Alexander) has, from no apparent disease, become even more of a skeleton than he was. The present one (the doctor) is in the enjoyment of perfect health, is of the ordinary stature of men, 5 1-2 feet, and yet weighs but 49 lbs; is cheerful and sociable, and will entertain you for hours with his lively and agreeable conversation.

The Twenty-third Annual Report of the New York Bible Society auxiliary to the American Bible Society, with the Constitution, &c., has been published. The distribution of the past year has been greater than that of any previous year, and amounts to 9,451 Bibles, and 9,782 Testaments, making a total of 19,233 volumes. It is now twenty-three years since the Society was organized. During the first twenty-two years it distributed 62,274 Bibles, and 121,263 Testaments, making 183,537 volumes; adding to this the distribution of the present year, 202,770 volumes have been put into circulation by this Society.

In the Legislature of Massachusetts, the following resolution has been ordered to a third reading:—"That the people of Massachusetts, actuated by high regard for the honor of our country and the best interests of the whole people, do, upon a calm review of all the causes put forth in justification of the war now existing between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, believe it to be wrong; and that the true glory of both nations demands that it be brought to a speedy and honorable termination, without farther effusion of blood and loss of human life."

The Legislature of Pennsylvania has adopted a resolution, "that our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to vote against any measure whatever, by which territory will accrue to the Union, unless as a part of the fundamental law, upon which any compact or treaty for this purpose is based, slavery or involuntary servitude, except for crimes, shall be forever prohibited."

The New York Tribune says that Monroe Edwards died on Friday morning last, in the Prison Hospital at Sing Sing, of consumption, after an illness of only about three weeks. Thus has ended the career of a man endowed by nature with talents that might have fitted him for eminent usefulness, but which were prostituted to the injury of his fellow men and the destruction of his own peace and happiness. No relations or friends, save his companions in punishment, were present to mitigate the suffering of his last hours, and he will sleep in the prison burial ground with no memorial of his name or fate. Is not the way of the transgressor hard?

The Trenton Daily News has a description of a machine invented by Francis Karl Coffin, a convict for house-robbing in the New Jersey State Prison. The purpose of the machine is to take the Yeas and Nays in legislative bodies. Members vote by pulling a nob connected with the machine, of which two are attached to the desks, one for Yeas, one for Nays. The Clerk then turns a small crank, and certain figures appear to him by which each man's vote is reported, all in the space of a single minute, with perfect accuracy. There is said to be no possibility of its getting out of order in a million times working.

The Supreme Court of the United States is occupied with an important admiralty case, growing out of an action brought to recover the value of $20,000 in specie, which was on board the steamer Lexington on the night of her fatal passage between New York and Stonington. Mr. Webster is one of the counsel in the case. The owners of the Lexington claim that as the accident was an unusual one, and not arising from any fault in the boat, they are not liable. They say farther that if any parties are responsible it is not the owners of the Lexington, but Messrs. Harnden & Co., under whom the contract was made for the shipment of the money. The Merchants' Bank, Boston, are the plaintiffs in the case.

A letter from Constantinople, of the 17th of December, has the following: News has been received from Persia that the cholera was still raging and sweeping off thousands. At Oroomiah the mortality was upward of 200 a day on the poor population of 10,000. I have just seen a doctor assuring me that, according to his statistics, the deaths had greatly exceeded the worst year of the plague; he calculates that more than 100,000 have been destroyed. I do not think the statement exaggerated in the least.

According to the official reports, about 800 men have been killed and wounded in the three battles fought in Mexico. The Ledger says:—"The loss by sickness cannot be so accurately ascertained; reports, evidently greatly exaggerated, say from 1400 to 4000. These reports have been authenticated by no official statement, and there is strong reason to believe that the whole number of deaths by sickness does not exceed five hundred."

The Rochester printers have determined to erect a suitable monument over the remains of Benjamin Franklin, which are deposited in the Arch street (Phila.) burying ground under a plain slab. The ground belongs to the Friends or Quakers, and they may object to the erection of any ostentatious monument.

Emigration from Germany is setting into Texas very largely. It is estimated that during the last three years not less than 1,000,000 dollars in specie have been introduced into Texas by German emigrants. Upwards of 1200, nearly all from Bremen, arrived at Galveston during the week ending December 29.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel Nott, of Franklin, Ct., has completed the ninety-third year of his life, and on the 13th of March next it will be seventy-five years since he was ordained and installed over the church in Franklin. His health had been so good up to his ninety-first year, that he had been detained from church only two Sundays during his ministry. He performs the duties of his office without an assistant.

We stated last week, that the factory burnt in Westerly, R. I., was insured. It now seems that the loss is estimated at about $25,000. Insurance about $15,000. The cotton factory contained about 50 looms for the manufacture of printing cloths, and the woolen factory contained 22 looms for the manufacture of linsey plaids.

Some time ago Mr. Woodbridge, agent for Day, Newell & Day, patent safe manufacturers, placed in the Exchange a safe, with a recently invented lock, and in the safe enclosed $500 as a reward for any person who should pick the lock. Mr. Hobbs, locksmith of this city, was shut up one night in the building, and at a little before 7 o'clock the next morning left the place $500 richer than when he entered.

Mr. Everett, the United States Commissioner to China, arrived on the 6th of October. On or about the 20th, he proceeded from Macao in the United States sloop of war Vincennes to Canton, where he had an interview with the Governor General of the Province. He was afterward invited by the Governor General, Keying, to a dinner party, which was conducted in the Chinese and Tartar style.

The Earl of Elgin, who has been appointed Governor General of Canada, and who came out in the Hibernia, has been received with appropriate honors in Boston. He visited the State House on Monday, and each of the branches of Legislature during their sessions, and also other objects of interest in the city, accompanied by his Honor the Mayor.

The Hibernia, it now appears, brought a much larger amount of specie than was looked for. She has on her manifest £526,000, or in round numbers $2,600,000, and is believed to have on board nearer £600,000, or $3,000,000. The steamer would have taken more, but that no more could be insured at Lloyd's.

A Theological Seminary is to be erected in the vicinity of Cincinnati, by the Catholics, and Messrs. J. & J. Selvin, merchants of Cincinnati, have authorized Bishop Purcell to draw on them for any sum from five to ten thousand dollars towards erecting the necessary edifices.

A Mr. Paulding, in attempting to correct a refractory slave in New Orleans, seriously hurt his hand. In the course of a year he paid one physician's bill for attendance of $500, another of $600, a third of $1,000, a fourth of $300, and is now carrying on a suit against another doctor who claims $1,600 for attendance and medicine for that unfortunate hand. The doctors' bills alone would have purchased a dozen slaves.

An immense iceberg recently found its way into the harbor of Eastport, Me., and dashed in pieces some vessels lying at the wharves. It was supposed to have been blown from the Arctic sea by the strong wintry gales.

A large amount of property from the dead of the Atlantic has been discovered in New London, having been stolen by a man on Fisher's Island, at the time of the wreck. Amongst it is the gold watch of the late Dr. Armstrong. It was stopped at 33 minutes past four, and is so injured that it will not move again.

Monroe Edwards, the great forger, who was committed to the State Prison at Sing Sing several years ago, and whose name has become familiar to all who know any thing of the history of crime in our country, is now in a rapid consumption aed can hardly live more than a few weeks at best.

The Housatonic Railroad averages about 1,000 passengers a week. On Saturday night, the 9th, fifty cars full of freight came down, and on Monday morning another train of fifty. The road is doing about double the amount of business this year that it has any season previous.

A bill for taking the sense of the people of the State of Kentucky upon the calling of a Convention to amend the State Constitution, has passed both branches of the General Assembly. The people will vote upon the subject at the regular election next August.

In the New York Legislature, Mr. Walsh presented several petitions, from Westchester, and from this city, for an exemption of the homestead from liability for debt, and that landholders may be limited as to the quantity of real estate they can hold.

The gold mines of Russia produced 165 poods and 31 pounds during the first six months of 1846. The aggregate is about 5,950 English pounds of gold, worth about $370,000.

The steamer Charles Carrol, recently cleared from Cincinnati with 4,475 bbls. pork, 1,273 bbls. lard, 150 half bbls. and 4,017 kegs of lard, 713 bbls. flour, 155 bbls. beef, 400 bbls. and 31 hhds. hams, 449 bbls. whiskey, besides beeswax, ginseng, corn, oats, hemp, rope, tobacco, 100 kegs of pigs' feet, butter, ale, &c.

The city of Key West is fast recovering from the effects of the late hurricane. New houses have been built in the place of those blown down; and those that were unroofed, and otherwise injured, have been repaired, and the inhabitants are returning to their houses from their temporary residence, the United States Barrack.

By a late enumeration of the inhabitants of Buffalo, it appears that the entire population now is 30,000. Of these 17,944 are adults; 7,558 are over 5 and under 16 years of age, and 5,398 are under 5. Of the entire population 531 are colored people.

A female from Poughkeepsie has claimed an old gentleman of Hagerstown, Md., for her father. She asserts she was his daughter by a former wife, whom he had married some forty years ago, deserted, and is now living under a fictitious name. She is crazy.

Isaac Clemen was on Monday bound in $3,000 to appear for trial, having presented a pistol to the breast of Amelia Livingston, and threatened to shoot her if she refused to marry him.

The misery existing in Flanders is immense. Not fewer than 13,000 persons emigrated last year for America from the province, and in the ensuing year the number will be still greater.

The packet ship Garrick went ashore on Squam Beach in the night of Jan. 26, in thick weather. She has since been brought up to this city.

The "oldest inhabitant" is said to be a woman now living in Moscow, in Russia, who is 168 years of age. At the age of 122 she married her fifth husband.

Caleb Cushing has been chosen Colonel of the Massachusetts regiment of volunteers, and Isaac H. Wright, Lt. Colonel.

The Union Theological Seminary, according to its catalogue just published, has forty students in the senior class, thirty-two in the middle, and forty-three in the junior, with six resident licentiates.

In Truxton, N. Y., on the 29th Dec., by Rev. James Bailey, Mr. THOMAS L. MAXSON to Miss SARAH REED, both of DeRuyter.

Also on the 18th ult., by the same, Mr. REUBEN KINNEY to Miss ELIZABETH PATRICE, both of DeRuyter.

And on the 23d ult., in DeRuyter, by the same, Mr. DWIGHT CRUMB to Miss LYDIA JANE CRANDALL, daughter of William Crandall, Esq., all of DeRuyter.

In Adams, on the 21st ult., by Rev. G. M. Langworthy, Mr. RUSSEL C. LANGWORTHY, of Alfred, Allegany Co., to Miss LOIS M. MAXSON, of the former place.

In Adams, at the house of Mr. Joseph Green, on the 13th ult., by Rev. G. M. Langworthy, Mr. OLIVER W. GREEN to Miss SARAH L. COON.

At the same time and place, by the same, Mr. JOHN G. NICHOLS, to Miss CORNELIA S. GREEN, all of Adams.

At Adams Centre, on the 12th ult., by Esq. Dewey, Mr. BARTON WHITFORD and Miss SARAH ANN BAKER, all of that town.

DIED,

In DeRuyter, N. Y., Dec. 29th, of a disease of the heart, SYLVESTER CRUMB, aged 68 years. He has been many years a member of our denomination. He has left the church in Otselic to join the church in heaven. Those who have been acquainted with him, have no doubt that by his sole dependence on the grace of Christ, manifested by his correct life and Christian benevolence, he has been freely admitted to join the glorified ones above, and receive the end of his faith, the salvation of his soul.

NOTICE.—The third volume of the Recorder is more than half completed, and yet many of our accounts for the volume remain unpaid. According to our published terms, all such accounts might now be made out at $2 50 instead of $2 00. We desire, however. to conduct our business in the most lenient manner possible, particularly towards those who really find it difficult to pay in advance. For this reason we have determined to extend the time of receiving $2 in payment for the volume, to the first day of April. Those who forward their money before that day, will be credited for the present year as if paid in advance. But all accounts remaining unsettled at that time will be made out at $2 50. We hope that every subscriber who is in arrears will avail himself of this opportunity to settle up without the additional expense attendant upon delay. Money may be sent by mail, at our risk, provided the Postmaster is informed of the contents of the letter, and a description of the bills is retained.

SENDING BILLS AND RECEIPTS.—The Postmaster General has decided that "publishers of newspapers may send to subscribers their bills for subscriptions DUE, free of postage." We shall avail ourselves of this privilege to forward bills to all who are indebted to us after the first day of April next. Again, the Postmaster General has also decided, that publishers of newspapers may NOT transmit their RECEIPTS free of postage, but that receipts sent in newspapers subject the papers containing them to letter postage by weight and distance. For this reason we shall not hereafter send receipts in our papers, as heretofore, but shall indicate in our acknowledgments the number of the paper to which the money pays. This will obviate all necessity for receipts, and prove, we trust, as satisfactory to subscribers as our old arrangement.

ALMERIN P. STILLMAN has removed to Onondaga, Ingham Co., Mich., and wishes his correspondents to address him accordingly.

DR. CHARLES H. STILLMAN takes this mode of giving notice to those who have made inquiries, that he is prepared to receive under his care a limited number of patients affected with diseases of the Eyes, particularly those requiring surgical operations, at his residence, Plainfield, N. J.

NOTICE.

The next Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will be attended in New York, February 8th, at 7 o'clock P. M., at the house of T. B. Stillman. W. B. GILLETT, Sec.

NOTICE TO CARRIAGE-MAKERS.

THE subscriber, wishing to be relieved from the charge of the carriage business, is desirous of either letting his shops, or procuring some one to take charge of them, on advantageous conditions. As he has become proprietor of a new and valuable improvement in carriage springs and hangings, his shop will be capable of competing with any in this section of the country. Any person wishing to obtain the situation may address the subscriber at DeRuyter, N. Y.

JOHN MAXSON.

BEALES' DAGUERRIAN GALLERIES.

MR. A. J. BEALES invites the attention of the public to his Premium One Dollar Daguerrian Galleries, at Nos. 156 and 175 Broadway, New-York. Having adopted the latest improvements, he has reducrd his prices one-half, and guarantees to take pictures equal to any in the city, in any position or dress, and with any desirable shade or color. Gold lockets of all descriptions constantly on hand. Attendance from eight in the morning until sunset.

DAGUERRIAN GALLERY.

GURNEY'S PREMIUM DAGUERRIAN GALLERY, 189 Broadway, opposite John-st., and two doors blow the Franklin House, New York. Being furnished with apparatus of the greatest possible power for reflecting light and shade, and possessing other advantages in no ordinary degree in locality, materials used, and scientific application of all the means necessary to the security of perfect likenesses, presents attractions to amateurs and patrons of the art rarely offered. In again presenting his invitation to Ladies and Gentlemen to visit his gallery, Mr. G. assures them of his confidence from past success of giving entire satisfaction.

As in every art and science, years of study and practice are necessary to success, so especially is it indispensable in an art that has progressed so rapidly as Daguerreotype. Mr. G. being one of its pioneers in this country, his claims upon the confidence of the community cannot be questioned. Particular attention is requested to the life-like appearance of his colored likenesses.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

Miscellaneous.

THE WANDERING JEW.

The Wandering Jew once said to me,
I passed through a city in the cool of the year;
A man in the garden plucked fruit from a tree.
I asked, "How long has the city been here?"
And he answered me, and he plucked away—
"It has always stood where it stands to-day,
And here it will stand for ever and aye."
Five hundred years rolled by, and then
I traveled the selfsame road again.

No trace of a city there I found;
A shepherd sat blowing his pipe alone,
His flock went quietly nibbling round.
I asked, "How long has the city been gone?"
And he answered me, and he piped away—
"The new ones bloom and the old decay,
This is my pasture ground for aye."
Five hundred years rolled by, and then
I traveled the selfsame road again.

And I came to a sea, and the waves did roar,
And a fisherman threw his net out clear,
And, when heavy laden, he dragged it ashore.
I asked, "How long has the sea been here?"
And he laughed, and he said, and he laughed away—
"As long as yon billows have tossed their spray
They've fished and they've fished in this selfsame bay."
Five hundred years rolled by, and then
I traveled the selfsame road again.

And I came to a forest, vast and free,
And a woodman stood in the thicket near—
His axe he laid at the foot of a tree.
I asked, "How long have the woods been here?"
And he answered, "These woods are a covert for aye;
My ancestors dwelt here alway,
And the trees have been here since creation's day."
Five hundred years rolled by, and then
I traveled the selfsame road again.

And I found there a city, and far and near
Resounded the hum of toil and glee,
And I asked, "How long has the city been here,
And where is the pipe, and the wood, and the sea?"
And they answered me, as they went their way—
"Things always have stood as they stand to-day,
And so they will stand for ever and aye."
I'll wait five hundred years, and then
I'll travel the selfsame road again. [C. T. Brooks.

PREMATURE OLD AGE IN FEMALES.

The Reverend Hubbard Winslow, in the "Journal of Health," makes the following truthful remarks in relation to the exercise of the mental powers in this country—remarks, which, if attentively read, will, we hope, stir up our young females to a greater degree of intellectual activity, and to those admirable exercises which are the results of liberal culture, and consequently of a more health-imparting and life-sustaining influence:—

"Nor does the premature old age, of which we are speaking, come of too much study. We do not begin to study in this country as they do in Germany, nor as many do in England or France. It is a common thing among the educated ladies of Germany, to find those who can read and speak three or four different languages, and extensively versed in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy.

"It is clearly proved that the high cultivation of the intellect is favorable to protracted youthfulness and long life. Highly educated men and women, on an average, live longer and enjoy more even and pure health, than those of little or no mental culture. The mind is life—the very essence of life, and where there is most of mind, other things equal, there is most of that which imparts life and vigor to the body. It is believed that thousands, in this country annually die some twenty years sooner than they would, had they bestowed a higher cultivation upon their intellect. We must be more intellectual and less sensual—more of that which dies not, and less of that which dies—if we would invigorate and prolong whatever of us is mortal. It is said to be better to wear out than to rust out. The truth is, after all, very few in this country can claim the honor of wearing out, intellectually. But hundreds are daily dying through mental rust. Why does the man of business languish and die so soon on retiring to enjoy in idleness his gains? Just before the life-giving power, the mind, ceases to act, rust, stagnation, disease, gloomy spirits and death, must inevitably come.

The perpetual tug and excitement of business, as it is done in this country, frequently overtaxes and breaks down the mind; not so much by the intellectual labor, as by the excitement attending it. Now the study of the languages, sciences, &c., and the putting forth of the mental energies in the form of written thoughts for the world, affords just that kind of mental effort which is most favorable to long and vigorous life. Accordingly literary and scientific men are, as a class, long lived. If our families would give up their dissipations, renounce their novels and their indolence, put away both their inglorious excitements together—and rise higher in the scale of intellectual, thinking, spiritual being, they might secure to themselves and to their children a far more healthy, youthful, prolonged earthly existence, than most of them now enjoy."

THE LION TAMER.

Van Amburgh was recently one of the greatest lion tamers in London. The account he gives of his intercourse with wild animals is very interesting. Van Amburgh has a novel and practical theory to account for his power over them. From the first moment of his intercourse with them, he talked to them as he would to a human being. "They believe," says he, "that I have power to tear every one of them in pieces if they do not act as I say. I tell them so, and have frequently enforced it with a heavy crowbar." The personal strength, the peculiar cast of his eye, the rapidity of his movements, the tone of his voice, all tend to present to these animals an idea of superior power, which in sudden bursts of his passion, makes them crouch in the corner of the cage. Van Amburgh's eyes are peculiar; one of them has a remarkable cast, which rather heightens the impression of his expressive face, as is said of the "terrible eye of Caliph Vatheck." On one occasion, in New York, the tiger became ferocious. Van Amburgh took his crowbar and gave him a tremendous blow over the head. He said to him, in good English, as if he were a human creature, "You big scoundrel, if you show me any more of your pranks, I'll knock your brains out," accompanying it with loud menaces and strong gesticulation. After this the tiger behaved like a gentleman for a couple of months. In going over to England, Van Amburgh was separated from these animals for several weeks. They arrived in London, he in Liverpool. As soon as he reached London he went to see them. On his appearance outside the cage, one of the strangest scenes presented that ever was beheld. The lions, tigers and all recognized him at once. When he entered among the group, they crouched, they lashed their tails, with every demonstration of delight at beholding him again. He scratched the neck of the big lion, and his majesty growled his pleasure in tones like the sound of distant thunder. In ancient and modern history we have heard of attempts made to tame single animals; but till the present era we have never seen such a mighty exhibition of human over animal power as Mr. Van Amburgh presents. The lion and the lamb literally lie down together.

FARMERS IN GERMANY.

The Rev. Mr. Kurtz, editor of the Lutheran Observer, who is now traveling in Europe, gives his readers, in a letter from Hamburg, the following sketch of rural life in Germany:—

"The farmers do not live scattered about, each upon his own farm, as in our country, but in small villages; and hence the whole region round about is sprinkled with clumps of humble dwellings, thrown together apparently promiscuously, with thatched roofs, mostly overgrown with moss. The material is a strong wooden frame, the interstices of which are filled up with bricks; and generally the house, barn and stable, constitute one large building, under one common roof, so that horses, cows, poultry, pigs and peasantry, all dwell together, in much closer proximity than would be thought comfortable with us. And yet the domestic relations, even of the peasantry, are not so uncomfortable and unclean as one might suppose from these statements, as much more attention is bestowed upon cattle, &c., than in our country, and there are other mitigating habits. But after all, a New England village, or an English cottage, presents a very different spectacle from the same objects in Germany; the latter have at best but a sombre and rather repulsive aspect. In the larger country towns, built on the public thoroughfares, the houses are much larger and vastly more comfortable than in the villages; composed, however, of the same material, and mostly fronting the street with the gable end, but covered with tiles. The inns in these towns are in some respects better than the same class would be in our country. We however seldom become acquainted with the landlord, and scarcely get a sight at the landlady—all the wants of the traveler being attended to by the servants, of whom there is a great number, and who depend upon their 'Trinkgeld,' or the voluntary contributions of travelers, for their compensation. This is an exceedingly annoying arrangement, as the amount of the doceur is arbitrary, and depends upon a stranger's ability, and his own peculiar views of liberality or justice."

THE VENETIAN WOMEN AND THEIR HAIR.

Mrs. Jamieson, in her late agreeable work called Memoirs and Essays, speaking of the Venetian women, says:—

"With regard to the Venetian women, every one must remember in the Venetian pictures not only the peculiar luxuriance, but the peculiar color of the hair, of every golden tint, from a rich full shade of auburn to a soft yellow flaxen hue, or rather not flaxen, but like raw silk, such as we have seen the peasants in Lombardy carrying over their arms or on their heads, in great, shining, twisted heaps. I have sometimes heard it asked with wonder, whether those pale gold masses of hair, the true 'bondina' tint, could have been always natural? On the contrary, it was often artificial; the color, not the hair. In the days of the elder Palma and Giorgione, yellow hair was the fashion, and the paler the tint the more admired. The women had a method of discharging the natural color by first washing their tresses in some chemical preparation, and then exposing them to the sun. I have seen a curious old Venetian print, perhaps satirical, representing this process. A lady is seated on the roof, or balcony of her house, wearing a sort of broad brimmed hat without a crown; the long hair is drawn over these wide brims, and spread out in the sunshine, while the face is completely shaded. How they contrived to escape a brain fever, or a coup de soliel, is a wonder, and truly of all the multifarious freaks of fashion and vanity, I knew none more strange than this, unless it be the contrivance of the women of Antigua to obtain a new natural complexion."

USE OF A NOSE.

A good story is told of Mozart, at the time he was a pupil of Haydn. The latter challenged his pupil to compose a piece of music which he could not play at sight. Mozart accepted the banter, and a supper and champagne were to be the forfeit. Every thing being arranged between the two composers, Mozart took his pen and a sheet of paper, and in five minutes dashed off a piece of music, and much to the surprise of Haydn handed it to him, saying:

"There is a piece of music, sir, which you cannot play, and I can—you are to give it the first trial."

Haydn smiled contemptuously at the visionary presumption of his pupil, and placing the notes before him, struck the keys of the instrument. Surprised at its simplicity, he dashed away until he reached the middle of the piece, when, stopping all at once, he exclaimed:

"How's this, Mozart? How's this? Here my hands are stretched out to both ends of the piano, and yet there's a middle key to be touched? Nobody can play such music—not even the composer himself."

Mozart smiled at the half excited indignation and perplexity of the great master, and taking the seat he had quitted struck the instrument with an air of self-assurance that Haydn began to think himself duped. Running along through the simple passages, he came to that part which his teacher had pronounced impossible to be played. Mozart, as anybody is aware, was favored, or at least endowed, with an extremely long nose—a prodigious nose, which in modern dialect "stuck out about a feet." Reaching the difficult passage, he stretched both hands to the extreme ends of the piano, and leaning forward bobbed his nose against the midle key which "nobody could play!"

Haydn burst into an immoderate fit of laughter; and after acknowledging the "corn," declared that nature had endowed Mozart with a capacity for music with which he had never been endowed!

Cold Water for Stock.—Farmers, are you aware that very cold water in the winter, as well as summer, is injurious to your stock? If not, we can assure you that it is the fact. It often causes disease, especially of the bowels; and under no circumstances will cattle drink so much of it as is absolutely necessary for their thrift.

Water, if possible, should be obtained from a spring, and be drunk as it bubbles out, at a moderate temperature, or be pumped up fresh from a well, or be taken from holes cut through the ice of a deep stream or clear pond. The water of a swift running stream, where more or less of its surface is exposed to the frosty atmosphere, is usually quite too cool for healthy drink. That also taken from standing troughs or shallow pools, with the ice broken up in it, is equally injurious. It is better to have the water brought from a spring, into the yard or stable, and when wanted, turn it into a trough easily accessible to the stock. When they have drunk sufficiently, stop the running of the water, and draw the troughs dry, then no ice is made to chill the water excessively, to the injury of the animals drinking it. [Am. A Crooked Subject.—A Matamoros correspondent of an Indiana paper, in giving a description of the Rio Grande river, says:—

Imagine four of the crookedest things in the world, then imagine four more twice as crooked, and then fancy to yourself a large river three times as crooked as all these put together, and you have a faint idea of the crooked disposition of this crooked river. There is no drift in it, from the fact that it is so crooked that timber can't find its way far enough down to lodge two sticks together—but few snakes, because it is not straight enough to swim in, and the fish are all in the whirlpools in the bends, because they can't find their way out. Birds frequently attempt to fly across the river, and light on the same side they start from, being deceived by the different crooks! Indeed, you may be deceived when you think you see across it, and some of the b'hoys say it is so twisting there isn't but one side to it.

◆

A Word to Boys.—The 'Learned Blacksmith' says: "Boys, did you ever think that this great world, with all its wealth and woe, with all its mines and mountains, oceans, seas, and rivers, with all its shipping, its steamboats, railroads, and magnetic telegraphs; with all its millions of darkly groping men, and all the sciences and progress of ages, will soon be given over to the hands of the boys of the present age? boys like you, assembled in school rooms, or playing without them, on both sides of the Atlantic? Believe it, and look abroad upon your inheritance, and get ready to enter upon its possession. The Kings, Presidents, Governors, Statesmen, Philosophers, Ministers, Teachers, Men, of the future, are all Boys, whose feet, like yours, cannot reach the floor, when seated upon the benches upon which they are learning to master the monosyllables of their respective languages."

◆

The Cow.—Of all beasts of the field, we respect the cow the most heartily. She is so meek, mild, and motherly withal, that we are half tempted to doff our beaver when we pass her. The ox is of no use unless he is in the yoke, or beef-tub, and the horse must be continually cramming his maw with the best, or the crows are disputing your title to him. But the cow, generous brute! is always willing to return your kindness with interest; and though she may sometimes raise her heel, it is only a mute, but impressive way of telling you that you are doing wrong; a friend could do no less than warn us of our errors in the most effectual way. The Egyptians worshiped the ox, and the children of Israel a calf, and thousands now-a-days bow to the material of which said calf was made; but if we were to turn pagan ourselves, we would worship the cow.

A Solution.—The following is from a communication in the Southern Standard, written by Beverly Tucker: "Now, the most rational account I ever heard of the mark $ is this: The Straits of Gibraltar, called of old 'the pillars of Hercules,' were also then called the ne plus ultra of the world. Spain pushed her discoveries to this continent, and when she carried home the wealth that rewarded her enterprise, she coined it into dollars, and stamped them with a triumphant allusion to her great achievement. The pillars they bear are the pillars of Hercules, and across them is twined a fillet marked with the beautiful words 'plus ultra.' Farther yet; the two straight lines are supposed to represent these pillars, and the line that waves across them stands for the fillet; and thus the mark $ is but a rude picture of this part of the impression."

Stage Coaches in Olden Time.—In the year 1672, when throughout Great Britain only six stage coaches were constantly going, a pamphlet was written by one John Cresset, of the Charter House, for their suppression, and among the many grave reasons given against their continuance, is the following:—"These stage coaches make gentlemen come to London upon every small occasion, which otherwise they would not do, but upon urgent necessity; nay, the convenience of the passage makes their wives come up, who, rather than come such long journies on horseback, would stay at home. Here, when they have come to town, they must presently be in the mode, get fine clothes, go to the plays and treats, and by these means get such a habit of idleness, and love of pleasure, that they are uneasy ever after. The Medical Times says that men with dark hair and eyes are usually robust and sanguine, have strong passions, are generally furious maniacs, and have marked crises—while those with intensely black hair and eyes are of a nervous temperament, and are more subject to melancholia; those of brown hair have less energetic paroxysms—while light-haired persons, with blue eyes, being of the lymphatic temperament, although subject to mania and monomania, have often pleasing and agreeable reveries, and are seldom furious, but the cases are generally more chronic, and pass into dementia; while red-haired lunatics are very treacherous and dangerous; and are never to be trusted, the same also applies to white-haired maniacs, who are almost always furious and traitorous.

VARIETY.

A paper passed through the post office at Canandaigua, a few days since, having the following inscription:—

Now speed thee like the bounding roe,
And to East Bloomfield Centre go,
In old Ontario's fertile fields,
And where New York her sceptre wields.
Then silently and quickly call
On Mrs. Mary Hannah Hall;
To show her, what I dare not tell,
That we, her Ogden friends, are well;
And thankful for her favors kind,
Which the late Patriot brought to mind.
Should Uncle Sam, with curious eyes,
Attempt to pierce this simple guise,
Just say to him, there's nought within,
Like mark of pencil, pen, or pin,
To make his sordid nerves recoil,
Or prove a guerdon for his toil.
And thanks to his weak legislation,
The envelope's free throughout the nation.

Kohl says that nine of the men of Busum swam out some distance into the sea, one day. As they returned, each feared lest one of his comrades should be drowned, and began to count; but, as each omitted himself, could only make eight of the party. All concluded, therefore, that one must have been drowned. On reaching the shore, and finding that this was not so, they mentioned their perplexity to a foreigner, begging him to teach them how to count rightly. He advised them, after all lying down and sticking their noses into the sand, to rise and count the number of impressions. This they did; and since that time, the men of Busum have known how to count nine.

"Well, my lad, where are you traveling this stormy weather, alone?" asked an inquisitive landlord in the north of Vermont, during the last war, of a small lad, whose father was engaged in smuggling, and had sent him, as young as he was, with an important message in advance of the party. "Going to draw my pension," was the reply. "Pension," echoed the astonished landlord, "what does so small a boy as you draw a pension for?" "Minding my own businesss and letting that of others alone."

The best composition that can be prepared, to relieve carriage wheels and machinery from friction, is composed of hog's lard, wheat flour, and black lead, (plumbago.) The lard is to be melted over a gentle fire, and the other ingredient—equal in weight—may be added, till the composition is brought into a consistency of common paste, without raising the heat near the boiling point. One trial of this paste will satisfy any one of its superior utility.

FOREIGN PERIODICALS.

REPUBLISHED BY
LEONARD SCOTT & Co., NEW YORK.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

THE above Periodicals are re-printed in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals—Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Whig, Tory, and Radical—'Blackwood' and the 'London Quarterly Review' are Tory; the 'Edinburgh Review,' Whig; and the 'Westminster,' Radical.

The prices of the Re-prints are less than one-third of those of the Foreign copies, and while they are equally well got up, they afford all that advantage to the American over the English reader.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.

Elihu Burritt, Editor.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN is published every Saturday, in Worcester, Mass., on fine white paper of double medium size, at $1 50 per annum, in Advance.

It will aim to develope the Christian citizen into the full stature of a perfect man. Avoiding all controverted tenets of religious belief, it will seek to extract from the spirit of the Gospel a PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY which shall pervade the heart and inspire all the actions of life. Sympathising with all the enterprises of Christian benevolence, it will speak for Peace, Temperance, Righteousness, Faith in God, and Faith in Humanity. It will speak against all War in the spirit of Peace. It will speak for the Slave, as for a brother bound. It will speak for the Universal Brotherhood of mankind. The Gospel it shall preach from, will be the Gospel of the Millennium. It will have a weekly message of good-will to every member of the social and family circle to which it may be admitted. For the younger portion of its readers it will have a department called the 'School Room,' in which the Editor will endeavor to interest them in the character of a fire-side teacher, assisting them to review their studies and to apply them to purposes of practical life It will present weekly a transcript of General News, both Domestic and Foreign.

The Citizen already enjoys a pretty extensive FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, which the Editor is endeavoring to increase in value and variety. To enhance the interest of this department of the paper, he is now on his way to England, with the view to make the TOUR OF THE COUNTRY ON FOOT, and to make the Citizen the record of his daily observations and incidents of travel.

Specimen Numbers of the Citizen will be forwarded for examination, gratuitously, if ordered post-paid.

All business communications should be addressed to ELIHU BURRITT & CO.

SABBATH CONTROVERSY.

The "Sabbath Recorder," an advocate for the religious observance of the seventh day, published an article some weeks since, animadverting, in not the most courteous terms, on a letter of the Rev. E. Kincaid. We laid the paper away, and on the arrival of Mr. K. in this city last week, delivered it to him. He has prepared the following letter in reply:—

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 3, 1846.

To the Editor of the "Chronicle":—

MY DEAR BROTHER,—You handed me, this morning, the Sabbath Recorder, containing an article over the signature of "S. D.," in which are some severe strictures on my reply to a Jesuit, touching the Christian Sabbath. His charges of "effrontery," and "ignorance," and "duplicity," and all such harsh words, will be passed over without further notice. My statement, that "the disciples met together on the first day of the week to engage in acts of Christian worship, and that they designed to meet on the first in preference to any other day, and that it was sanctioned by Paul, is a recorded fact," "and there is no evidence that they met together on any other day for Christian worship," is denied by the writer. He quotes Acts 2: 46, 47—"They continued daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Acts 16: 5—"So were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily." I ask, do those passages prove any thing in reference to a specified day for Christian worship? Does this writer mean to infer, by quoting these passages in which the word "daily" is found, that all days are alike?—that the primitive Christians had no special day for assembling together? If this is not his design, why are the passages quoted? My statement is, that the first day of the week was observed—that the disciples met together on that day in acts of Christian worship, and that they met together on no other (specified) day for Christian worship. No one can understand me as saying there were no acts of worship at any other time, for those who live by faith worship God daily and hourly. The disciples had no other specified day. He then refers to Luke 4: 16, who says Christ "came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and as his custom was, he entered into the synagogue and stood up for to read." This proves that it was the custom of Christ to go into the synagogue and read and teach the people, and it proves nothing else. Then he brings forward Luke 23: 56, saying, that the women "rested the Sabbath day, according to the commandment." This was previous to the resurrection of Christ, and is, therefore, irrelevant. The Acts 12: 13 is quoted; Paul and his company "came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day," Paul read and preached, "And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath." "And the next Sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God." This Scripture proves that Paul and his fellow laborers availed themselves of every opportunity to preach the Gospel to both Jews and Gentiles. Paul went where he found the people. Now in Burmah and Hindostan there is vastly more preaching on the worship days of the heathen than on other days, because then the people are together in masses. Paul and his fellow laborers did not go into a Christian assembly, but into a synagogue. Here is no Christian church convened for worship, and, therefore, it proves nothing in reference to a special day for Christian convocation.

The above are the passages quoted by "S. D." to disprove my statement. I invite "S. D." to reëxamine this subject, not in the light of Mount Sinai, but in the light of the glorious Gospel.—"Farther, Mr. K. says 'that they (the disciples) designed to meet on the first in preference to any other day, and that it was sanctioned by Paul, is a recorded fact.' Will Mr. K. tell us where this fact, or rather these two affirmations of his are recorded? Until he does this, we shall believe his assertion to be a grosser pretence than any of which he has accused the Jesuit. Where is it recorded, Mr. K., that the first Christians designed to meet on the first in preference to any other day? Where is it recorded that such a preference was sanctioned by Paul?" With a great deal of pleasure I will tell you—Acts 20: 5 to 7—"These going before, tarried for us at Troas. And we sailed away from Phillippi after the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five days, where we abode seven days. And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight." Here is the recorded fact of a Christian church coming together by design on the first day in preference to any other day. "The disciples came together to break bread." This is no synagogue service, but Christian worship. Here is a specified day, on which the deciples came together, and there is no evidence that they met together for Christian worship on any other specified day. I will mention another recorded fact, 1 Corinthians 16: 1, 2, "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there may be no gatherings when I come." The first day is specified as the day when the disciples are together. "As I have given orders to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you," &c. Here is an apostolic evidence of the religious observance of the first day. For if the seventh day was the day on which the churches regularly assembled for Christian worship, why should the Apostle direct them to "lay by," on the first day, six days before the time of meeting? There is no recorded fact of a Christian church meeting, as a church, in acts of Chtistian worship, on any other specified day. There are other passages of Scripture I might bring forward, touching this question, but it is unnecessary. When I brought forward these recorded facts, the French Jesuit had the candor to acknowledge that I read correctly, and that I had the example of the first Christians.

Yours ever, &c.,
E. KINCAID.

To the Editor of the Christian Chronicle:—

CHRISTIAN BROTHER,—As you have published Bro. Kincaid's reply to my strictures, under the head "Sabbath Controversy," I presume you will be courteous enough to publish this letter addressed to him, and oblige,

Yours in Christ,
SAMUEL DAVISON.

SHILOH, N. J., 24th day of 12th mo., 1846.

To the Rev. Eugenio Kincaid:—

CHRISTIAN BROTHER,—Last month I wrote "some severe strctures on your reply to a French Jesuit, touching the Christian Sabbath." Your reply to those strictures I did not see until last night, 23d inst. Permit me to address a few lines directly to you on the same topic. I am glad you kindly passed over such harsh words as are foreign to the merits of a decision of a question of Bible doctrine. I will do the same; only premising this one thing, I plead the same Apostle's sanction for using sharpness, which you plead for observing first day. Titus 1: 13.

Your invitation to reëxamine the subject, I accept with a great deal of pleasure. Further, I am willing to be instructed by any Christian brother; and although I venerate the light of Mount Sinai, I glory more in the light of the glorious Gospel; and yield a willing obedience to its instructions respecting the Sabbath observed by Christ, his apostles, and the primitive churches. My strictures were upon three specific statements which you made to a French Jesuit, and afterwards published for the benefit of the world, of which I am a fractional part. They are as follows: 1st. That the disciples met together on the first day of the week for Christian worship, and that they designed to meet on the first day in preference to any other day. 2d. That there is no evidence that they met on any other (specified) day for Christian worship. 3d. That this preference for the first day was sanctioned by Paul, and that these are recorded facts. You have reäffirmed them in your reply. These then are the points which you courteously invite me to reëxamine. Cheerfully will I do so, my brother.

On the first affirmation we have no difference as a mere fact; it is recorded that they met together daily, and that they daily engaged in acts of Christian worship; of course on the first day; and this fact admitted, I think shows that as it respects many acts of Christian worship, they engaged in them on all days alike, just as Baptists do at this day. It was to specify and point out this fact, that I quoted Acts 2: 46, 47, and 16: 5. This looks to me to be the very reverse of your first postulate, viz: "That they designed to meet on that day in preference to any other day." If these acts of Christian worship were performed on all days alike, how do they show any preference for first day? I further quoted the custom of Christ, Luke 4: 16; and the practice of the holy women, Luke 23: 56; on a certain specified day of the week other than the first day. You say, "this was previous to the resurrection of Christ, and is, therefore, irrelevant." Here you appear to assume one of two postulates, neither of which you state specifically, viz: 1st. That these instances of Sabbath worship were not acts of Christian worship; or, 2d. That the specifications of the fourth commandment ceased to be obligatory at the resurrection of Christ. The first of these clashes with a well-known principle of all the strict communion Baptists I have ever known; and the second with the answer you gave to the French Jesuit, as follows: "No, that command is as binding on me as it was on the primitive Christians; 'six days shalt thou labor; but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God.'" It is not for me to answer either until I learn which you take; you will therefore do me a favor by noticing these points.

Your second postulate is, "That there is no evidence that they met together on any other (specified) day for Christian worship." To disprove this, I quoted the practice of the apostles daily in the temple and in dwelling-houses meeting to break bread and praise God; and the fact that the churches were daily edified by the apostles' labors, and received daily additions of converts to the Christian faith, and that the apostles preached the Gospel to Jewish congregations, and also to large congregations of Gentiles, "on the Sabbath day," specified so. I may add, that they baptized Lydia and her household on the specified Sabbath day; as they did others also on other days, as in Samaria, both men and women; and as Philip did the Eunuch, in the desert on the way to Gaza. Praising God, publicly reading the Scriptures, preaching the Gospel of Christ, baptizing Christian believers, adding converts to the church of Christ, receiving the decrees of the Holy Ghost and of the apostles to edification, I look upon as engaging in acts of Christian worship; and it appears to me that the sacred writer so regarded them by his calling them "Acts of the Apostles."

Whatever they may do in Burmah or Hindostan, there is a growing number of us in America, who think it is good to obey the apostle's exhortation, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." It is in this way that we hold the fourth commandment as universally obligatory, not because the apostles met to engage in acts of Christian worship on the seventh day, but because Jehovah sanctified it, and because Jesus Christ urged upon his people the observance of God's never-failing, unadulterated law. See Luke 16: 17.

Your third postulate is, "That this preference for first day was sanctioned by Paul, and these are recorded facts." The Bible facts are these, viz: Luke records eleven instances, in his Gospel and Acts of the Apostles, when such acts of Christian worship as those mentioned above, were performed by Christ and his apostles on that day specified as the Sabbath; nine instances when they were done in every day alike; and but one instance specifically on the first day of the week, viz, Acts 20: 5—7. As you adduce this in your reply as proof that the disciples met for Christian worship on the first day in preference to any other day of the week, and 1 Corinthians 16: 2, as proof that Paul sanctioned it, we will reëxamine these Scriptures. Observe, first, in all the old editions of the English Bible, the word day is in italics, in both places, showing that the translators did not find it in the original, but that they put it into the English version, to make it teach what they thought it should teach. If you can point out any copies of the Greek Testament in which the word day occurs, in either of these passages, you will confer a favor on the Sabbatarians. Without it these passages read, "On the first of the week." An important difference. The meeting at Troas was a night meeting; Paul continued his speech until midnight; at midnight Eutychus fell from the third loft, and was taken up for dead; Paul went down and restored him, returned to the upper room, and broke bread, ate with his friends, talked until break of day, and then went on foot to Assos, and took ship and sailed for Jerusalem. While these things were progressing, Luke and others, mentioned in verse 4, took ship and sailed round the point from Troas to Assos, where they waited for Paul as he had appointed them. Thus they observed this specified first day of the week, properly, doubtless. When the Sabbath was over, they had a parting meeting with their friends; Paul was anxious to impart some further spiritual good by preaching to them; to further cement them in Christian love by breaking bread together; sent his attendants with the ship round the point to gain time; partook of refreshment with his friends, and then commenced an important journey on the first of the week. "Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." A good way surely to observe all days.

In 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2, there is no mention of any assembly whatever! The Apostle exhorted Corinthian and Galatian believers to begin the week with alms-deeds, each laying by himself something for the poor saints at Jerusalem, that they might have something ready when he should come among them. This he did, as he says, 2 Cor. 9: 4, "Lest haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we, (not to say ye,) should be ashamed." To collect these alms, the Apostle sent Titus and another brother, a year or more afterwards, that he might be neither hindred nor disappointed, when he should pass that way to Jerusalem. See 1 Cor 16: 5, 6, and 2 Cor. 9: 5.

So far is this passage from recording as fact that Paul sanctioned any preference for first day as a day for Christian worship, it shows only this, "Paul recommended what is the very thing wanted with most men, the being charitable upon a plan; that is, upon a deliberate comparison of our fortunes with the reasonable expenses and expectations of our families, to compute what we can spare, and to lay by so much for charitable purposes."—Paley. There is one question you did not reply to, viz: "Why did the first Christians prefer the first day to any other day for Christian worship?"

Christian Brother, you and I stand before the world as the professed advocates of Bible religion, unperverted by the great apostacy; how important our position! May the Lord give us understanding therein. Yours in Christ,

S. D.

NOT INTENDING TO SEEK RELIGION.

The Rev. Dr. Payson, in the progress of a revival in his congregation, after having repeatedly invited meetings at his house, of those who wished to seek religion, one day gave an invitation to all those young persons who did NOT intend to seek religion. Any one who did not know Dr. Payson, would be surprised to hear that thirty or forty came. He had a very pleasant social interview with them, saying nothing about religion, until just as they were about to leave, he closed with a very few plain remarks, in the following manner:—

"Suppose you should see coming down from heaven a fine thread, so fine as to be almost invisible, and it should come and attach itself to you. You knew, we will suppose, that it came from God. Should you dare put out your hand and brush it away?"

He dwelt a few minutes upon this idea, until every one had a clear and fixed conception of it, and of the hardihood which any one would manifest, who should openly break even such a tie.

"Now," continued he, "just such a slender, delicate thread, has come from God to you this afternoon. You do not feel, you say, any interest in religion; but, by coming here this afternoon, God has fastened one little tender thread upon you all. It is very weak and frail, and you can in a moment brush it away. But you certainly will not do so. Welcome it, and it will enlarge and strengthen itself, until it becomes a golden chain to bind you forever to God."

THE BLIND GIRL.

Darkness where'er I go!
Nor earth, nor sky, nor blessed light for me—
But a deep, yearning wo
For the bright things I never more may see,
But which, like lovely phantoms, still remain,
Haunting the veiled chambers of my brain.

And, when kind words are spoken
Like holy breathings from a world unseen,
My heart is well-nigh broken,
To think that I can only darkly dream,
What form may wear the sweet-toned instrument
Where love hath all his gentlest music blent!

Yet memory still is mine,
And what lost treasure it gives back again;
My girlhood's happy time—
The forms and faces so familiar then;
And, shining like a star through my dark night,
Is one who was as dear to me as sight.

It is before me now,
Wearing the looks I loved so to behold;
The same calm, thoughtful brow,
And loving smile that ne'er for me was cold;
'Tis mid my desert a fresh lovely spot,
And one which blindness withers not.

But O, to feel how vain
The hopes which came around us like sweet flowers!
It almost sears my brain,
To think through life such will no more be ours;
Yet is it but the wreck of earth's frail bark!
Father of light! let not my soul be dark!

A VISIT TO THE NEW TRACT HOUSE.

Twenty-two years ago, the corner of Nassau and Spruce streets, New York, was occupied by an old dilapidated wooden building, used as a tavern of the lowest class. The neighborhood was poorly built and poorly tenanted. It was too far "up town" to be regarded at the time as a fit location for business of importance.

The far-sighted projectors of the American Tract Society apprehended the importance of securing permanent accommodations for the transaction of its business, and selected the lots on which Connelly's tavern stood, as a convenient site for such a purpose. One member of the Committee gave $5,000, another $3,000, another $1,500, and other gentlemen in the city contributed sums amounting in the aggregate to about $25,000, for the purchase of the necessary lots, and in part for the erection of the building. It was thus that a source of pollution and death was changed into a fountain of light and salvation.

The improvements in printing presses and other machinery, and the results of experiment in kindred societies, led the Committee to make arrangements for doing the Society's own printing and binding. But the old building was found to be not sufficiently strong to bear the jarring of steam presses and other necessary machinery, nor was there room sufficient to transact the business to the best advantage. Such an improvement of the lots owned by the Society was found to be feasible, as they would afford accommodations for its present and prospective business, and at the same time so enhance the value of the parts of the building rented to others, as to cover the interest on the amount required to rebuild the edifice, and ultimately liquidate the principal. The visitor can readily see the wisdom of the movement, and will only wonder that it was not sooner made. We know of no establishment in the benevolent world which can be visited with greater satisfaction.

The exterior of the building, extending about 80 feet on Nassau street, and 70 feet on Spruce street, five stories high, exclusive of basement and sub-cellar, is imposing, by its simplicity and strength. The first story, the front of which is of granite, is occupied with four stores, one of which affords ample accommodations for the Society's retail business. The store is 70 feet deep, receiving light from the rear, and has apartments adjoining, for the Treasurer, and the office of the American Messenger.
